THE LATE EARL OF CAVAN.

THE dearly-loved subject of this brief memoir was born in 1815, his days being more than threescore years and ten; and, married in 1838, he was on the verge of completing a happy half-century, during which he tenderly cherished the one who now, in her loneliness, is the centre of the affectionate sympathy of all God's children who have had the privilege of knowing her.

The manner in which the Lord drew him into his fold, singular in its lovingkindness, enhanced the happiness of his married life. No strange hand may venture to lift the veil, but the memory is treasured in one heart's holiest recesses. But, in life's prime, chosen as a signal vessel of the unspeakable grace of God, as with Moses, the person, the cause, and the reproach of Christ became his joy and his glory.

On making Weston-super-Mare his home in 1860, he built the residence which visitors see, with its dark background of woods, as the train on its approach to the town winds round the base of the hill on whose slopes it stands. In this, as in all greater and in lesser things, he sought to benefit the souls of those around him. The workmen, whilst the building was in progress, were daily the subject of his thought and care. Efforts were made to attract them to the Saviour; and holy recollections gather round the erection of the house.

Well he loved that happy home, and with ever fresh satisfaction he returned there. His birds and other simple interests gave him relaxation, until, as he laid hold on eternal life with a constantly deepening gratitude and trust, he ran with endurance a more absorbing course, which placed all lesser interests gradually in the background.

"The Lodge," round which hosts of precious memories cluster, was lent to Lord Radstock in the early autumn of 1866, with the desire that the breath of the Spirit of Life might pass over the place. The Lord granted this desire by a remarkable ingathering into the kingdom of God, which is known perhaps to the ends of the world.

Earl Cavan's personal share of the blessing was like that of Asher and Naphtali and Joseph together: his spirit sent deeper its roots into Jesus Christ his Lord, whom he had already received. He grew bolder: personal outspoken effort, personal winning of souls, became to him as a native element in grace, and he laid out his life in service so delightful to him.

From the year 1864, during a continued summer residence in the north of Scotland, for the benefit of the health of his family, his experience of the Holy Spirit's anointing power was greatly deepened; and it was graciously given him to perceive how powerfully that Spirit enables those "that do know their God" to be the mediums of bringing multitudes to the knowledge of Christ. In Edinburgh also, in 1874, he was among those who first greeted Messrs. Moody and Sankey in that city

One short portion of Scripture had much to do with awakening this boldness: "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully" (Jer. xxiii. 28). No command was more tenaciously remembered; none more constantly pleaded in prayer; none obeyed with more joyous alacrity.

Quiet in manner, with little action, and no attempt to seem a striking preacher, with his Bible in one hand and his eyeglass in the other, confidence in the Lord gave power to what he spoke. "I am," he would say, "only a plain man, but I speak what I know." He might begin without giving the impression of much power; but after a little, with his heart yearning over those he addressed, his tender manner became full of energy, his tones earnest, and his words very solemn. The true end of preaching was reached; his hearers felt it was for life and death, a message from God.

He was an evangelist from the heart, and spoke just what burdened sinners needed. He took an active interest in mission enterprise, and frequently presided at the meetings held in the town. Both he and Countess Cavan took special interest in the inhabitants of Milton, and were accustomed to visit them and were unostentatiously charitable to the needy. Many years ago, at his own expense, he erected a mission-room, there being at that time very little provision for the spiritual wants of the people of Milton. He often conducted the services, and they were generally well attended. For many years past the Friday morning prayer-meetings held in the Assembly Rooms were conducted by him, and he was also a very diligent worker in connection with the services held in the Gospel-hall, as well as in mission services in different parts of the county.

His genuine humility did not, in his earlier years, allow him to count himself qualified to instruct believers deeply. Yet one, at least, never forgot the messages of the Spirit from his lips. "To every man his work" comes up before the memory as one of these.

For many years the invitations of the Trustees to the Conference at Mildmay bore his name, and he took a warm interest in the work of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. He had a great love for that poor country, but had no connection with it, except by his title, until in the middle of life, unexpectedly, a small and entangled estate fell to him, and which he subsequently changed for a property in the Island of Achill, where he strove to ameliorate the condition of the people. He tried to get roads made, and to promote fisheries. By his efforts a beautiful little pier was built, and he endeavoured to establish a steamer service, which should help the people to a ready market for their fish. For several years he and Lady Cavan spent some time there amongst them.

His illness a year ago caused great anxiety to his friends; but in answer to the urgent prayer offered on his behalf, God graciously restored him to partial health. After the imminent danger was over for a time, with a movement of his hand in the direction of the cemetery, he said:—"I never once thought of all that down there; the Lord kept me in such perfect peace. I was the happiest man in Weston!" The dark shadow of death for him passed for ever. His feeling was one rather of disappointment at returning from so nearly entering "within the veil." Yet in complete acceptance of his Father's good pleasure, he came back again to order his hours as before.

Of the months of his partial recovery one who was bound to him in singular affection and fellowship, returning from South Russia just too late to see him before his spirit was "carried up into heaven," wrote: "What a fruitful year it has been! What reapings will yet be made manifest from his faithful stewardship!"

The "blessed hope" of the Lord's return, a theme on which he had always loved to dwell, was a very present hope to him during all the time of his protracted illness, his longing for it being only intensified by increasing bodily weakness and pain. While perfect peace was his, undisturbed by the knowledge that death might intervene ere his hopes were fully realised by the bright expectation of a quickly-coming Lord, his thoughts were lifted far above "the valley and the clod," and the true and constant attitude of his heart right down to the last might thus be expressed:—

But, Lord, 'tis for Thee, for thy coming we wait,
  The sky, not the grave, is our goal;
Oh, trump of the angel! oh, voice of the Lord!
  Blessed hope! blessed rest of my soul!

A fitting sequel to the life of one, who so abounded in the hope, is his silver-bordered memorial card, containing simply the following:—

We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed.
CAVAN.

—with the date of his departure to be with Christ.

The Gospel which he had loved so well, he sought, to the close of his life on earth, to commend to others. Perhaps the very last act of service in this way was that rendered but a few days prior to his being finally laid aside, on behalf of the workmen at present engaged laying down new water-pipes for Weston. While they were at work opposite his gates, the Earl, constrained by the love of Christ, and with characteristic thoughtful kindness, had them supplied with coffee and Gospel papers, while as they were gathered in a group he spoke to them earnestly and persuasively of the love of God to them; and it gave force to the words of the dear aged pilgrim when he could add—"Praise the Lord! I am soon going home to be with Him."

One of the men on being told the morning after its occurrence of the good Earl's decease, observed, feelingly, "Ah, the dear old gentleman's gone! He told us he was going home, but we didn't think 'twould be so soon!"

Most truly he has died "in harness," and, resting from his labours, his words will follow him. Many may, now that his voice is hushed, recall his earnest words, sounded out in cottage and in hall, amongst the thousands of excursionists and visitors on the Weston beach and esplanade of a summer's evening, by the wayside, and in the railway train, where, "instant in season, and out of season," he sought to make known the Gospel of God.

He is now taken from us. But only for a while. The morning without clouds is breaking for him and for us, when we shall see him walking in white, amongst those that are worthy, with his Lord.

May the words to which he gave such emphasis impress themselves on many a heart: "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully."

It was on Friday, December 16, 1887, that Lord Cavan passed away, not on the Sunday, as stated in a recent issue. On the Sunday following his death warm tributes were paid to his memory in several of the places of worship in the town, showing the universal esteem in which he was held by servants of Christ, irrespective of denominational distinctions.

The body of the deceased Earl was interred at Weston Cemetery on Thursday, December 22. A short service was held at The Lodge by Rev. Colin Campbell, vicar of Christ Church, and at the grave Mr. Thomas Newbery gave the address, with an earnest appeal to the unsaved.

A PROMISE REDEEMED.—Mr. John Hibbert, corn, flour, and provision merchant, Cardiff, has just done a very praiseworthy act. In 1876 he failed, and his creditors accepted a composition of ten shillings in the pound; he promised that if his life were spared and business prospered he would pay them all in full. This promise he has nobly redeemed, each of his old creditors receiving a cheque for the balance due. The gifts represent a sum of £10,000.

TO THE NEW YEAR.

Thou standest on our threshold once again,
Thy fair young form unmarred by care or pain;
Thy brow as yet unwrinkled, and thy smile
From many a dark foreboding would beguile.
We greet thee now, Young Year, with outstretched hand,
And welcome thy short sojourn in our land.
Thou comest from a faithful God, and He
Will send the good or ill we need by thee;
For fraught thou art with blessings, joys, and woes,
Which we shall prove ere thy career will close.
Whate'er thou bring'st, submissively we'll trace
Our Father's hand, and trust his promised grace,
For help in time of need, for strength to fight
The fight of faith, till that is lost in sight.
And when thine exit comes, and thou return
To Him who sent thee, happiness to learn
We're one year nearer home where Jesus is,
And we shall reign with Him in endless bliss.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

TESTIMONY IN REGARD TO FUNDAMENTAL TRUTH.

Special Meetings, March 12 to 23, 1888.

The Council of the Evangelical Alliance have, during the past few months, received communications from many honoured Christian ministers and laymen of various denominations throughout the country, urging the importance of some special effort, at the present time, to emphasise the fundamental truths of the Gospel. The Plenary Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, the Personality of the Holy Ghost, and his presence and power in the Church of God, with other verities of the faith of Christ, are qualified or explained away by some prominent teachers; the Substitutionary Sacrifice of our blessed Lord and Saviour is lightly esteemed, and even repudiated in many instances. Under these circumstances, it is strongly felt that there is need for faithful testimony to the cardinal truths of the Gospel by men of God who possess the confidence of the Christian public.

The Council therefore propose to hold a series of special meetings at various centres in and around London, when such witness to God and his truth may be given.

A committee has been formed, consisting of members of the Council of the Alliance, and others, to carry out the arrangements for the proposed meetings, which will be held (D.V.) from March 12 to 23.

The following are the definite subjects already agreed upon as suitable for the addresses:—

I. Scripture: (1) Its Inspiration; (2) its Authority; (3) its Sufficiency.

II. Sin: (1) Its Entrance by the Fall of Adam; (2) its Extent—Universal Depravity; (3) its Consequences—Everlasting Punishment.

III. Salvation: (1) The Lord Jesus Christ, the Only-Begotten Son of God; (2) The Lord Jesus Christ, the Propitiation for Sin; (3) The Lord Jesus Christ, the Righteousness of the Believer.

IV. The Holy Ghost, the Author and Sustainer of Spiritual Life.

The plan proposed for carrying out the meetings is as follows:—

A. That the meetings should extend over two or three days in each place, one or more of the principal fundamental doctrines being dealt with on each day.

B. Upon the specific topic for the day three or four speakers, Church of England and Nonconformist, should be secured for each meeting, in order that the subject may be fully treated, and in a popular style.

Special prayer is earnestly desired that in this whole matter Divine wisdom and guidance may be vouchsafed to everyone who takes part in the movement.

BATH PUBLIC-HOUSE MISSION.—The work of visitation by the missionary, Mr. C. Smith, appears to be full of encouragement. According to the recently issued report, over 2000 visits were made to public-houses, and 11,000 tracts distributed the first nine months of the year. Many were induced to attend public worship, and the missionary records some hopeful conversions. The treasurer of this excellent effort is Miss Skinner, 5, St James's-square, Bath.

THE NEW YEAR.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

THE untrodden, unknown, and unpolluted paths of the year lie before us. No thoughtful person can entertain a doubt that grave and momentous events will agitate, startle, and perplex as the months of the year unfold themselves. That there will be trouble of nations cannot be doubted. Deeper grows the unrest of a world apostate from the ordinances of righteousness. The "fire" brought by the great Deliverer in order to purify, and cleanse, and judge, is burning towards the consummation of man's redemption, and of God's full glory. Christ will not check it, even though men's hearts misgive them, and the faithful are afraid. But this we know:

THE SUPREME WISDOM

reigns in the Church, as the Divine eye recognises the Church which is Jesus Christ's. To it the Holy Spirit, proceeding from the Father and the Son, has permanently given Himself. That word of Jesus, "I will not leave you orphans," comprehends more than the Spirit's abiding presence as the Comforter and Advocate, although these functions are included. The promise points to companionship. It makes the Church's solitariness impossible. Those who "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth" have always One near to them as their Guide, Guardian, Sustainer, and Monitor. Amidst confusions and fears, the Spirit is leading them. They are made to feel that in their witness for God there is more to fight against than formerly. At the same time there are movements whose import they cannot yet read, but which are pointing to a new development of freedom, unity, and consecration. Old names have lost their spell. Clericalism is held to be a tradition rather than a reality, and officialism of itself never carried less weight. Such vain confidences are ceasing as "The temple of the Lord! the temple of the Lord are we!" That which good men prayed for in exile, and at the martyr-stake, is coming continually nearer. A Christianity is appearing which refuses to be confined to any mere party. It is not human organisations that are doing this, but a secret impelling of the Divine Spirit. The household of faith is being invisibly led on to a primitive manifestation of the sons of God, and the sentiment is becoming recognised among all the Lord's servants that that is the only test of Christian communion which hath its foundation in the Word of God.

Along with this spiritual freedom, must be placed a guiding of the Spirit, whereby many are attaining to of sanctifying grace. Lifted out of the old conventional forms, there are, in the two hemispheres, millions of Christian disciples, who, seeking no human praise, astonish those brought into contact with them by their saintliness and self-denial. The attitude of daily self-surrender to Christ was never bringing a richer blessedness. We speak of the worldliness of the Church; say rather the worldliness of the "mixed multitude" that have joined themselves to the Church. Never were there so many Christian disciples who are keeping their garments undefiled. As for the workers for Christ in cities, one entitled to be heard on the point has admirably said: "For singleness of purpose, for originality of method, for concentration of energy, for simplicity of faith, for breadth of philanthropy, and intensity of spiritual power," there have rarely been found more eminent servants of Christ.

And with these proofs of the silent leading of the Spirit must be mentioned the movement among Christian ministers with a view to their service for the age. It has not been sufficiently noted how much ministerial conferences were the mark of 1887. Very much of correspondence which has given account of these conferences has passed into my hands. The desire for them has sprung up simultaneously in divers places. One sentiment has pervaded these conferences—the attainment of a truer meetness for the Lord's service in these anxious days; one hope has animated them—that a new Pentecostal blessing from the Lord would be given; one aim has been supreme—that the lamp of salvation might be carried into all dark places of the world. Moreover, less-known meetings for like ends have unostentatiously been held, and in the two Universities young men who fear the Lord have thought upon his name together, and sought to learn how they might serve this tempted and restless generation. These are the signs of the Spirit's presence and monition. While those who arrogate the name of "broad theologians" are professing to find a "credible" Christianity, never were there so many who can say they know whom they have believed, and who are pressing on to preach truths more truly broad in sublimity and effectiveness. Nor should we fail to notice that two grand Protestant commemorations will mark this new year, and that another Pan-Anglican Assembly of Bishops will meet. May God give the spirit of discernment, fidelity, and boldness.

WEARINESS OF SECULARITIES

is the posture of a growing number of earnest Christian persons. An excellent minister of religion said last year that he knew only of two denominations—the Church and the world. Many good men are finding three—the openly worldly, and the secular Church, and the spiritual Church. An experiment has been made of enticing men to the Gospel by keeping back its self-denying demands, and attracting people to places of worship by turning them into places of pastime and entertainment. That experiment has not answered its purposed end. Churchmen have multiplied their Popish spectacles, and Dissenters have used their church premises for evenings without religion. If they are honest to themselves they must confess that religiously the effect has been disappointing. A secular age has been made increasingly secular. Instead of withdrawing from the world, the love of it has grown, and at the same time many have been turned backward whose faces were toward the light. Not that the experiment will cease. But godly ones, with other aims, and other ideas, are coming to the front, and making their voice heard. Let a pastor make an effort to find out those in a given church who mourn over this craze for secularities and novelties, and he will be surprised at the number of communicants who are longing for more Christian methods for the winning of souls, and for a new and living energy from above.

And among the people there is more true Christianity than ministers take account of. Men and women have been converted in meetings which were downright spiritual. They love such meetings. While pretentious persons are bewildering themselves, and losing their religion, with their notions of another than an apostolic theology, there are thousands of the common people who have found a living Christ, and with Him new homes, and a new purity and joy in life. Vast numbers of Christian professors have no idea whatever of the extent of this unsectarian piety in our days, of the brightness that presides over meetings where it is strengthened, and how it exists as a salt of preservation among the people. As to that is professed, it is more a penalty than a creed. There is not in all literature a more distressing passage than where Mr. Darwin tells us that there was a time when feelings of wonder, admiration, and devotion were awakened within him by the grandeur of nature; when he looked on it with a sense of sublimity; but that afterwards the grandest scenes would not cause any such convictions and feelings to arise in his mind, and that he was like a man who had become colour-blind. For myself, when I read these saddening words in the first volume of the Life of the eminent naturalist, I could not help turning to that which an inspired Apostle says of men who "refused," or, as in the margin, "did not approve to have God in their knowledge" (Rom. i., R.V.). Truly all the three volumes of Darwin's Life, which were given as the last year closed, awaken very painful reflections. Here was a mind of unusual strength, a patience of unwearied perseverance, devoting thirty years of life to find a universe without a Beginner, perpetually baffled by insurmountable difficulties, pained by an inability to win to his theory many of the first scientific intellects of his time, and closing a great career with a belief in a Great First Cause becoming, as he confesses, weaker, and yet failing to find any other adequate explanation of the wondrous phenomena, and progressive continuity of Nature.

One of the first literary organs contained last month an able review of the influence on the age of the author of the "Origin of Species," by one who knew him through personal intercourse, and appreciated his high moral qualities. The substance of that paper reflected the judgment of distinguished men in both hemispheres that Darwin had turned away men from the Invisible, had brought over the age a general decay and eclipse of faith, and, in the attempt to build up a system of nature without God, had been a destroyer to many of all that makes life worth living. How terrible has been that eclipse upon vast numbers; how it has withdrawn multitudes from the ordinances of religion, left them with neither consolation nor motive in the battle of life, led to unutterable wrecks of character, and intensified lawlessness among the masses, it is not possible for any pen to portray. Thank God, with the New Year, is setting in. Nations, sooner or later are appalled at the hell that infidelity makes. God will not leave the world without a witness, and He overrules man's purposes for his own glory. Darwinism, which meant to suggest that there was no Creator, is beginning to exert, most unwittingly, the very contrary effect. It has accumulated facts and unveiled sequences which go to disclose nature's secret, and to reveal God the more. In the innate tendency of unfallen beings towards perfectibility; in the movement of plants and flowers to richer developments of loveliness; in the hidden power of adjustment of living creatures to outward conditions, the system, unable to prove what was intended, will enable a coming age to find new disclosures of the ministries of nature, and new revelations of the benevolent and all-wise thought of God.

Witnesses for Christ! it is at a time, above all others, pregnant with great duties, that you are summoned to make clear your calling. Lies fail to meet the cry of mortals in their need of God; science, turned aside from its grand mission, and perverted to dispose of God, has in this intention proved a gigantic failure; sects and ecclesiasticisms have had their day, and no longer, of themselves, win confidence; a scenic religion has had a long reign, but the priestism it once led to is everywhere distrusted; an emasculated Gospel is proved to be powerless either to comfort man in his sorrows, or save him from his sins; and a worldly church is becoming as salt without savour, an offence unto men. Now, then, let our blessed duty to the age and our solemn responsibility be realised. If we see, as do others, the mystery of suffering, and the pressure of temptation, we know Him who was sent from God to bind up the broken-hearted, and preach deliverance to the captives.

Surely it is not for nothing that in these days the Spirit is calling out the faithful. When all human devices, and human plottings against Christ's cause have failed, is there not a Divine summons to courage and unity? When inside the church the banner of anti-spirituality is being blazoned, and outside, the enemies of the faith are coming together, is this a time to withhold our united manifestation, and to nurse our sectarianism? O Saviour of mortals, appear for us. Keep us in sympathy with Thyself. Help us to preserve thy truth unimpaired; to lift it into ascendency, and to make it more intelligible by our unity. Make us to hear the cries of men that thicken around us, and the bewilderment of the people in their apostasies from the truth of God. In mercy give us courage so as to make Thy voice to be heard. Lift us out of our party attachments into a more manifested loyalty to Thee. In the sufficiency of Thy grace make us equal to the tasks and wondrous opportunities of the year that is already beginning to unfold its urgencies and its demands.

"LODGERS" IN ST. GILES.

A new departure has recently been made by the well-known Bloomsbury Chapel Mission, in the shape of a systematic visitation of the different common lodging-houses in the neighbourhood of St. Giles. These refuges, for the poorest of the Metropolitan population contain men who, although they are in their own estimation past hope, can still be reclaimed to a decent state of living. It is with this object that the Lodging-house Mission has been started, under the care of Mr. E. J. P. Francis, and the results of the work are stated to have been most satisfactory. On Boxing night at the Bloomsbury Hall, Soho, between four hundred and five hundred men, drawn from these houses, were entertained at a substantial meat tea.

A social meeting was held after the tea, at which various friends of the movement spoke in a cheerful and encouraging way to their hard-up guests. Forty men signed the pledge, and there were many present who had already done so, including the "deputy" of the largest of the houses, accommodating two hundred and sixty-three lodgers. The greater part of those invited had washed themselves, and put on the best clothing they had at command. The general conduct and attention were excellent.

MR. J. G. RICHARDSON, BESSBROOK.—In our sketch last week of this earnest Christian philanthropist, we omitted to state that some years since he was offered a baronetcy by Mr. Gladstone, then Prime Minister. The offer of this honour was declined, and it was in replying to it that Mr. Richardson took occasion to press on Mr. Gladstone the necessity for temperance reform.

WALKING WITH GOD.

By Rev. ADOLPH SAPHIR, D.D.

Enoch was a man of like passions with ourselves. He did not go into a wilderness to live a monastic life. He had all the distractions, all the duties, all the complications of family life around him. There is no doubt that he committed sins, and that there were many failures and infirmities in his life; but the whole tenor of his life is summed up in these words, "He walked with God." His heart was right with God. And the explanation of this walk with God is given to us by Paul (Heb. xi.). The reason why Enoch walked with God was because he believed.

What did Enoch believe? He believed that God is, and that God is the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. How much did Enoch know of God, of the holiness of God, of the justice of God, of the wonderful grace of God! Enoch knew that God had created the heavens and the earth; that God had made man after his own image; that man by sin and disobedience had fallen, and that through sin death came into the world; but that there was the promise of the Seed of the woman, the great Conqueror, who, by his own painful agony and suffering, would gain the victory over man's enemy, and would bring salvation and glory unto man. Enoch trusted in this, and because he trusted in this he was continually looking forward to the fulfilment of this promise, and was thus separated unto God. There can be no walk with God upon the broad road which leadeth unto destruction. God cannot be found there. We can walk with God only if we are in the narrow path; and we are in the narrow path only if we have entered by the strait gate.

Enoch walked with God. There was no Law at the time. The Ten Commandments had not yet been given. The simple thing was this—to belong to God, to remember the character of God, to rely on the promise which He had given, and to look forward unto the judgment and the glory. This is the very character of faith—that it sees the things that are invisible, and anticipates the things that are to come; and therefore every man who truly believes is by faith separated from the world. No necessity to go into a monastery or into a wilderness; no necessity to adopt a peculiar garment or a peculiar phraseology. Believe, and you do not belong any more to the world, for "this is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith."

But what Enoch had he had, after all, only in germ, and the fulness of the blessing has come upon us. How much clearer and brighter is the light which now in Christ Jesus shines upon us! This God who had promised that He would send the deliverer has come at last in the person of his own Son. The holiness and the grace of God have been manifested unto us in the stupendous sacrifice when Christ died for the ungodly; and it is in the person of One who is both God and man, and whom we call "Immanuel," that it is given unto us to walk with the Most High.

And not merely is it that God now in Jesus is our Father, and that Jesus who is God and man is our Lord and Saviour, but the path itself has become quite a different path to us, although it is the same path. Jesus has walked on it. Although He was Lord He became a servant; although He was above the law He became under the law; although He was rich He became poor; although He was true God He suffered, being tempted. In all things He became like unto us, and passed through all stages and experiences of life, yet without sin; and every one that says he believes in Jesus ought also so to walk as Jesus walked. What is meant by humility? What is meant by gentleness? What is meant by constant prayer? What is meant by self-denial? What is meant by love? We know it now, when we think of Jesus and his walk on earth.

There are difficulties in walking with God. Enoch lived in a world of godlessness and of unbelief. You see from the prophecy which is recorded in the Book of Jude that Enoch's view of the time in which he lived was that it was ungodly. Men were skilful; men were wise; men were diligent; men were active; men knew how to ornament life with art and culture; but men were ungodly: they were independent of God. They did not tremble at God's threatenings. They said, "He will never come. They have always said He would come; He has not come yet." It was an ungodly world, but Enoch walked with God, alone. God is infinite, and all human beings against God are but as the dust on the balance. Yet he must have felt the pressure as we all feel it; he must have felt the difficulty; he must have felt the obloquy, the contempt, that were poured out upon him as a man behind the age, as a man who set himself up to be better than others, as a man who was fanatical. Yet he walked with God.

There are difficulties in the path, too. Sometimes the child of God does not see anything before him but darkness. It is as if he had come to the end. He does not know what step next to take. He does not see the path; he can see only God. "Enoch walked with God." There are difficulties within us. Ah, dear friends, do we say,

> "Oh, for a closer walk with God"?

Let me ask you, Have you walked with God at all? Do you regard lukewarmness as a misfortune or as a sin—as the most dangerous condition in which you can be? Have the words of Jesus never pierced you, "Many are called but few are chosen"? Do you think that there will be any crown without fight of faith and conflict, or reward without labour, or making your calling and your election sure without taking heed and giving diligence to these things? But let us remember the wonderful love of God and of Jesus and of the Holy Ghost, that none of us be tempted by the adversary to think that to walk with God is a hard thing or a cruel thing, or puts upon us too great a strain. Do listen to the loving words of Jesus. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow Me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, and none shall pluck them out of my hands."

MADEIRA.—In a recent issue we had an obituary notice of "Mrs. Smart, of Madeira." The deceased lady was Mrs. George Smart, and not, as some have supposed, Mrs. William Smart, who is still living on the island.

THE FOLLOWING CURIOUS ADVERTISEMENT appears in The Guardian. We fear, says The English Churchman, that it will be useless for any lady readers to apply for the "papers" referred to, unless they can give—which we more than doubt—what the promoters of the new Sisterhood consider "reliable references." The advertisement marks one more step on the onward march to Rome:—"A religious superior will be glad to meet with devout women to join an Order of Reparation. The intentions of the Order are reparation for the offences committed against the B.S. Intercessions for the Holy Souls. The obligations of the rule are simple. The work such as will not hinder the primary intentions of the Order. Papers will be sent on application accompanied with reliable references."

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE great Meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, recently held in the city of Washington, has thrown light upon the perils and prospects of the country. The Conference was largely attended. At least a thousand delegates were in attendance, representing all the Evangelical Churches. There was not the same high pitch of enthusiasm which characterised the International Conference held in New York about fifteen years ago. For even the most optimistic patriot of to-day cannot treat the grave subjects of the time with hopeful speculation. If the dark clouds are soon to melt away, there must be other ground of assurance than the ardour of natural and patriotic ebullitions. The perils and resources of the country were alike treated thoughtfully, and with becoming gravity. The old question of Co-operation in Christian work received considerable attention.

* * * *

That the Alliance did a thorough work is questioned by men of spiritual foresight. The problems discussed were presented with great ability, and most of the questions are of vital importance. Perils of the city, the misuse of wealth, the relation of the Church to capital and labour, personal responsibilities, and social vice, were thoroughly ventilated by prominent theologians, philanthropists, and specialists. Nevertheless, subjects of prior claim were scarcely noticed. Aggressive and Jesuitical Romanism was fully exposed in the New York Alliance meeting of 1873, yet in the fifteen years intervening the Papacy has been making desperate efforts to push its cause through every religious and secular avenue possible. The Washington Conference failed to spring the alarm, and warn the country against the encroachments of this red dragon.

* * * *

Nor did the prevalent errors of universalism in its multitudinous forms, esoteric science with its divisions and sub-divisions, and especially free-thought, which never fails, within or without the Church, to assail the inspiration of the Scriptures, receive the attention which so eminent an orthodox body would be expected to give these gigantic evils. We cannot understand why prominent supporters of orthodoxy should, in so many instances of recent years, not only apparently shield erratic teachers, but even apologise for their unscriptural speculations. We hope the officers of the Alliance have not fallen into this error, as religious editors and theological teachers have sometimes done.

* * * *

We write in no spirit of fault-finding; we are surrounded with Satanic powers, and confronted with serious problems, and heartily sympathise with every movement seeking the elevation of man and the glory of God. Our fears, however, which we frankly express, are not groundless. The Philadelphia Episcopal Recorder similarly remarks:—

> It remains to be seen whether the Conference was a description and treatment of symptoms of national maladies, or a thorough diagnosis and radical cure of the disease of the body politic. We are anxious to see the best results coming from the Conference, but unless the movement which the Alliance contemplates is based upon something more potential than sentiment and human plans of co-operation, no great good will ultimate to men. The evils of the day demand heroic treatment. The evils are positive, and the remedies must be positive.

Anthony Comstock! Announce this name anywhere throughout the land, and you call out the bitterest hate or the profoundest gratitude. We know of no man having more enemies; probably no man has more friends. The enemies have openly declared themselves; the friends, in thousands of instances, are secret. And why? Anthony Comstock is a unique man. Fifteen years ago, a green country lad, he obtained a situation as porter in New York City, where he first discovered traps, pits, gins, and sundry devices destructive and damnable to young men. The revelations of such Satanic ingenuity horrified and terrified him. At once, not poising his actions on their results, but with daring impetuosity, and raging with righteous indignation, he gave himself to God as a protecting shield to young men, and as an avenging sword to their corrupters.

* * * *

During these years he has seized and destroyed nearly fifty tons of plates, stones, and tools, employed in the pestilential and nefarious traffic of mental and physical pollution; arrested, prosecuted, and imprisoned hundreds of proprietors, publishers, and agents; demolished corporations, annihilated lotteries, exposed swindlers, and hunted criminals either into penitentiaries or out of the country. Every villain, blackleg, blasphemer, and unconscionable swindler gnashes his teeth in hot anger at his name; while every parent and friend of youth, whether openly recognising his work or not, must revere it. The Press of the country has hooted him, caricatured him, and conspired against him. No wonder. One chief source of their income, illegal advertising, he has uprooted. The infidels have violently attacked him. A petition of 70,000 signatures, headed by Robert Ingersoll, was laid before Congress for the repeal of the Comstock law, which closed the mails to vendors of impure books and obscene pictures. Comstock prayed, and the infidels were defeated. But he carries an honourable scar on his cheek, where the assassin's knife opened four arteries, almost succeeding in the dastardly attempt to take his life. From our long acquaintance with this brother and his work, we revere him as a man of deep piety, of stedfast faith, of constant prayer, and of earnest purpose.

Rev. Jacob Freshman, pastor of the Hebrew-Christian Church of New York City, has established a branch mission in Chicago. New York numbers 80,000 Jews, Chicago 40,000. Several clergymen have been formed into an Advisory Committee, so that the work in Chicago begins under good auspices. But just think of it! An incubus of a mortgage is allowed to weigh down the first and only Hebrew-Christian Church of America, greatly crippling the efforts of Brother Freshman and his corps of workers. But we are not yet properly instructed on our obligations to the Jews, or perhaps our piety is superficial, else this debt would be quickly wiped out.

* * * *

The members of "Covenanters'" churches do not take part in politics nor vote. There are four of these churches in New York City, besides many others scattered throughout the country. They are strong in faith, and rich in good works. They are a synonym for orthodoxy. They do not fail to announce their reason for abstaining from politics, nor are they disloyal to their creed. "Civil government," say they, "is a divine institution, and God is the Sovereign; the will of God is the basis of a nation's law; the object of a nation is to advance the Church of Christ. Because the Constitution of the United States does not recognise God, because the will of the people is taken as the highest authority, and because the State does not confess its obligation to advance the interests of the Church, the Covenanters do not vote. If we should take part in the affairs of this Government by voting, when we really believe that it is adrift, and that it does not recognise God, we would be untrue to our allegiance to Christ and his Church."

Mr. James Wharton, who has so successfully worked a Bible carriage for so many years in England, has paid his annual visit to the Southern States. Mr. Wharton labours among the freedmen, and by his humble bearing, and consecration to that special work, has won hosts of friends, and opened to his evangelistic labours many doors of service among that people. The work has its attendant dangers and difficulties. Our brother has had large and varied experience, and acquits himself wisely. Already he rejoices in many professed conversions. At another time we hope to write on Negro evangelism. It is a peculiar and exceedingly difficult question to discuss, surrounded with practical complications and traditions.

BUCKS EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

WE have been having much encouragement of late, and the work of the Lord goes on and prospers. There is much distress all round, this winter. Many are out of work. Our colportage work is of the deepest interest. I should be glad if some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN would help us; our work grows in the county, but we get little help.

A good conference here for two days would greatly benefit the cause of Christ in the county. I would gladly take the Corn Exchange and make all arrangements, &c., if we could get some good speakers from London or elsewhere. May would be a good time. It is a great pity that conferences should be so often held in the same places, and other needy parts left out altogether. I should be glad to hear from any friends who can assist me in this matter. A PROSPEROUS CHURCH.

THE Congregational Church at Camberwell-green, of which Dr. Clemance is pastor, is enjoying much comfort and prosperity, in spite of the incessant changes incident to suburban districts. The visit of Rev. R. Balgarnie in October last proved indeed a time of refreshing. Many were then brought to decision for Christ, and have since avowed their discipleship.

In the spring of 1886, a workmen's institute was opened in the very heart of a poor neighbourhood; reading-room, game-room, conversation-room, library, and buffet were provided. This institute is largely appreciated by the men of the district. The cost of its erection, and of the assembly-room, senior class-rooms, infants' room, library, &c., in connection therewith, was about £2,400. Of this sum, over £530 remained due at the beginning of the year. An earnest effort was made to clear off that amount by the one hundred and seventh anniversary meeting, held on December 15, Mr. W. Marten Smith, of Clapham, presiding. Earnest and effective addresses were delivered by Rev. Charles Wilson, of Blackheath, and Rev. H. J. Perkins, of Peckham. At the meeting, it was found that the entire debt had been liquidated, and that there were from 30 to 35 guineas over! Such a result has greatly cheered the church and its pastor, who "thank God, and take courage."

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

V.—THE WILL.

The one question which the Lord Jesus puts to every one of us, is that which He put, beside Bethesda's pool, to the sufferer who wistfully scanned his face for help: "Wilt thou be made whole?" The whole question turns on the attitude of the will. And it is for lack of realising this, that many grope for years in darkness, who might otherwise walk in the light of life.

There are some who lay the chief stress on Right Thinking. They demand that the mind should have a clear apprehension of the entire system of Christian truth. Every i must have its dot, every t must be rigidly crossed. Each doctrine must receive its just place in the homage of the soul; and there must be no uncertainty in the pronunciation of the test-words of the Church. Then, they argue, that the character and experience will necessarily be right and blessed.

But, in practice, it is not so. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of clear and accurate conceptions of truth. For what a man believes, that he is. At the same time, experience and observation prove beyond a doubt, that to think right is not enough to produce the fruits of the Spirit, or the blessedness of the Beatitudes. Many babes and sucklings in knowledge, whose notions of truth, through no fault of their own, are hazy and partial, have entered the kingdom of heaven; the doors of which are closed against the wise and prudent who have no other claim for entrance than that they could pass muster in the strictest theological examination.

Others lay the chief stress on Right Feeling. Their test of rightness is joyousness. When they feel bright and happy, and their heart sings, and the azure blue, unflecked by cloud, canopies their path, they can sit in the heavenlies, and take their place among their peers. But when their glad emotions expend themselves, as summer brooks; and the birds cease their strains; and the sky is overcast; they begin to question even their acceptance.

Surely feeling is too unsatisfactory for any of us to build upon it for peace or power. Choose rather the shifting quicksands as a foundation for your house! We need something more reliable than an experience, which may be disturbed by an east wind, a cloudy day, or a fit of indigestion.

The true basis of religion is in Right-Willing. And the reason for this is clear. We are not what we know. We are not what, in some special moment, we feel. We are what we will. We must bore down beneath the alluvial deposits of emotion, and the formations of the intellect, to the granite of the will; there, and there only, can we find a stable basis on which to build the structure of a blessed or useful life; because the will is the true expression of ourselves.

We admit this in daily life. We judge men, not by their intellectual capacity; not by the sensibilities that quiver beneath the passing breath, as the chords of an Æolian lyre; not by exceptional and special deeds: but by their will, which may be called the resolve and intention of the soul, expressing itself in the decisions and actions of the life.

We do not blame the maniac who seeks to fire a cathedral, we simply confine him; his will was impaired. But we condemn the man who clearly meant to take his brother's life, though the deed itself was frustrated; his will was murder. And what we are with respect to one another, that we are also with respect to the Almighty God. His one complaint against us is not that we are dull and stupid, or that we do not feel more deeply, or that we are not swifter and stronger in our obedience, but that we are not willing. "Ye will not come unto Me, that ye might have life." "If any man will be my disciple." "I would...but ye would not." "If ye be willing...ye shall eat the good of the land."

We need not now touch that mysterious province, hidden from mortal ken, where the human will is influenced by the Divine will. Doubtless, there are avenues by which the will of God reaches us, and touches us, of which we know nothing. And there are numberless methods by which God's will can impress itself on ours without violating the individuality of our willinghood. It is enough to know that He does work in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure. And it is certain that we cannot will aright except He prompt us. More than this we do not know, and cannot say. We cannot but think, however, that no soul of man is born outside the range of the working of that loving will, which is peace on earth and goodwill to men. Alas, that it is so often resisted, even unto death!

Now let us turn to the practical bearing of this great truth, that our primary concern must ever be with our will. And we may sum up all we have to say in this one sentence: Put your will on God's side in everything, and leave to Him the responsibility of fulfilling in you, and through you, "all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power, that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in Him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. i. 11, 12).

On the Threshold of Salvation.—How many there are around us like the impotent man at Bethesda! They are waiting for healing with eager desire. To get it they linger for years in the porches of Mercy's House. They wistfully see the gladness with which many go healed away. They hope that their turn will come at last.

But they are waiting for the wrong thing. For some mysterious troubling of the waters rather than for the Healer. For a ceremony, and not for Christ. For an angel, and not for the Saviour. For the help of men to put them into salvation, or to their own lame efforts to shuffle into the pool of healing. They are always trying to get correcter conceptions of Christianity, or to work themselves up into a condition of earnest feeling. Oh if they could only feel more earnestness, or more adequate sorrow for sin, or more assurance of faith! They wait year after year for some angel to trouble the inner waters of their soul, and send a ripple of saving feeling across them. But the angel comes not. And they wait on till hope almost dies.

To such the Saviour comes. "Wilt thou be made whole?" He does not send the soul to college to study a creed, however Apostolic. He does not wait till it is fired with ardour or steeped in tears. He cuts right through all sorrowful confessions of deficient faith, utter worthlessness, inability to shed pure tears or think right thoughts. All this is with Him secondary. It must be considered, but presently, not first. His one prime concern is the will. What willest thou? Wilt thou be saved? The question of salvation is a moral one; it hinges on the will.

And if the trembling soul can only look up to Him and say: "I would, but I cannot, feel; I would, but I cannot, believe; I would, but I cannot, repent;" then with great joy the Shepherd takes the lost sheep upon his shoulders. He says: "It is enough. I will work in thee all thou lackest. I will enter through the unlatched door of thine heart, laden with gifts. I will cleanse thee from all that grieves Me; and I will produce in thee all those holy things which thou seekest. They are the gifts of God to the recipient spirit through the agency of the Holy Ghost."

The initial step of salvation is in our willingness to be saved. If that is assured, tell Christ so. Look to Him to begin in thee his gracious work. And there is already commenced in thee a transformation, which starts with forgiveness, and ends in perfect conformity to the Son of God, in heaven's dateless glory.

In our Daily Religious Experience.—We give ourselves to God. Beneath the spell of some stirring appeal, or under the impression of written words, burning as the carbon-points of the electric light, we resolve that we will live a more earnest, devoted, and whole-hearted existence. For some few days the momentum carries us on, and we feel happy and satisfied.

But after a while the blessing we have received seems to expend itself. We are troubled by violent temptation. We lose all pleasure in private prayer. We can get nothing from our Bibles. For some deep and subtle reason, all our feelings are suddenly overcast. The heart, which was like a garden in summer, is as a barren moor, on which clouds brood. At such a time, if we are simply dependent on our feelings, we shall be ready to despair. If, like Peter, we regard the winds and waves, we, like him, must begin to sink. And we shall doubt the reality of the experience of God's truth and grace, which had given us a real lift heavenwards.

But if, my reader, you have learnt the side of truth on which we are laying stress, you will have an unbroken confidence, and will feel a handrail ready to your touch, though you cannot see your way through the murky night. At such a time look up to Christ and say, "I do not feel as I did; the joy of song and rapture, all is gone; but I am still Thine; I will to be only, always, all for Thee; I desire, in the very centre and heart of my being, to abide in Thee; I long for nothing so much as that Thou shouldest hasten Thy work of conquest within my soul, till every thought and feeling are brought captive to Thine obedience."

Even if you are conscious of having swerved for a moment from the path of perfect willinghood, by his grace put your will back again on the side of Christ, with tears and confessions, and ask Him to hold it, as a father holds the hand of his little child on a slippery day. Forget your feelings. Entrench yourself in your will. Ask Jesus to purify and sanctify it by his Spirit, so that it may be true to himself. And believe that He is as eager as you are, to still all the rebellion of the soul, and to make you what you wish and will to be in your best and holiest hours. Your attitude towards Christ is determined, not by your feelings, but by your steadfast desire and will.

In Sorrow and Trial.—As sons we must endure the rod of chastening, which is not joyous, but grievous. The way to the kingdom lies through Gethsemane, with its deep shadows, and its tears, and sweat of blood. All that can abide the fire must be made to pass through the fire. And when our hour comes we cannot but suffer. We suffer as the little one is torn from our embrace, not realising that henceforth there will be always a child in our home. We suffer, as we have to leave cherished surroundings, and venture, as the eagle's nestlings, on the untried air. We suffer, as we have to be the means of inflicting pain upon those who love us; at the call of God taking the knife to slay their hopes. We suffer as we see some creeping paralysis slowly cut us off from the avenues of sense and life; shutting us up in a living cell. And let us not begrudge it all, since we learn obedience by the things we suffer; and we learn the art of comforting others as we have been comforted.

Yet sometimes how hard it is to be submissive! And here it is that so many mistake. They try to feel submissive and resigned. But they try in vain. They cannot bring themselves to feel, as they know they ought; and so they write hard things against themselves; and go out into the night in a self-imposed exile.

But it would be comparatively easy if they would only begin with the will. Will God's will. Tell Him that you are willing to be made willing to have his will. Bring Him your will, as a piece of cold iron, and ask Him to renew it, and soften it, and mould it into perfect oneness with his own. Say to Him as Jesus did, "Father, Thy will, not mine, be done." And when thoughts of rebellion or mistrust surge upwards in your soul, do not lose heart; trust God to deal with them. You cannot master them, but God can. Only be sure that your will is as true to Him as the needle is to the pole.

Oh, is not this a sight on which angels love to dwell, when a human soul, amid its keenest agony, still is able to will the will of God; not swerving from it to the right or to the left; sure it must be good and wise, though all appearances are contrary; and daring to cry out from the midst of its agony, whilst all the nature beside is in revolt, "My God, I trust Thee, I choose Thy will."

If thus we yield our will to God, in our blindness, not because we feel it pleasant, but because we dare to believe in Him, we shall find that a wonderful change will steal over us, winning over our emotions and feelings to the self-same side; so that we shall come to accept the will of God with our feelings, as well as to will it with our will.

In regard to Sin.—When temptation besets us, it will sometimes so insinuate itself into our hearts, that we may be at a loss to distinguish the voice of the tempter from that of our own consciousness.

Bunyan tells us, that when the pilgrim was come over against the mouth of the pit, one of the wicked ones got behind him and whisperingly suggested many grievous blasphemies to him, which he verily thought had proceeded from his own mind. This put poor Christian more to it than anything that he had met with before.

We all of us know something of this. Such horrid thoughts! Such vain imaginations! Such vile suggestions! Noisome pestilence, indeed! But it is not ours so long as the will remains steadfast in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. Nor can we be held chargeable of sin so long as the spirit cleaves its way through all, tossing the suggestions aside as a ship the foam-crested waves.

Will to be free. Will to walk with God in stainless robes. Will to refuse the tempting bait. Will to deny flesh and to crucify self. Will, because God is working in you to will. And you will find that if the will is present with you, the power to perform will also be forthcoming to your faith, and Jesus will make haste to achieve your complete deliverance. Lift up your heads and rejoice: your redemption draweth near.

Yes, and this will come to you, that your will shall become more and more one with the will of God; so much so, that God will give you the keys of his kingdom, saying, "Ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." And in proportion as the will of man is brought into unison and harmony with the will of God, there will be growing peace and growing power. When the will of God is done in the heart, even as it is done in heaven, then the joy of heaven enters it to abide. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived, what God hath prepared for them that love Him. But these things are unfolded to the man who has given up his will to God; and who has received it back again, magnetised by His will; and who now lives in the citadel of a sanctified and devoted will. For this is the law of the kingdom of the Son of God: "If any man wills to do His will, he shall know."

Wilt thou be made whole? Christ asks that question of thee, my reader. Is not the Holy Spirit producing in thee a holy willingness? If so, tell thy Saviour so. He wills; wilt thou? If thou dost, then He waits to do all the rest; producing in thee health and life, wholeness and everlasting joy.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN BUDA-PEST.

This veteran evangelist, for whose visit we had been preparing for some time, arrived on December 1, and remained with us till the 17th. During these days he delivered twelve sermons, addresses, and lectures. The sermons were delivered in English without an interpreter; the addresses and lectures were interpreted on some occasions into the German, on others into the Hungarian language. Much interest was awakened in the city. The meetings were largely attended, and it was cheering to find many professors and students among those who came, evening after evening, to hear the word. The hearers were enchained by the speaker's wonderful Bible-pictures, and were deeply moved by his solemn and most winning appeals to the conscience and heart.

The last lecture was specially for the Jews, and was delivered in a new and splendid hall belonging to one of the clubs of the city. The subject, "What Christianity owes to the Jews," had been announced in the newspapers, and by placards at the street corners. There were, we suppose, six hundred persons present, about the half of them being Jews. The lecture was delivered with great animation, was deeply interesting, and created a profound impression. One young Jew who had been attending also on the previous evenings, said to me as he left, "I am almost converted now." I expressed the hope that the "almost" might become the "altogether." An interesting and appreciative account of the lecture, written, I understand, by a Jew, appeared next morning in the Tagblatt. Andrew Moody.

MR. SPURGEON'S SERMONS.—Last week Mr. Spurgeon published his 2000th consecutive weekly sermon. The publication has now gone on without intermission, in spite of his frequent illnesses, for thirty-three years.

MISS LEIGH S WORK IN PARIS.

Sir,—It is just fifteen years since the Home was first opened at 77, Avenue Wagram, impelled by the gift of tenpence from a Scotch girl; soon after, the entire house was purchased. Since that time a total of 4813 young women have been received, most of whom have obtained situations through the free registry; some have emigrated, others have been nursed through long illnesses, and died within its walls, and many have returned to their own home and friends.

This Home is now associated with over eighty British chaplains and consuls throughout Europe, which practically gives an English-speaking girl in the chief Continental cities a friend in any time of need. This work has also another side in the number of young women whom it counsels not to risk the dangers of foreign cities. During three months eighty-four letters were received and answered (the number representing a fair average) from young women in England wishing to come to Paris to complete their knowledge of French as governesses; but, through the representations made of the hopelessness of obtaining anything like remunerative employment in Paris, only eleven out of the eighty-four actually came, although thirty-two governesses, who were already in France, were received during that time into the Home.

We have, also, our Y.W.C.A. and Home, 26, Faubourg St. Honore, now established nearly fifteen years, for those apprenticed to milliners and dressmakers who, usually, receive no salary during the first part of their apprenticeship; and our Institute and Home for Governesses, Artists, and Students, 8, Rue Bastiat, opened by the late Earl of Shaftesbury, May 10, 1873, where food is provided daily to members, instead of their having to frequent restaurants. It may be of interest to record that one of the first medical students of its earlier days has recently been chosen as a lady doctor to an important post in India.

We have also our Mission Hall with its mothers' meetings, Sunday-school, infant Kindergarten, temperance and band of hope, night school, mission services for the poor, and soup kitchen, all work upon hitherto untrodden ground, which has gone on steadily increasing for the last twelve years; outside the gates of Paris are our Orphanage and Home, 35, Boulevard Bineau, for English and American children. The whole of the property is held in perpetuity for the purposes for which it was acquired through a special licence of the Board of Trade, by an association representing men of well-known standing in England, and a council in Paris.

We have never had a loan or mortgage. At the present moment, however, we are threatened with a serious deficit, not so much on the expenses of the general work—although this has suffered much from the death of liberal friends—as from very heavy repairs in the matter of drainage and water, and the partial rebuilding of three walls of considerable length, which has been made obligatory by the Government.—Yours faithfully, Ada M. Leigh.

77, Avenue Wagram, Paris, Dec. 27.

For the Young.

A CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS LETTER.

[The following letter, though somewhat out of date, will be perused with interest by our young readers.]

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIEND,

CHRISTMAS is such a time of meeting and happy greeting that I thought you would help to be the means of cheering some other children placed in less fortunate circumstances than yourself.

The little people who belong to our "Theatrical Mission Institute" number about 3000, from the baby of two years old; and most of these during this festive season toil every evening for the amusement of others, and at midnight may be seen wearily tramping homewards long after you have gone to sleep.

They are oft times worn out little creatures who are so glad, after the rehearsals are over, to come into the large room called "the Nest" at "Macready House," where they can enjoy merry romps and games of play, and attend the short bright services held almost daily. Many of their homes are far away, and their fathers and mothers are sometimes engaged performing in the country or elsewhere; so that our bairns are rejoiced to find a hearty welcome and a cosy meal at a low charge.

Shall I tell you a story about one of these children? "The Great Little Ernestine," as she is called in her profession, is dark and intelligent in appearance, with long waving hair, her work being to ride on a bare-backed horse, and while galloping round the circus ring to leap through papered-covered hoops called balloons, and over various coloured streamers.

Ernestine was, at the time of which we write, but nine years old, and she had heard from many of her little friends that they received a kind letter every month from some Christian lady connected with the Mission.

"Why should I not have a letter?" she inquired, while performing at Leeds. The child's wish was soon granted, and after a few days the postman arrived with her long-desired note.

Eagerly was the envelope torn open, disclosing a pretty text card—"God commendeth His love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us"—and a letter, clearly written, full of loving messages.

The words contained made a great impression on Ernestine, and on her mother, who was also a circus rider.

For years the claims of Sunday had been disregarded; but, when the Day of Rest next came round, mother and little girl joined with others in worshipping God, and not only so, but the hearts of both were yielded to their loving Heavenly Father; and then the mother became anxious that her husband should hear and know the truth.

So, somewhat reluctantly, Ernestine dropped her treasure into the post, and it was soon carried to Rouen, where her father was engaged with two other clever acrobats; the letter, however, was not blessed to his soul—as had been prayerfully desired—but to one of his comrades, who begged that it might be sent across the seas to his sister in Australia.

Before, however, it was finally despatched, these words were written in red ink across the top, "When read and made a blessing, return to 10, M——-street, Chalk Farm-road, London, England."

At Melbourne the "missive" was read by a whole company engaged in an opera. Two girls were touched by its contents, and they, having abandoned their unreal life, are now working for their Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

Ernestine is, however, still the fortunate possessor of her very useful note, for it was returned to her according to the instructions, somewhat the worse for wear.

Looking round our children's play-room one day in the summer, a little girl ran up to me, and picture my astonishment when she drew from her dress a green pickle bottle, and holding it up, showed me a letter carefully folded round the inside, the cork being sealed with red wax. "Why is your letter there, Ernestine?" I curiously asked; her quaint but sage reply was: "Oh! after I die, and am buried in the cold ground, I shall rise to meet Jesus, and then I shall hold up this bottle and say, it was this letter which led me first to love you."

Such is one of the romantic cases which come under our notice, and Mrs. Courthope Todd and I are anxious that the children should raise at least one hundred pounds amongst themselves, so that we may be enabled to provide warm clothing for the needy; food for the hungry; medicine for the sick; and other good things for all our little members engaged in theatres and other places of entertainment.—Yours faithfully,

COURTHOPE TODD, Founder and Director.

A MORNING PRAYER.

Arrayed are all the lilies
In robes of silv'ry hue;
Remember me, dear Father,
And give me raiment too.

In days of old the prophet
Was by the ravens fed;
Remember me, dear Father,
And give me daily bread.

There chirps no little sparrow
Without a tiny nest;
Remember me, dear Father,
And give me home and rest.

AN EVENING PRAYER.

Before I lay me down to sleep,
I thank Thee, gracious Lord,
For all Thy mercies rich and deep,
And for Thy loving word,
That those who ask of Thee in faith
Shall surely all be heard.

Oh! keep me, Lord, and lead me right,
Nor ever let me stray;
And guard me through the silent night,
And through the coming day;
And grant at last to Thy dear home
My feet may find the way.

PAGAN EDINBURGH.—The crowds of debased gamblers who are to be seen even in the large towns of Scotland rushing with feverish eagerness for the evening papers containing the results of the latest races, have too clearly indicated the monstrous growth of a paganism among the broad-cloth population quite as loathsome in its moral aspects as that of the slums. But we were hardly prepared for the information that the brutal champion of the American prize-ring was received in Edinburgh with almost as much éclat as if he had been his friend the Prince of Wales, and that "the first of two fistic exhibitions," given in the same hall where Prof. Henry Drummond and other evangelists often preach the Gospel, was actually attended by nearly two thousand people, each of whom had paid from one shilling to five shillings for admission. This in the city of John Knox in the closing days of 1887!—Christian Leader.

THE DAY OF REST.

THE Working Men's Lords Day Rest Association has issued a New Year's address which states that 500,000 persons are employed in this country in connection with puplic amusements, and that this number does not include the attendants of museums, picture galleries, public libraries, &c., or those who are indirectly employed such as railway, cab, and omnibus men, refreshment house keepers, &c. The importance to employées of keeping places of amusement closed on Sundays is urged. The attempt to establish Sunday concerts for money payment in Piccadilly failed for want of support, and illegally conducted Sunday concerts at Birmingham have been discontinued.

The address refers regretfully to the Sunday opening of portions of the People's Palace, to the sanction given to Sunday boating in the parks and to the Sunday demonstrations calling into exhausting work thousands of policemen. There are 117,840 public-houses with seven-day licences, and 14,896 with six-day licences. There were 3711 petitions, having 279,884 signatures presented to Parliament last session against Sunday postal work, and a select committee has recommended alteration which if carried out will secure Sunday rest to many postmen. The address concludes by quoting some words of Bishop Ryle's: "For eighteen centuries the proper sanctification of the Sunday has always been one gauge of the religious condition of a country, and it will be an evil day when our English Sunday is exchanced for a continental one. If you will preach for the times as well as eternity, keep Sunday observance well to the front."

THE GOSPEL IN IRELAND.

DEAR SIR,—You have recently directed attention to Ireland, to its needs, and to some of its agencies for spreading the Gospel. In connection with this subject I would like to mention the work done by the Irish Evangelisation Society, that your readers may feel a deeper interest in our country.

During the summer, at various places, there have been five tents at work, continuing about six weeks at each place, as well as a wooden movable hall, capable of holding 700, and in which 388 meetings were held during the past year. This hall is in use all the year, and is sent to places where no suitable building to accommodate the number can be obtained. Generally speaking, the tents are filled, and frequently overcrowded. The evangelists are men of earnestness and zeal, who preach Christ, and seek to win souls for Him as their definite object.

As to results, there is abundant testimony in every place visited that many have been born again through the agency of the Society's operations, and great and precious results, which eternity alone will reveal, have accompanied many of the missions. In the past year about 2500 meetings altogether have been held, ranging from the county Donegal in the extreme north, to Cork in the south. Everywhere the message is well received, and some of our Roman Catholic population have profited by the word spoken.

A recent note from the secretary, Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, has in it, I regret to say, the following:—"Many of our friends in Ireland are now unable to help us as formerly, and at the present time we need a large sum to enable us to close this year without debt; this, by God's grace, we have for many years been enabled to do." H. A. M.

Kilkeel, co. Down.

HAZELWOOD.—A re-union of those who have at any time visited the Home of Rest and Recreation for Commercial Young Men, at Ryde, Isle of Wight, will be held in Exeter Hall on Thursday, February 9. Friends who have sojourned there, and who desire to attend this gathering, should enclose stamped and addressed envelope to Mr. W. Jacobs, secretary.

KANWAR HARNAM SINGH, C.I.E., who was one of the Indian Princes in the Procession at the Jubilee of the Queen, before leaving London sent a donation to the Secretary with a letter of which the following is an extract:—

> "If the Europeans and Eurasians in India would only exemplify a real Christianity before "the people of India, in their walk and conversation, their influence for good would be a "power in itself, and would soon be felt. Therefore, any Society that has for its aim the "spiritual welfare of the Europeans in India, should be considered most valuable. "I wish the good Christian people of this land took a greater interest in their Christian "brothers and sisters out in India, who are living in out-of-the-way places, and are "isolated from every religious training and influence.
> "We certainly need more men who would readily devote their talents and time to this "admirable work, and yet all this depends greatly on money, without which very little "can be done. * * * * *

COMING MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

REV. JAMES JOHNSON, who recently visited North America in connection with the arrangements for the United Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in London in June this year, writes to us :—

I am happy to say that I have succeeded beyond my most sanguine hopes. The reception I have met with wherever I have gone has been most cordial, and has assured me of a degree of earnestness and preparation of mind which clearly indicates the finger of God in the movement. In New York, within a week of my arrival, a meeting was called of the most influential representative men among the clergy and laity of the city, which was largely attended. After I had laid before them the commission entrusted to me, and explained our aims in the proposed Conference, it was unanimously and heartily resolved to respond to the call for co-operation; and a committee, representing all the leading missionary societies and churches in New York, was formed, with instructions to call a meeting of delegates from all the societies engaged in foreign missions, from all parts of the United States, to meet with me on December 2. At this meeting representatives were present from Boston, on the north, to Richmond, on the south. The result of the cordial and prayerful deliberations was that twenty-three societies have already expressed their sympathy, and intention to take part in the Conference: this number does not include ladies' societies, nor societies in Canada, both of which will also be represented. The same cordiality was manifested in Canada, on my visit to Montreal and Toronto. Committees were formed in both these cities, to carry out the same objects as in New York.

After the second meeting in the latter city, I felt so fully satisfied with the results of my visits that I wished to return at once; but at the request of the committee I agreed to stay till December 17, and to spend the time in visiting Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington. It was well that I complied: I would not have missed the Conference of the Evangelical Alliance in Washington for much. It was a wonderful gathering of great and good men from all parts of the Continent. Never has there been anything like it in America, or perhaps in any other country. The earnestness, ability, and unanimity of the speakers of every shade of denominational diversity, was assuredly the result of the Spirit's presence in answer to much prayer. The longing for unity and co-operation was ardent, and evidently sincere, and cannot but tend to good results. The occasion when it was my privilege to address the great gathering was felt to be peculiarly appropriate. It was when considering "modes of co-operation." And when, in the name of forty-eight Foreign Missionary Societies in Great Britain, united in one committee, I asked for the co-operation of the Anglo-Saxon race, along with our brethren on the Continent of Europe, in carrying out the great commission of our common Master, to preach the Gospel to the heathen, the response was so loud and earnest as to thrill every heart. I wished its echoes could have been heard by those who sent me. From what I have seen of the state of feeling in both countries on this question of Foreign Missions, I feel assured that "the time to favour Zion has come," that a new era in missions is already begun, and that soon "the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God."

There is a danger, when a movement of this kind takes such a wide reach, and such vast proportions, that we begin to trust human wisdom and human strength. Let me therefore call attention to what we regard as the most important and hopeful feature. An important part of my work here, as with us at home, has been to make arrangements for united prayer, before and during the Conference in June, by the Churches in England, America, and on the Continent, and by missionaries and converts over the whole world. The response to this request for united prayer is very warm and earnest. In this is our confidence for a blessing on the Conference, and on the future of missions.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.

THIS Institution, the parent and forerunner of so many others of a similar kind, continues its most useful career, though beset by difficulties not a few. The fact that its daily ministry of merciful help goes on quietly, and without ostentation, tends to make its claims forgotten, amid the multiplicity of calls on the benevolent. We have heard, with extreme regret, that Mrs. Hilton has been compelled, through straitened resources, to close up for the present, her branch at Feltham. For several years past the elder girls have been placed there for education and training prior to entering on domestic service. These objects are far better carried out in the quiet country village than in the overcrowded premises in Stepney Causeway. The closing of the Feltham house is therefore a real calamity to the Institution, and it is devoutly to be hoped that its doors will speedily re-open to receive the band of young maidens who need all possible equipment before going out to fight their way in the world. The sooner this can be accomplished the greater will be the joy in Mrs. Hilton's motherly heart, which yearns with the tenderest solicitude over the helpless children, to whose interests she has devoted her life.

The closing of the Feltham Home has, moreover, re-acted injuriously on the work in Stepney Causeway. These elder girls are taking up room that is much needed for the reception of some of the many fresh applicants. Cases of real need, of the most pathetic and sorrowful kind, are constantly being made known to Mrs. Hilton, both by letter and personal appeal. Even to those who are in daily contact with the sins and sorrows of the great city, it is inexpressibly painful to have to refuse help, when that help would be such a priceless boon. In many cases the applications come from mothers, compelled by some visitation of disease to go into hospital for treatment. Who is to care for their little ones during the period of enforced absence? The temporary help that the Crèche affords in cases of this description can only be valued aright by those who have experienced it. Here is an instance in point. A young mother of two little boys had to go into hospital. The father was out of work. The children were received, and lovingly tended for several months. When the convalescent mother came to fetch them, she found them fat and rosy; her gratitude for the kindness shown and the help rendered in her time of need was most affecting.

Another case was that of a mother in hospital, with a baby wasting away in decline, and nobody but a girl of eleven to care for the child and look after the home. Or, again, it is a mother whose husband has died, and who has herself lost the use of her limbs through repeated fevers. A child of three is received into the Home, and the mother is free to enter the hospital. In some cases the tragic element is combined with the pathetic. Imagine a husband beating and bruising a two-year-old child of his wife's, but not his own, simply that he may torture the mother! She went to the Crèche in sore agony of mind, and, of course, the innocent little victim was taken in. This might well have been a case for the magistrate; but it is strangely true that, even when the mother has to bear in her own person the strain of suffering and the burden of sorrow, she will often endure all silently, rather than bring down deserved punishment on the partner of her life. How much of true heroism never meets the public eye. When those behind the scenes, like Mrs. Hilton, become acquainted with such cases, it sends to the heart an added pang when practical sympathy cannot be shown. What a relief it is to turn to a case of this kind: The mother of two little girls is dead; the father is ill. A brother acts the part of nurse to the little sisters—washing and dressing them, and taking them to the Crèche day by day. He, poor fellow, has fallen into consumption, and so the children have become permanent inmates of the Home.

We had noted down for citation other cases equally, if not more, touching, but the specimens we have given are surely enough. The great bulk of the Crèche work, of course, is in helping mothers to go out during the day to toil for their own and their children's bread. That may be a bald and prosaic statement of fact, but to unfold the full meaning of it, even in a few instances, is more than we can now attempt. Of all the varied forms of kindly human ministry, none seems to us more truly divine than that of caring for innocent babes and deeply tried mothers. In the name of Him who took the little ones in his arms and blessed them, and healed them of their infirmities, we commend this work to all his true-hearted disciples. The Crèche and Home, which are at 12, 14, and 16, Stepney Causeway, London, E., are open to visitors.

NOTES FROM NEW ZEALAND.

IN May of 1887 it was laid on the heart of Mr. Barr, a gentleman recently arrived from Scotland, to do something for the Chinese residents of Wellington, of whom there are a considerable number. An invitation was given to a Sunday-school to be held in Mr. Barr's house. Several attended, and Mr. Barr, aided by his wife and three daughters and son, commenced his labour of love. Finding the school appreciated, he decided to hold it on two nights in the week also, and it has continued to the present time. As the need arose, other friends gave their help. The results are most gratifying. The average attendance has been about ten. The progress made in reading and writing is very good, and it is hoped that the results spiritually will prove to be real and abiding.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Mountain are evangelising in New Zealand. They conducted a week's mission in Wellington recently, in St. John's Presbyterian Church.

The Y.M.C.A., started in this town by Dr. Somerville, and carried on for some years very successfully, has been compelled to dissolve. The real work of the Association, however, is being continued by some earnest workers, and the wharf preaching and Sunday evening services will be maintained.

The Salvation Army in this town are having lively times. They succeed in attracting large audiences, 2000 being about the usual Sunday evening attendance, while some of our churches are nearly empty. This latter is a sad fact.

Wellington, N.Z. THOMAS JOHNSON.

THE PROVIDENCE-ROW NIGHT REFUGE and Home have for years housed and fed nearly two hundred persons a night, yet so great has been the number of applicants for some time that admission has had to be refused to fifty, sixty, and sometimes a hundred persons for want of accommodation. To meet these increasing claims, a new wing, nearly 50 ft. square, has been added to the Refuge, with lavatories, baths, and more ample room for the inmates. In the Refuge last year about eleven hundred persons have been specially helped. Girls have been saved from the allurements of vice. Deserted women who have been cheated in the promise of marriage, and flung friendless on the world, have been assisted to bear their bitter sorrow. Servants have had situations procured for them. Workmen have had tools provided; flower girls, costermongers, fuzee sellers, and newspaper boys have been furnished with a little stock. Families about to be turned into the streets have had the rent paid, and so were rescued from destitution. A weekly allowance has been granted to parents when there was no work, or when the fathers were sick in the hospitals; and help has been given in time of need to persons in reduced circumstances.

CHRISTMAS CHEER.

THE festive season, as usual, was signalised by a general distribution of creature comforts to the London poor, and others, by those who labour in the Gospel among them. Detailed accounts of all these dinners and teas and Christmas trees would fill almost every column in this issue. We briefly note a few of the gatherings:—

On Christmas Eve, at Berger Hall, Bromley, the evangelistic centre in connection with Harley House, 400 poor women, representing as many destitute and deserving households, received parcels containing groceries and meat, proportioned in quantity to the number of mouths that were to fill. The women were also regaled with tea. Subsequently they were addressed by various friends, who spoke words of cheer appropriate to the season. Further meetings for the poor have been arranged for at Berger Hall during the fortnight succeeding Christmas.

Many hearts were gladdened at the Sermon-lane Mission Hall on Wednesday week, when articles of warm clothing were distributed. During the evening an impressive religious service was held.

In addition to dinners and clothing distributed the previous week, upwards of 500 of the poor accepted an invitation to a social evening in Hawkstone Hall, Westminster Bridge-road, on Monday week. Several ladies and gentlemen contributed music and recitations. Rev. Newman Hall read part of Dickens's "Chimes." Mrs. Anderson addressed the women present on Christ the giver of true Christmas joy. Refreshments were distributed, with a book to each guest.

In connection with his "Bread of Life Mission," at 24, Lower Marsh, Lambeth, Mr. Edward Wright has on several recent occasions presented to every person attending the Gospel meeting a loaf of bread.

On Christmas Eve at Clapton Park Tabernacle forty families, comprising one hundred and eighty persons, were supplied with parcels of grocery, beef, vegetables, coal, and garments. The Benevolent Society is supplying two hundred and forty families per week with soup dinners.

On Boxing-day about seven hundred of the homeless poor were entertained at dinner at Field-lane. The poor people were waited upon by about a hundred ladies and gentlemen, friends of the Institution. A hearty service had been previously held. Provisions for an equally good dinner were given during the preceding week to over six hundred poor families in the neighbourhood.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

The usual gatherings of sailors and others were held at this active centre of work, and were seasons of deep interest. On Boxing-day the place swarmed with sons of the sea, who fared sumptuously on the Christmas fare provided. After the wants of the body had been well supplied, the higher nature was catered for by the temperance and Gospel speech and song of various friends. Almost every guest pledged himself not to patronise the publican, for that evening at least. On the following day the Rest was again a busy scene, with plenty of bright song and cheerful talk. The great event of the evening was the dismantling of the Christmas Tree. Various nationalities were represented, and the warm testimonies expressed in different tongues were good to hear, though not always easy to grasp. The useful gifts, furnished by a host of friends, were gratefully received. The blessed influences thrown around these warm-hearted fellows, most of them far from home, were not only a preservative from evil at a trying time, but must abide with them when scattered far and wide.

An interesting gathering of lads was also held, when there were again tea and tree, and homely, earnest talk.

WEST CENTRAL MISSION.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week three hundred poor boys and girls from Soho and the surrounding neighbourhood were invited to a Christmas tree at Wardour Hall, each receiving gifts of clothing and fruit. In the same place on Thursday a free dinner was given to drunkards and outcasts of both sexes. The guests, who numbered 250, presented a most debauched and wretched appearance, forcibly revealing on the one hand the awful results of strong drink, and on the other the physical effects of exposure and want. The meal was heartily enjoyed by all, and at the close, in answer to an appeal by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, ninety men and women signed the pledge and donned the blue ribbon. One of these, a man miserably clad, is a B.A. of an Irish University.

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS.

A large number of sailors—British, Norwegians, Swedes, Finlanders, and Danes—were gathered on Christmas Eve at Miss Hedenström's Temperance Home, in Leman-street. After tea Miss Hedenström and other friends gave short, stirring addresses. The distribution of useful articles from the "Yule Tree" was an interesting sight. Each of the men got three articles. During the evening the sailors were entertained with good music, recitations, &c. At 9 p.m. the national Scandinavian "Tülegröd" (rice porridge) was served and thoroughly enjoyed, and the pleasant evening terminated with a prayer meeting, conducted by Miss Hedenström. On Christmas day a large number of seamen from ships in port partook of a substantial Christmas dinner. In the evening Miss Hedenström conducted her usual Christmas meeting at the "Strangers' Rest." Next week Miss Hedenström's work will be removed from Leman-street into a larger and substantial building opposite the West India Dock entrance.

UNLOADING "THE CHRISTMAS BOAT."

In giving an account of this interesting performance at Miss Child's "Welcome Home" in Ratcliff-highway, on December 29, Mr. Wm. Luff writes:—

"We found it anchored in one of the rooms of the Home. It was a sailing vessel, manned by dolls, clinging in the shrouds; sails were set, starboard and port lights burning, and all complete. Registered A 1. But the cargo was the chief object; it consisted of comforters, cuffs thick and warm, stockings large enough, as one said, to wear over top-boots, needle and sewing cases, booklets, boxes, cards, sweets, and all sorts of things for seamen, and some things for their children. The haven in which this Christmas boat rested was decorated with lamps, &c., and into it the men were allowed to come, previous to the unloading. Bright, happy lads they seemed, who after a good tea were on fair terms with themselves and everybody else. One young man was introduced to me as one who had just returned from his first voyage 'with God on board': and his experience was that it had been the happiest he had ever made. Both his beaming eyes seemed to say 'Amen' to the statement.

"The distribution of gifts was a work requiring thought and care. The men filed in by twenties, the majority being Swedes and Norwegians, interspersed with negroes, Germans, Dutchmen, and men from all parts. After the boat had been lightened, meetings were held in various languages and rooms; the Fo'c-s'le, the shop, and the whole house seemed packed, while one and another gave their testimony to the power of Jesus to save and keep. Hymn followed hymn, with solos between: while as some left others took their places.

"We saw a sample of how sailors are treated by the workers here. A fine young fellow came in tipsy and pushed his way to the front; a seat was found for him next the chairman; he was prayed for and sang to, and we have since heard, went away sober and determined to live an altered life."

Miss Child writes about the sailors who are living at the Home: "Through the mercy of God we have been kept free from the curse of drink. As usual, at this time, much drink is being given away to the sailors and others, in order to draw custom. Our Home was full and everyone of the men showed that they have learned how to spend Christmas without the drink or bad company."

"CHRISTIAN MILLION" ORPHANS.

ON March 18 there appeared in The Christian Million a pathetic little history entitled, "Boy Thieves in Prison." The incidents narrated occurred some time ago in America, and the nature of the story forbad any exact indication of dates and localities. The story was, however, true, and must have been graphically told, for our contemporary received the following letter by an early post:—

"DEAR SIR,—I read in your paper yesterday the case enclosed. Are the boys still in prison? If so, could you interest someone on their behalf to send them down to me? Providing they would come, and promise to be honest, I would send them to school, and try and give them a start in life—with God to help us. I am working in the Great Northern carriage department, have been here nearly five years, and have spent the rest of my life in London, so that I have an idea of the task I am offering to undertake. If my wife and myself can save those two lads from destruction, we shall not have lived in vain."

In reply to this noble letter, the Editor expressed regret that it was not then in his power to send the boys mentioned to the home so generously offered them, but proposed the case of another homeless boy, equally in need of love and care. This circumstance was related in the columns of our contemporary, with the remark added that perhaps there were "other fathers and mothers in God" who had read the story, and would also like to take care of an orphan or a poor lost waif. This suggestion caused a second worthy working couple to write to the Editor, asking him to find for them an orphan child they might adopt as their own.

Here appeared to be a call from God to enter upon new work. The distribution of orphans and "waifs" in homes ready to receive them seemed far more practical and beneficial than the building of huge barracks of orphanages. So there appeared on May 20, 1886, in The Christian Million, an editorial entitled, "God's Plan of Adoption," in which the loneliness of childless homes (often rich ones) was depicted in contrast with an orphan's woe, and the "idea" was suggested that wherever there is an orphan or waif wanting a parent there is also somewhere a parental heart seeking a child.

"God's plan" consists in bringing these two together. "Surely these twin sorrows are permitted in this sad world of ours in hope of redemption; are permitted in order that they may neutralise each other." The problem of orphanage and waifage was declared to be "mainly a matter of distribution," and from that day to this the proprietors of The Christian Million have been trying to do their part in effecting this redistribution by keeping the subject before their readers and taking upon themselves the trouble and expense of preliminary consultations and arrangements. Letters received from "foster-parents" show how this good work is progressing.

THE MERCHANTS' LECTURE.—The last of these discourses for the year 1887 was delivered on Tuesday last week at Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, before a numerous audience, by Dr. Allon, who preached from the text, "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning" (Luke xii. 35). The lectures are delivered every Tuesday at 12 o'clock, and last but an hour. The attendance, especially of City merchants and others engaged in business in the neighbourhood of the chapel, has during the past year been very satisfactory and encouraging.

A WORD TO MISSION HELPERS.

AN esteemed correspondent writes to us as follows in a recent letter:—

Missionary spirit and missionary enterprise are increasing, and large missionary societies are well known. But do you think that Christians are acquainted with smaller efforts? I think, if they were, they would give them greater support. In recent travels I came across the following. We are glad to mention once more the Missions named; though few if any of them are unknown to our readers:—

Mrs. Hammond's work at Venice.
The American Presbyterian Mission at Cairo.
Miss Whately's Mission, Cairo.
Mrs. Prinsep's work at Port Said (Arab Bible Distribution).
The Jaffa Mildmay Hospital.
Miss Arnott's Jaffa School.
Jews' Society Hospital at Jerusalem.
Nazareth Orphanage.
American Beyrout Mission.
Smyrna Rest.
Constantinople Rest.

There were also two doctors at work at Tiberias and another at Nazareth. Unfortunately we did not meet them, nor did I see the work going on at Damascus, Baalbec, Lebanon, and Beyrout. When we hear attacks on missions, I think people ought to know what missions exist and give them a helping hand. Out of seventy-five objects for which there were contributions in one number of THE CHRISTIAN, I think there were only thirteen or fifteen for missionary work among the heathen. We really must be up and be doing more than we have hitherto done.

CHRISTIAN CONVENTION, SYDNEY.

MANY hearts in the southern hemisphere, as well as in the northern, have been warmed and blessed by the address of the Archbishop of Dublin on "Christian Unity," delivered at the recent Dublin Convention, and reported in THE CHRISTIAN of October 7 last. It is not only in the home land that this desire for Christian union is found. It flourishes down here in the "Sunny South." Two years ago a "Sydney Ministers' Union" was formed; it is now fifty strong, and meets monthly for prayer, praise, and conference. Under its auspices last month there was held in this city for three days, in October last, the Second Annual Christian Convention, having for its aim "the quickening and deepening of spiritual life, the promoting of Christian work, and the furthering of the cause of Christian union."

The subject was "The Holy Spirit." Bishop BARRY, D.D., Primate of Australia, was chairman the first evening, delivering a powerful address on "The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit in Natural Religion, in the Old Testament, and in the New." Since he came amongst us our good Bishop has always shown himself a friend to the cause of Christian Union. There were fourteen addresses in all delivered by as many ministers from all the branches of the Christian Church. So marked has been the impression made upon the world outside by this practical demonstration of the real and substantial Union of the branches of the Church in Sydney, that the Roman Catholic prelate, Cardinal Moran, has taken alarm and publicly declared that our aims are akin to those of the Nihilists! Whether this is ignorance or a direct breach of the ninth commandment it is perhaps rather hard to say. Dr. Barry's many friends at home will be surprised to hear that he has joined the ranks of the Nihilists. The convention was a season of refreshing to many of God's children.

JOHN MACNEIL.

Waverley, Sydney, New South Wales.

PENNY DINNERS IN DUBLIN.—The penny dinner project for the poor of Dublin, established on December 1 by a few benevolent ladies, is, so far, a decided success. The numbers availing themselves of the opportunity of a meal of wholesome and well-cooked victuals at the cost of a penny, have largely increased day by day. Since the opening the attendance has averaged 14[illegible] daily, a large proportion being labouring men engaged in the neighbourhood of Verschoyle-place.

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.

STEINWAY HALL.

UNDER the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, morning meetings were held here daily, as in former years. The company of ladies and gentlemen who met on Monday filled the body of the hall, the gallery, and the platform. The devotional exercises were entered into with heartiness and fervour. Sir Robert Fowler, Bart., M.P., who presided, alluded in feeling terms to the death of Sir W. McArthur, whose name had appeared on the original draft of the programme as chairman.

MR. WEBB-PEPLOE ON PRAISE.

The address was delivered by Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE. This morning, he said, we have met to offer our pæan of praise to the great God who has done such wonderful things for us. It is well that we should seek to lift our souls into the attitude not only of thanksgiving, but also of praise, remembering that thanksgiving comes naturally first, I suppose, with us poor mortals. Selfish by instinct, we cannot refrain from giving thanks for what God has done for us. But, step by step, we rise higher even than thanksgiving to that attitude of simple adoration, where everything connected with self is put away, and the whole soul is filled with unspeakable delight, as we rise at last to contemplate God.

We thank God to-day for all the magnificent opportunities given to the Church to glorify Him by brighter service; one sees and hears on every hand of glorious tokens of awakening in the Church to the privilege of going forth and being a more missionary Church than ever. It is of no avail to bid the churches to arise and do their duty in missionary labour, and of no avail whatever to bid young Christians to go forth as missionaries, until the elders have been awakened by the Spirit of God to understand their boundless privilege of living as a more sanctified and separated people unto God. Why do Christians, like Israel of old, draw back from the privilege which God would accord to them? It is because they are terrified at the majesty of the Lord. We thank God that there are openings for the Church to do mighty things in the name of the Lord, but the name of the Lord will have no power in the man who shrinks back, because of his inward desires for worldliness, from beholding the glory and the majesty of the Lord. May God open our hearts this morning to see Him in his beauty, that we may be purified by the cleansing power of the Holy Ghost; for only the pure in heart can see God. And when we have seen God, we shall go out into the world endued with experimental Spirit-power, as we have never been before, for the King's service, hastening on the return of our beloved Lord and Master, when He shall see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied.

THE CITY MEETINGS.

These are arranged by Mr. Hughman, of the Leadenhall-street Y.M.C.A. For two years past the daily meetings have extended over two hours, and the success of the experiment has been deemed sufficient to justify its continuance. City gentlemen cannot always get, even to a prayer-meeting, when they choose, so they drop in when they can, and the extension of the time enables a larger number to attend. At the opening of the first hour on Monday the attendance was small, but it grew with the passing minutes.

Rev. W. R. MOWLL, of All Souls' Church, Langham-place, presided, and read Psalm ciii. as well befitting the subject of the day—thanksgiving for past mercies. The first prayer, or rather ascription of praise, by the venerable ministerial brother, gave a joyous and triumphant tone to the meeting that was well sustained. Mr. MOWLL in his address said that the life of our Lord was distinctly one of praise. How little of praise there is in our lives! And yet it must be in proportion as we render praise to God that we can have communion with Him. During this festive season many of us have been giving little presents to the children and the poor, and we have been rejoiced at the expressions of their gratitude. So it is with God. Praise is literally the price or value we set on anything. If, therefore, we praise little, it indicates that we value God's mercies lightly. Even in our seeming adversities we can find matter for praise; trials and troubles are often God's messengers of mercy to us. Throwing his ideas on Praise into the form of an acrostic, suggested by Ps. ciii., Mr. Mowll said we ought to praise God for

P ardon—forgiveness of sin.
R est of soul, and rest in service.
A ccess to God at all times for the supply of our daily need.
I nterest that He takes in all the affairs of our life.
S ervice in our appointed sphere.
E xpectation of a risen and glorified Lord.

If we are living a life of constant praise, we shall find answers to our prayers for ourselves and for others.

After a brief interval, Messrs. FULLERTON and SMITH, the Metropolitan Tabernacle evangelists, took charge of the meeting. Mr. Smith read and commented on the well-worn, but never threadbare, twenty-third Psalm, remarking, as he read, on the rich comfort to be derived from the gracious words, by the trusting soul. The previous night, he said, his cup ran over with joy at seeing many led to Christ at the Edinburgh Castle, where Mr. Fullerton and himself then began a series of Gospel meetings. A considerable time was then spent in praise and prayer, many tongues in succession recounting the goodness and mercy of God in the past in connection with private and public blessings.

Mr. Smith sang a pleasing melody to words written by the author of "Oh to be nothing!" and the refrain of which was, "For Jesu's Sake." Some comforting words followed from Mr. Fullerton, in the line of praising God for individual mercies in the past, and dedication to a consecrated life in the future. God as our salvation at the beginning and our salvation at the end, with plenty of strength and song in between: let this be the [illegible] of our new year. Let the year be one of unending praise that shall be fruitful in blessing to others.

WANDSWORTH.

Afternoon meetings were held daily at Down Lodge Hall, High-street, Wandsworth. The meeting on Monday was led by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. The latter read and commented upon a portion of Luke ii., incidentally referring to the joy it had given them to see souls converted at the Watch Night service they had conducted in the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Mr. Smith afterwards sang a solo. A short address was given by Mr. Fullerton. Praising Christians, he said, are happy Christians. It is as natural to be happy as to be healthy. Happy are those who put their trust in God. Trust there means refuge—and as indicated in another passage—refuge from fear, from the fear of evil. Many die a thousand deaths at the thought of one. In another Psalm "trust" means confidence in God, which gives strength. In another place it implies quiet rest, deliverance from all care by resting on God.

THE PIRÆUS, GREECE.—Miss L. [illegible] writes to us that in the visitation of foreign and other vessels here she is enabled to distribute many tracts and Scripture portions. The hospital also affords much scope for such work and for spiritual conversation. This earnest worker has started a ragged school and a mothers' meeting. She would be glad of pieces of coloured cotton to be made into aprons and bed-quilts at the sewing meetings. Her address is Poste Restante, Piræus, Greece.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.—In a recent "Occasional Paper" Dr. F. A. Pring pleads earnestly on behalf of the many sick and poor in the neighbourhood of St. Giles who look to the Mission for help. He emphasises the case of the children—without nourishing food or clothing, with constitutions so enfeebled that they become a ready prey to disease. The Sunday-school work, for which more helpers are [illegible], is not without result. Dr. Pring's address is London Medical Mission, 47, Endell-street, W.C.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Leghorn.

The New Year opens upon "a world out of breath," and ominous clouds are gathering on the social, political, and religious horizons. The general feeling, unspoken it may be, but none the less intense, is one of unrest and expectancy. At home, we are face to face with widespread distress in London and our large towns, and the labour problem is crying loudly for solution. Among the churches we see on one hand the most unblushing sacerdotalism, on another a tendency to drift from the safe anchorage of the old Scriptural doctrines of Nonconformity. Intemperance, impurity, Sabbath-breaking, and gambling, are sapping the physical and moral sturdiness of the nation. Abroad, there are uncertainty, intrigue, and mutual suspicion; the Continent is a vast armed camp, and the "dogs of war" are straining at the leash. Nevertheless, "the Lord reigneth." The Christian, casting an anxious eye over the troubled waters, will thankfully remember that kings and statesmen, nations and individuals, peace and war, prosperity and distress, are but instruments in the all-wise hands of Him who "worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will."

Among the important events of the New Year must be reckoned the Conference on Foreign Missions, which is to be held in London in June next. Almost all the societies and committees in Great Britain that are engaged in foreign mission work will unite; Churchmen and Dissenters enter into the movement heartily; and the leading American and Continental societies promise co-operation. Nothing can better distinguish the year. Foreign missions constitute the foremost work of the Church, and frank consultation on all their bearings must be eminently advantageous.

The graphic little Psalm (cxxxii.) on the love of citizens of the heavenly country is having its fulfilment this week, and men see how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. But why should not the goodly sight be seen in other weeks of the year as well as during the first? The disordered and bewildered state of society loudly calls for this abiding witness of Christian unity and brotherly love. There are perpetually recurring modes and opportunities for its manifestation, and the time has come when a more excellent way than aspirings for offices and gifts, demands a practical recognition.

On the other hand, the time has not come for extinguishing our Protestantism. The first number of The Nineteenth Century for this year contains an article by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford which is an appeal to Englishmen to join in securing the independence of the Pope from civil authority, and the augmentation of his spiritual functions by restoring his temporal power. This threatens to be one of the struggles of the year. Unhappily there is in many influential quarters a growing indifference to truth, and a weakening of old English convictions, that will side with the adherents of the Papacy. Let Protestants beware. For Protestantism to unite with Romanism would not be union but annihilation. The extirpation of heresy, by which is meant Evangelical Protestantism, is a leading tenet of Roman Catholicism.

It is an open secret that the Queen insists on exercising her right of private judgment on all ecclesiastical affairs in which she has to act. Before giving her assent to the selection of a Golden Mass Bowl, as her Jubilee present to the Pope of Rome, the fact possibly escaped Her Majesty's memory that the late Prince Consort's opinion of Romanism was summed up in Adam Smith's statement as follows: "The greatest conspiracy every hatched against human liberty, civil and religious, is the Roman Catholic Church." This quotation appears on the title-page of the Prince Consort's Speeches, edited by His Royal Highness himself.

> Since the unification of Italy the Vatican diplomacy has been directed in all nations to secure two ends: (1) The acknowledgment of the Bishop of Rome as a secular Sovereign by all the Powers—Orthodox, Catholic, Protestant, Turk, Infidel, or Heretic; (2) The obtaining of independence from State interference, and a measure of State support, for Roman Catholic educational institutes in all countries, from the university to the elementary school. If you study the movements of Roman Catholic policy in any part of the world, you will everywhere find thousandfold confirmations of these statements. But our rival parties, striving only to oust each other, see nothing of the man in the middle, who gains from each. When the Italian nation recovered the City of Rome, a terrible blow was struck at the spiritual supremacy of the Pope as universal Bishop. It was recognised that, sooner or later, the Pope, as Bishop of Rome, while claiming to be the highest man in the whole world, must become a subject of the secular ruler of Rome. In such a case the bishops, clergy, and laity of the Papal Communion in England, America, France, Germany, Turkey, Persia, &c., would, of course, become "spiritual" subjects of a secular subject of the Italian crown.

Three methods from different quarters were suggested for the averting of this catastrophe, of which two failed:—

> The third was the most practical, and it is the one which we see now everywhere in process. The sovereigns and rulers of the nations were to be led by the old Machiavellian policy of the Vatican, themselves, consciously or unconsciously, to "establish" the Roman Papacy as one of the secular Powers of the World that now is. Even the Grand Turk and the Shah were to be induced, I might, perhaps, say cajoled, into addressing the Bishop of Rome as a brother Sovereign.

It is pitiful that England and America should seem to be yielding to the subtle influence.

The "Catholic Directory" for 1888, which has just been issued, shows that while the number of Roman Catholic bishops in Great Britain remains the same, there has been an increase during 1887, in the number of priests by forty-nine, making a total of 2648, inclusive of invalids, retired, and foreign priests in exile. The number of chapels was increased by twenty-one during the same period. The Directory estimates the number of Roman Catholics in England as 1,354,000, in Scotland as 326,000, and in Ireland as 3,961,000. As Queen and Empress Her Majesty reigns over 9,682,000. In the Imperial Parliament there are 32 Roman Catholic Peers, and 80 Roman Catholic members, and there are nine Roman Catholics in the Privy Council.

> A monster Christmas tree within. Whatever child brings a jug on Thursday, December 28, shall receive a handsome present.

This is a most reprehensible attempt to lure the young into scenes of temptation and danger. Has not the landlord brought himself within the scope of the recent Act prohibiting children, under a certain age, from being served in public-houses?

The Tynwald Court of the Isle of Man has set an example to much larger and more pretentious parliaments, for they have passed a resolution increasing the Customs duty upon all classes of spirits imported into the island; the additional revenue, estimated at £4000 per annum, to be applied to public works. By-and-by we trust these intelligent legislators will recognise the fact that the island would be still more prosperous if a Bill entirely prohibiting the admission or manufacture of spirits were passed.

The new Act for regulating the liquor traffic in Austria is a very severe one, a remarkable fact, seeing that Austria is by no means a drunken country. The number of public-houses must not exceed one to each five hundred of the population, and shops where alcoholic drinks are sold must be closed from 5 p.m. on the day preceding Sundays or Feast Days until 5 a.m. on the next working day. How long will it be before we arrive at common sense legislation of this nature in England, where it is far more urgently needed than in Austria?

We are glad to see that attention is again being directed to the hardships of young women "behind the counter." The Pall Mall Gazette demands:—

> (1) Many more seats, and much greater liberty in using them; (2) arrangements for midday dinner on the premises, so as to avoid the unnecessary fatigue of a hurried rush to the nearest eating house; (3) regularity in serving and sufficiency of time for eating the dinner; (4) greater care in the selection of overseers; and (5) one free afternoon in the week.

A lady suggested to one of these young women the advisability of wearing elastic socks as a safeguard against varicose veins. "Oh, we all wear those," was the reply; "there is hardly one of us that hasn't suffered more or less from varicose veins, and we couldn't get along at all without elastic socks!" Our contemporary adds:—

> Surely, when they realise this, ladies will no longer object to finding the employées sitting down when they enter a show-room. For the matter rests almost wholly with the customers; as soon as an employer becomes convinced that in permitting his girls to sit down he is not injuring his business, half the battle will be won.

Those who are sceptical concerning the cruelties of vivisection should take in The Zoophilist, which must be a thorn in the sides of the perpetrators of these barbarities. Some of the experiments described are revolting to a degree, and call for strenuous opposition to the further legalisation of vivisection in this country. The limits of our space preclude our giving details, but it is certain that the public know very little of the horrors which are of frequent occurrence. If they did their voices would be loudly raised in protest.

Mr. Denham Smith still lies in much the same fluctuating state; at times in greatly increased prostration.

The last party of the hundred missionaries sent out to China by the China Inland Mission during 1887, left England on Thursday, December 29.

"Bible checks on the Down-Grade" is the title of a series of Bible talks which Mr. Oscar Owers is open to give at drawing-room meetings, or in public, as arranged. The series consists of: (1) The Bible—what it professes to be; (2) Bible facts, before Bible doctrine; (3) The Genesis creation true; or, Who is the Creator? (4) The Eden Adam—the first man; (5) Man a fallen and lost sinner, or, Christ no Saviour? (6) The Fatherhood of God—What is it? (7) The hereafter of man. Half-an-hour to be allowed after each talk for questions. Mr. Owers will give them as a series or separately. His address is 39, Richmond Gardens, Uxbridge-road, W.

The loose views of the sanctity of marriage which are obtaining larger adherence in Society have recently been openly discussed, and to some extent advocated, in a novel of no ordinary power. This freedom of discussion of a delicate subject is a decoy duck to catch readers, for the heroine finally becomes enamoured of the Roman Catholic Church. The claims of that communion are powerfully advocated, and so a net is spread for the feet of the unwary. If it be true that the hitherto anonymous author has at length been revealed as being a Roman Catholic priest, the tactical skill displayed in adopting this means of advocating Roman Catholic claims among English readers is worthy of note.

Canon Taylor must regret his commendation of Islamism at the Wolverhampton Congress. Missionaries from almost all parts of the world have contravened his statements. But the last rebuke is the worst of all. The Times last week contained a letter from Mr. Bosworth Smith, the author of "Mohammed and Mohammedanism," which charges the Canon with the serious plagiarism of extracting, without acknowledgment, the essence of his own statements respecting Islamism, and keeping back at the same time all its qualifications and reserves. It is dangerous for men to meddle with error in the way of countenancing it. The mind seems to lose its balance.

We are pleased to see that the Committee of the Bible Society is contemplating the appointment of a literary secretary. The rich and varied information of this Society has been very inadequately presented in its monthly journal. There is not a better illustration of what such a record might be than the Chronicle of the London Missionary Society. Besides valuable communications from its own agents, it glances in a very interesting way over the whole mission field, and notices recent missionary literature.

It is satisfactory to know that one difficulty connected with the pressing labour question is likely to have a speedy and sensible solution. It has been arranged that the Imperial Government shall lend British Columbia £150,000 wherewith to effect the removal of 1200 Scotch crofter families to that colony. We have frequently advocated a large scheme of emigration as one remedy for the present distress. Why should not this practical scheme be carried a step further? Let Parliament devote £200,000 or £300,000 to settling large bodies of our able-bodied unemployed farm labourers (not professional paupers or chronic idlers) in Australia. Surely a House of Commons which can merrily vote several millions in a war scare, should not refuse a few thousands in a far more patriotic and righteous cause, such as this.

The recent appointment of M. de Mahy, a Creole, to the post of Minister of Marine in the New French Government has amazed many French people, who inquire, "What has he done to merit this distinction?" The answer to this question is to be found in the Revue Française for December, which contains an account of a speech delivered by M. de Mahy at Perpignan, on November 20 last, on Madagascar; for in the affairs of that country the new Minister of Marine has interested himself much. In his speech he did not hide his antipathy to the Hovas, the supreme race in Madagascar, whom he described as "the cause of the last war." The extravagance of the language warrants us in translating for our readers one passage in the Revue Française:—

> M. de Mahy recounted the history of the last expedition to Madagascar. It was a strange war, he said, wherein the formal order given to the troops was, "Defend yourselves, but never attack." Veritable cheating, due to the influence in the counsels in the Government of politicians who are the creatures of the English Bible Societies, and of Methodism: Methodism which is the new Jesuitism, and even as was once said of Catholic Jesuitism, "The hilt is at Rome, and the point everywhere," so we may say of Methodism, "Its double hilt is at London and at Berlin, whence they press its point upon the heart of France."

M. de Mahy has now the power to change the "formal order," which he ridiculed and condemned, and make an attack upon this Methodism in Madagascar. The choice of him as Minister of the department which was charged with the last expedition against the Malagasy suggests a sinister object. If M. de Mahy has the improbable experience of prolonged ministerial existence, we may expect renewed difficulties with Madagascar, and fresh expeditions from France to be sent thither. M. de Mahy seems to be possessed of two purposes—to rid Madagascar of English missionaries, and to seize the island for France. There would be cause for grave anxiety in our missionary societies if there were any probability of the Government of which M. de Mahy is a member having a long lease of life.

We commented some months ago upon the appalling revelations made by Canon Franklin, of Newcastle, in regard to the life of street children in that large town. We are glad to learn that a practical result is likely to follow those pitiful revelations, and the expression of public opinion which they evoked. A Bill will be presented to Parliament for the regulation to some extent of street child life, the measure to apply to all towns in Great Britain with a population of over 30,000. According to its provisions, girls under eight years old will not be allowed to sell in the public streets, and boys under fourteen will be equally prohibited between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m. At present the committee have not agreed as to the hours during which girls over eight should be allowed to sell. In some cases such an Act would undoubtedly be productive of hardship, for there are instances in which children of very tender years have to become breadwinners; but they would be very few. The Bill will be a step in the right direction, and will no doubt strengthen the hands of those who are labouring to prevent cruelty to children.

It is not strange that secular papers should advocate the rationalising of the Lord's Day, and the opening of theatres for Sunday evening concerts, but it is surprising and deplorable that an evangelical clergyman should be found doing the same. We have before us a handbill announcing a Grand Sacred Concert by the Midget Minstrels, at the Exchange Rooms, with admission by tickets only, at prices varying from 6d. to 3s., the proceeds to be handed to a Rev. Canon for re-decorating and warming his church. This degrading of the Church of Christ to build itself up by the world's devices, is one of the surest ways to destroy her usefulness, and to bring the name of her Founder into contempt. While the instance above quoted happens to be in the Established Church, the same fatal method is no less to be found amongst the Nonconformist bodies. These earthly and sensuous methods must be abandoned, before the Church of Christ can go forth fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners.

The Croydon Advertiser says:—

> There was a good deal of the irony of fate about the presentation of prizes to the Croydon volunteers. That the wife of the vicar should be called upon to hand out orders for large quantities of beer and wines and spirits to prize winners in the Skating Rink Hall is one of those curious events which will happen sometimes. Almost as soon as Major Poole and his missioners had cleared out of the hall there arrived these bibulous compounds, or some of them, and Mrs. Braithwaite gracefully distributed them to the successful volunteers. The ink on all the teetotal texts and announcements on the walls seemed to start from the paper when Quartermaster-sergeant Ebbutt read out the series of intoxicants which formed many of the prizes. Sad! very sad!

Reporting the same event, The Croydon Guardian states that

> Rev. J. M. Braithwaite briefly thanked them on behalf of his wife and himself, and said that was one of the pleasantest duties his wife had had to perform since she had been in Croydon.

Mr. Braithwaite is the vicar of St. John's parish church, Croydon. A correspondent also informs us that "more than once meetings have had to be put off that a dancing class might be held." Can it be that Mr. Braithwaite has mistaken his calling?

It must strike everyone that all the various modes of Christian service, whether in evangelistic work at home or in missionary enterprise abroad, are but indications of the work that might be done if the Church were awake to her privileges and responsibilities, rather than any adequate fulfilment of her mission in the world. We cannot alter this on a large scale, but each one can yield his members as instruments of righteousness to God, and so do his part in carrying out the eternal purpose of infinite love.

The praiseworthy movement in favour of the re-establishment of Irish village industries, such as tradition says one existed in every hamlet, has been brought before the notice of the Executive by an influential deputation. It is to be regretted, however, that the Chief Secretary is disposed to look coldly on the project. Citing the cases of Irish fisheries in the early part of the present century, which flourished only so long as they were subsidised by bounties, and of the Beleek pottery project, which, though established under most favourable auspices, languished and finally expired, he argued that cottage industries could only be kept alive by outside support. But, it may reasonably be asked, if subsidies have aided Ireland in the past, why should not this needed help be given now? The burden of such beneficent enterprises as those of Mrs. Ernest Hart in Donegal, and of Baroness Burdett-Coutts at Baltimore, co. Cork, should not be allowed to fall entirely upon private philanthropy.

Example is better than theory. A report recently published by the Foreign Office on "A working-men's colony in Wurtemberg" comes as a timely and practical help towards a partial solution of the grim problem of the unemployed. A farm of 160 acres near the Lake of Constance has been made into a self-supporting industrial colony for 150 destitute bonâ fide workmen of all trades, those unable or unwilling to work being rigidly excluded. The fundamental principle is that all who are admitted must be kept busily employed and obey the rules of the establishment; farm labourers are the most numerous of the inmates, but almost every kind of handicraft is represented; each is free to leave when he pleases, but may not remain longer than three months. Religious principles are observed, strict discipline is maintained, and everything required is made on the spot. The colony is thus neither an asylum for incapables, nor an overgrown casual ward, but a place where the honest workman may maintain his independence, and find employment and residence until he can obtain work. The marked success which has attended this "home colonisation" plan (which is also in operation in fifteen other places in Germany) should forcibly commend it to English attention as one means of relieving some of the present undeserved distress.

We have before now commented upon the cruel folly of dressing children "in the height of fashion," destroying in them that simplicity which ought to be the most prominent feature in childhood, and developing feelings of vanity which are wretched even in their elders. The Hospital has just called attention to what appears to be the most recent folly in connection with children's dress, the practice of cutting away the thick woollen stuff to "let in" thin silk or lace, and thereby inducing colds which may develop into bronchitis and consumption. "Children's dress," says our wise contemporary, "is a matter with which fashion should have little to do. Health and comfort should at any rate be the primary, if not the sole, consideration." There certainly is room for very much economy in expenditure upon children's dress, and we commend the above sensible opinions to the thoughtful attention of any who have erred in the other direction.

Not one girl in five of those who are under the control of the Poor Law Board in industrial and other schools, turns out well, yet their education, &c., cost the country £100 each; whereas of the children sent from Liverpool to Canada after a preliminary "boarding out" and time of training, it is asserted that only five in the hundred do badly. It is evidently false economy to continue to go upon the old lines in regard to the training and bringing up of our workhouse orphans and waifs; but even if the Liverpool scheme were more costly, as a Christian people we ought to apply it largely, seeing that the demoralising and destructive influences of the workhouses are potent in sending to destruction many of those who are subjected to them.

It is gratifying to note the development, year by year, of the scheme for boarding out pauper children. Few persons who know anything of what child life in workhouses must necessarily be, would hesitate in freeing the little ones from "the workhouse taint." The new arrangement is in the first instance a little more costly, but that is not of much moment, as the State must in the long run profit by the system. Even if the extra cost were of more importance, of what value would it be compared with the welfare of these little waifs? That there should be only 3040 such children as yet boarded out, points to a want of both sense and sympathy somewhere.

EAST-END FACTORY GIRLS.

Among the several friends at the East-end who have been taking special interest in the welfare of factory girls of the rougher type for some time is Mr. Chorley, of the North-east London Gospel Mission. The Girls' Institute of this Mission is in the Devons-road, Bow, surrounded by various large employers of girl labour, and in close proximity to the best-known match factories.

The premises in question comprise two warehouses thrown together of three stories each. The ground and first-floors only have been hitherto used, but consequent upon the need of more accommodation, the upper floor has now been fitted up with private rooms for a resident matron-visitor, and a dormitory for temporarily sheltering girls in distress from want of work, illness, or other cause, and serving as a Receiving Home for the Training Home at Enfield. The ground floor has has also been enlarged by the erection of a large kitchen for cooking and other purposes.

A gentleman has kindly undertaken to provide the first year's salary of the resident matron, and the expenses of the past year's work have been met. About £100 are required to meet the cost of these enlargements and for furnishing.

Classes are held for cutting out, mending, and making; free teas are given monthly, and a cup of warm cocoa is served free at the close of the spiritual exercises each evening the Institute is open.

Four homeless and friendless factory girls have recently been rescued from inevitable ruin, and are now in the Training Home in the country. Mr. Chorley's address is 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

JEWS IN PARIS.—Mr. L. C. Mamlock, 19, Cité des Fleurs, Batignolles, Paris, missionary of the London Jews Society, writes to thank friends who have sent tracts and leaflets for distribution among Jews in Paris. These publications are given away, and thankfully received by those who attend the meetings. On Wednesday afternoons a number of Jews and Jewesses visit Mr. Mamlock to ask Scripture questions, and for private religious conversation.

HOWARD-STREET MISSION.—Free meals are given at this Mission, New-road, Wandsworth-road, S.W., on Sunday mornings and week nights, to the destitute and the deserving poor of the neighbourhood. Distress is very prevalent, numbers of men being out of work. A Gospel service is held at the close of each meal. During the past fortnight several have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and some have signed the pledge. We need help to enable us to continue the free meals.

John Soames, Superintendent.

CARDIFF STRANGERS' REST. — The fifth annual report of this Sailors' Home is of unusual interest; it gives instances of the wonderful way in which God has dealt with casual visitors. In some cases evidence of abiding fruit has been found after many days; for other prodigals earnest prayer still goes up. During the year the attendances were over 40,000, and 680 pledges were taken, while 450 bags of books were given away. The hon. superintendent is Miss Tilly, 22, The Parade, Cardiff.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The seventeenth annual meeting of this Association took place at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Friday last, and in all respects proved a great success. The president, Mr. George Williams, occupied the chair. The proceedings commenced with a devotional service, conducted by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who gave a most appropriate address. He said a commercial traveller's life was beset by many temptations; but in his opinion the drinking customs were the cause of most of the troubles that befel him. The total abstainer certainly escaped many a snare. Good fellowship often made bad fellowship. A traveller needed all the religion he could get every day in the week. He should be an out-and-out Christian, taking Christ with him into his business and hotel life. While a traveller had difficulties, he also had privileges and many opportunities for doing good. A commercial traveller daily living a consistent Christian life might exert an influence for good on the road, the extent of which it is not possible to estimate.

This service was followed by the general meeting, at which the following gentlemen spoke:—Messrs. Henry Lea, W. J. Palmer, J. McCall, A. Pye-Smith, G. C. Davies, W. Hull-King, and P. J. Whitaker. The report gave evidence of the great success which has attended the operations of the Association during the year. Two hundred new members have been enrolled. Over £100 has been disbursed from the Beneficent Fund. Nearly 12,000 Bibles have been placed in commercial hotel bed-rooms by the Association since its commencement. An interesting feature was the presentation of a despatch-box to Mr. A. D. Slade, a member of the committee, but is now going as a missionary on the Congo.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—On Monday the special New Year's meeting for prayer on behalf of foreign missions was held in the Library of the Baptist Mission House, Furnival street Prayer was offered on behalf of the missionary work in the year just begun. Dr. Angus, speaking on the missionary work of the Apostles, said they preached that the only way to be saved was through Christ. Some people asserted that ministers needed no learning, understanding the fact that the Apostles were unlearned. This was an assertion of the enemies of the truth, for the disciples were very learned. At Pentecost many gifts were showered on them. Missionaries needed knowledge to convert nations. He considered much of the success of the Apostles was due to their love one to another.

ARTILLERY-LANE MISSION, E.—Fifteen years ago this Mission was commenced by distributing tracts among the inmates of some of the common lodging-houses in this neighbourhood. Thirteen lodging-houses are visited, and in the common kitchens of these the Gospel is preached to numbers of the most depraved men and women, varying from 200 to 500, according to the time of year. Many of these persons are constantly leaving for other parts of the city and country, fresh arrivals taking their places, so we seldom address the same audience on two successive Sundays. During the year we have been encouraged by seeing fruit manifested by thus sowing the seed beside all waters, and are convinced that the Holy Spirit, unknown to us, has imparted life to others. Through the kindness of friends and the Samaritan Society we give a free breakfast every Sunday morning during the winter to the absolutely destitute gathered in from the streets after midnight by some of our workers. At the meetings which followed at 11 o'clock, many professed conversion. We should like to have become better acquainted with these cases, but owing to their homeless condition this was impossible. Mothers' meetings, children's services, and house-to-house visitations have also borne good fruit. Some of the workers, students from Harley House, Bow, are leaving us for service in foreign lands, and two others have "fallen asleep;" so we shall most gladly welcome any brethren or sisters who may be led to help us. (Mrs.) S. Finn, Hon. Supt.

The Book World.

Probation after Death.

Protestant Purgatory: Can it be Proved? Rev. H. Lindsay Young. 1s. Wm. Hunt & Co. the expression "Protestant Purgatory" Mr. oung designates the view that for those who unsaved there is after death a further chance. at is not a very exact use of the word "Purga- ry," and in some details Mr. Young hardly does argument justice; but his pamphlet will be eful to place in the hands of any who are in- ned to think that there is a sound Scriptural sis for the hope of salvation after death.

The Catacombs of Rome.

One of the most complete and exhaustive works this subject, accessible to general readers, is that aring the above title, written by Rev. W. H. ithrow, M.A. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.). It ntains numerous illustrations, and many hun- eds of early Christian inscriptions, a large pro- rtion of which have never appeared in English. Believing that the testimony of the Catacombs hibits, more strikingly than any other evidence, e immense contrast between primitive Chris- inity and modern Romanism, the author thinks apology necessary for the somewhat polemical aracter of portions of this book which illustrate at fact. He trusts that it will be found a contri- tion of some value to the historical defence of e truth against the corruptions and innovations Popish error."

Egyptian Discoveries.

The Pharaohs of the Bondage and the xodus. 1s. T. Fisher Unwin. In these lectures r. Charles Robinson has here given us an admir- le and popular account of the greater discoveries ich have been made in Egypt during the present cade, and of the bearing that they have upon the idences for our faith. Seti and Rameses II., the araohs of the oppression, and Menepthah, the araoh of the Exodus, Pithom and Zoan, the discovered cities, will soon become household rds with Christian believers, for round them ngs many an answer to those who attack the riptures. Who would have thought that the tual bodies—even to the very features—of Seti and ameses should have been preserved uninjured rough thousands of years, and then come for- rd in this nineteenth century as witnesses of the uth?

Apologetics.

Present-day Tracts on Subjects of Chris- an Evidence, Doctrine, and Morals. By rious writers. Vol. ix. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract ciety. In this new volume of a most useful ries we have six "tracts" given to us. Among em is one by Principal Cairns, showing the incredibility of the various attempts that have en made to trace Christianity to a merely natural igin; and two on the Lord's Day, its true nature, d its evidential value. Perhaps, however, the ost practical is that by Mr. J. Kelly, the editor the series, on the present conflict with unbelief. is is both judicial and suggestive—not too en- uraging, we may remark, by any means; but, as rightly points out, there is no advantage, but atly the reverse, in our being ignorant of the tual rate of feeling prevalent with regard to ristianity. If we must err at all as to the mediate issue of the conflict—for there can be mistake about its ultimate issue—it is better to er-estimate the number of our opponents than to der-estimate it. This tract is, we may add, of ecial value for its numerous references to other cts of the same series already published, in ich the various points alluded to are dealt with re fully.

Present-day Tracts on the Non-Christian ilosophies of the Age. 3s. 6d. Religious act Society. This, like the volume containing cts on the Non-Christian Religions of the world, a special volume of the series; for it does not essarily contain tracts published in the last few nths, but it is a selection of those tracts which, ring the whole course of the publication of the ies, deal with the immediate subject of modern Christian philosophies. As such, it forms an ly convenient handbook. The tracts them- ves have been some time before the public, and ed no commendation from us. We are thankful have, in so convenient a form, short and trust- rthy guides on such subjects as Agnosticism, terialism, Herbert Spencer's Philosophy, Com- n, Utilitarianism, &c.

Quarles' Emblems.

Emblems: Divine and Moral. By Francis Quarles. Paterson, Lovell's-court, Paternoster-row. The writer, whose piety and power Toplady and Ryland praised so highly, and whom even cynical Pope described as "a great poet," will never lack readers and admirers. In an age which, in matters worldly and religious, bears an increasing likeness to the days of the Stuarts, Quarles' quaint pictures and pithy sayings may again do good service. In the present edition, the Latin mottoes are translated, short sayings of Christian fathers and saints are given, and the copper-plate engravings are admirably executed. The work must have been expensive; but we trust the benefit and the circulation will more than recompense the enterprising publisher.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

New Serials and New Series.

The new year brings with it, as usual, some fresh ventures into the overcrowded domain of literature. Wells and Pastures is a penny illustrated, published by Mr. W. Walters, 53, Paternoster-row. Its message is mainly to the unsaved and to the young: judging from the initial number, it will have many comforting words to speak to these, month by month.—The Children's Illustrated Magazine (Seeley & Co) is finely printed, attractively illustrated, and contains good reading matter, but it seems dear at 2d.—The Church Monthly (1d. 8, New Bridge-street, E.C.) is edited by Mr. F. Sherlock, and is designed "for parish localisation." It seems to contain a little bit of everything, and, of course, is decided in its temperance tone. A capital portrait of Dr. Benson is the frontispiece.—The Mother's Friend (1d. Hodder & Stoughton) begins a new series under the editorial guidance of Mrs. Reaney, whose individuality makes itself unmistakably felt in almost every page. In making her bow as editor, she avows an ambition to make the magazine worthy of its name, and we doubt not she will make good her intent.

For the Family.

One of the most attractive serial for the household is The Welcome. (6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.). The current issue begins with a new story, written by Edward Garrett. There is some very curious spiritualising in Mr. Baring-Gould's interpretation of the parable of the lost coin. The first of a series of papers on "Our Young Criminals," and one on "Student Life at Oxford," form part of an excellent budget. It is only needful to name the well-known favourites from the same publishing house: "British Workman," "Family Friend," "Mother's Companion," and "Friendly Visitor."—Some particulars are given in The Cottager and Artizan (R.T.S.) as to "Fires and Fire Brigades" that will interest the dwellers in large cities.—The Fireside (6d. Home Words Office), enlarged with the new year, keeps true to its title and its reputation. Dr. Guthrie is sketched as the first of a series of "Eminent Scotchmen." Mr. Bullock also sends out his attractive monthlies: "Day of Days," "Home Words," and "Hand and Heart"; the portrait of Mr. Samuel Morley, in the last-named, is not a success. In the same group we may mention "Old Jonathan" and "Sunshine."

For the Children.

Messrs. Partridge & Co. are to the front in this department. First of all there is the delightfully attractive Infant's Magazine (1d.) which gives a charming coloured picture, "Master John Bull." The Children's Friend (1d.) also has a coloured picture, besides a profusion of attractions, amongst which the prize competition will find favour. The Band of Hope Review (½d). has a thrilling poem, "A Drive for Life," finely illustrated. Here, too, the young readers are encouraged by prize questions and a prize literary competition.—In point of artistic excellence and varied reading of a general kind, Little Folks (6d. Cassell & Co.) must surely bear the palm. This number begins a new and enlarged series; the fresh features promised, and the many prize tournaments, ought to gain for it multitudes of new readers. We can only commend in a word the following well-established favourites: "Little Star" (1d. George Stoneman); "Our Little Dots" (1d. R.T.S.), with an exquisite coloured picture; and "Child's Companion and Juvenile Instructor" (with plate, 2d. Same publishers). Three excellent missionary serials for the young are "The Juvenile," "Juvenile Instructor," and "Children's Record," issued in connection with the London Missionary Society, the Church Missionary Society, and the Free Church of Scotland respectively.

For Young Men and Women.

The new magazine "A. 1" (6d. 62, Ludgate-hill) holds its ground well, and has many attractive features. The current monthly part gives particulars of special competitions, which are gaining such favour in these days. "The Spelling Chase" is a splendid exercise for writers, young and old, and there are certain to be hosts of competitors. "How Sam's Infidelity Failed" is a touching story, that has its message for young married people.—Our Own Gazette (1d. Same publishers) caters as brightly as ever for its particular clients, but seems to us rather lacking in the element of solidity.—That element is more conspicuous in The Home Friend (1d. Macniven & Wallace), though it lacks the pictorial sunshine.—The Young Men's Christian Magazine (1d. Menzies & Co.) is the organ of the Y.M.C. Associations and Fellowship Unions of Scotland. It aims at the development of spiritual life, as well as being a record of work.—The Young Man (1d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) is unconventional and "go-ahead," and by no means restricted in its views. The current issue has contributions from Dr. Clifford, Dr. Thain Davidson, and a second instalment of opinions by popular authors as to the best books.—The Girl's Own Paper and The Boy's Own Paper (6d. each. R.T.S.) continue to supply wonderful budgets of reading matter, specially interesting and appropriate to maidens and youths.

Evangelistic.

The British Messenger (1d. Drummond's Tract Depôt) is strong and clear in its presentation of Gospel truth. It has also many interesting notes of progress on Bible Classes. The same publishers continue to send out the two telling preachers in print, "Good News" and "The Gospel Trumpet."—The Herald of Mercy (½d. Morgan & Scott) keeps true to its rôle of telling out among the people, in varied notes, that the Christmas song is still echoing around the world.—The Tract Magazine (1d. Religious Tract Society) opens with a paper for the New Year by Rev. P. B. Power, and has among other good things a portrait and sketch of Mr. Spurgeon. Friendly Greetings (4d. Religious Tract Society) is a capital budget of illustrated readings for the people, largely in narrative form, and all pressing home some spiritual lesson.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Out of Self into Christ seems to us a simple and Scriptural guide to the attainment of a life of holy obedience. Written by a clergyman who for many years failed to find "the blessing," though he was seeking it, its few pages are full of practical suggestions as to hindrances to be avoided and means to be used, the most important of all means being the renunciation of self-will. (Elliot Stock).

We commended, on its first issue, Dr. Robert Anderson's able book on Human Destiny (Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d.), of which the second edition has just appeared. It is an exhaustive review and refutation of the opposing theories of Universalism and Annihilationism. We say exhaustive, not because every statement or suggestion is dealt with, but because each of the above theories is shown to be incompatible with the truth of Scripture as to the person and work of the Lord Jesus. Those who are troubled by these subjects should certainly read this treatise. In addition to the contradiction of the rival errors, the later chapters discard also many mediæval conceptions, and present welcome modifications of views once and even yet considered orthodox. The appendix has a series of helpful expositions of texts referred to in this controversy.

The Faith of the Gospel: a manual of Christian Doctrine. By Arthur James Mason, B.D. Rivingtons, 1888. Mr. Mason is, we believe, an earnest mission preacher and a truly godly man, rejoicing in his personal acceptance by God, but we wish that he were not so imbued with High Church doctrines. Yet this volume is not by any means made up of the ordinary High Church views. It draws even more from Martensen than from the Anglican divines. It is, in fact, Martensen made popular and mixed with Anglicanism. That the volume contains much which ordinary theological readers will find new, we do not deny; but we should have liked to see in Mr. Mason more personal originality of thought and less dependence on two or three names, however great. Prayers for the dead, a Propitiatory Sacrifice in the Holy Communion, doubts of the validity of this Sacrament elsewhere than in a church which has the Apostolical Succession, are some of the errors which Mr. Mason teaches. But we are thankful to be able to add that he shows a real appreciation of the need of conversion, and of the privilege of assurance of present forgiveness.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The Camden Town Association signalised Christmas this year by an early breakfast on Sunday week, when the members were addressed by Mr. Russell Hurditch.

Gospel addresses by Mr. Burn, the general secretary, and Mr. Putteril, financial secretary, at the Aldersgate-street branch, are being given on Friday evenings this month.

The Zurich Association opened on December 4 a building containing a recreation-room and a hall seating 250, the latter to be used for active mission work among young men.

A "Y.M.C.A. Japan Mission Band" has been proposed by some young men connected with Association work in Ontario. It is designed to have it on the plan of the China Inland Mission.

The Leicester Association has been actively at work during the past year. To many it has been a home with congenial companions. The religious work forms a prominent feature in the programme. Mr. Alfred Orchin is the secretary.

The Beckenham Association has grown considerably of late. In February, 1885, the members numbered twenty-four and at present there are 101 members and associates. On 31st December Mr. W. Spencer Walton began a ten days' mission, to conclude with a Missionary Conference.

The Y.M.C.A.'s of the United States possess 121 buildings valued at 5,500,000 dollars. There are 258 College Y.M.C.A.'s in the land. In these institutions there are 38,000 students; 18,000 are professing Christians, and 1800 are reported as having accepted Christ during the past year.

Mr. Henry Thorne recently paid a fruitful visit to Bradford; the evangelistic meetings and Bible-readings were alike signally blessed. During the visit of the evangelist, a council was formed, representing various religious organisations, to co-operate with the Y.M.C.A. in aggressive Christian work.

At the Aldersgate-street Association, last Sunday afternoon, Mr. George Williams delivered the customary New Year's address to young men; he has given these addresses uninterruptedly for thirty-five years. He was glad, he said, to record that the Institution still continues to enjoy manifestations of God's blessing and favour. New branches are springing up on all sides, and with these agencies are multiplying having for their object the building up of true, real men after the peerless pattern and ideal of the man Christ Jesus. In spite of the progress, he was mindful that never were the calls for service louder than now, and never greater the need of personal effort for Christ. The members of the Y.M.C.A. should ever strive for first and foremost places in the great army of Christian workers.

The interest in foreign missions amongst Y.M.C.A.'s in Ulster has been much increased by the recent tour of Mr. T. W. Pigott, of the China Inland Mission. During eighteen days he addressed twenty-four meetings and upwards of 7000 individuals on the "needs of China." His lectures were both instructive and entertaining, and were listened to with deep attention by his audiences. Through Mr. Pigott's heart-stirring words many have had an interest awakened in China and its perishing millions. An interesting incident was that of a wee girl, who at the close of the lecture in Belfast came forward to the gentleman who was selling books at the door. With one penny she purchased a copy of "China's Millions," and then shyly gave her remaining twopence to send the Gospel to China. Mr. Pigott purposes sailing from London for China on the 28th of this month.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For mission services at Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, during the present month, by Mr. Charles Inglis.——For a mission being held at St. Ann's, Nottingham, conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris, to Jan. 10.——For blessing on special services, by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Sherston, Wilts. United services of various congregations, to commence on Thursday, Jan. 5, for five days.——For blessing on special meetings, to be conducted by Mr. Richard Weaver, in Hawick, N.B., commencing on Feb. 12.——For an Italian Christian gentleman, that the Lord may graciously restore him to comparative ease from great pain and suffering.——On behalf of a popular music-hall comic singer, who is under deep conviction of sin.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE KING OF SIAM has given to the American Baptist Mission at Bangkok the sum of £48,000 for school and hospital purposes.

JERUSALEM.—The British and Foreign Bible Society's evangelist-colporteur stationed here has been imprisoned by the Turkish authorities for visiting two Moslem villages.

GUERNSEY.—M. Godel says they have had a joyful revival in Guernsey from one end of the island to the other. This movement was the answer to special prayer, without recourse having been had to any extraordinary means.

RUSSIA.—During the Czar's stay in Copenhagen, the Evangelical Alliance sent an address to him, calling his attention to the attempts against religious liberty in the Baltic provinces. What the result, if any, may be is not yet known.

A HYMN-BOOK FOR THE ZULUS.—Rev. Charles W. Kilbon, of the American Board's Zulu Mission, has been in the United States for two years, preparing a hymn and tune book in the Zulu language, which is now ready. It contains about 250 hymns, and, owing to the peculiarity of the language, both hymns and tunes have had to be largely reconstructed.

FRANCE.—The prize of virtue, given yearly by the French Academy, has this year been awarded to M. Delannoy, a Calais pilot. This intrepid sailor has under most perilous circumstances saved the lives of many shipwrecked men and women. He is the recipient of every suitable acknowledgment of his bravery, among others of the Legion of Honour by the Minister of Marine.

LEPERS IN INDIA.—Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh, secretary of the Mission to Lepers in India, writes: From Chamba mission of the Established Church of Scotland, I heard by last mail, of five baptisms; from Lohardugga, Gossner's mission, of five more; and a few weeks back from Pithora (N.W.P.), American Methodist Episcopal mission, of twelve more.

BERLIN.—Like London, the central parts of this ever-increasing city are devoted almost exclusively to business, the inhabitants living in the suburbs. Church accommodation has not, however, kept pace with the needs of the population. To build new churches an ecclesiastical tax of 5 per cent. has been imposed by the Synods, the six lower classes of the people being exempted; 45,500 persons have thus paid about £11,500, which falls far short of the required amount.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION. — Seven men and women were recently baptized in India. There are more to follow. A dozen of our people visited two heathen feasts, and disposed of about 2000 New Testaments and Gospels. In our nine dispensaries, patients from 103 villages were attended, during the last six months, removing much suffering. Miss Hollzer arrived safely at Bethel on November 15, and is just now in camp twenty miles north from Bethel with several preachers.
A. HAEGERT, Secretary.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN CHINA.—In China there are among the different Protestant denominations seventy-nine persons who devote themselves chiefly to medical work. Twenty-seven of these are women. They have formed a Medical Missionary Association, which issues monthly The China Medical Missionary Journal, containing valuable papers from native and foreign physicians of high standing. The articles by the Chinese doctors—themselves Christians—in the Chinese language, will have a wide influence among their countrymen in removing the prejudice against foreign physicians.

LIBERIA.—Charles H. J. Taylor, Minister of the United States to Liberia, has tendered his resignation, to take effect in January. One reason for his resignation, he said, was the dangerously unhealthy climate. He had also been disappointed in the character of the civilised negroes sent over there. He said, "Instead of a majority of the civilised negroes being honest, sober, industrious, and self-reliant, I found a condition of things that diplomatic reserve will not allow me to state. The native Africans are superior in every way to the civilised negroes sent there, and are susceptible to the highest civilisation."—Evangelist.

STUDENTS IN BOSTON.—It is gratifying to notice the formation in Boston of an association of students for a weekly prayer-meeting. These students, about twenty-five in number, represent the different educational institutions of the city and vicinity. Delegates were present at the first meeting from Harvard Medical School, Harvard University, Harvard Divinity School, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Newton Theological Seminary, the Law School, Medical School, School of Theology, and College of Liberal Arts of Boston University. To these new names are being continually added, and there is reason to hope that this student prayer-meeting may increase in spirituality and good works as in numbers.

C.M.S. WORK IN EAST AFRICA. — The East African mail which came in on Monday, December 19, says The Rock, brought somewhat serious tidings. It seems that both the Uyui and Msalala missions must be for a while abandoned. For some time past Ngata, a chief at Msalala, has been pestering Mr. Wise, the missionary there, for hongo, and at last he made a demand for three hundred doti and five guns, saying that if the missionary would not satisfy his demand they must prepare by the following morning to fight or flee. When the mail left, about October 4, the threatened attack had not been made, but the missionaries were busy packing up, and were uncertain what might happen next. Fortunately, Mr. Mackay, from Uganda, was at Msalala, and could give the benefit of his long experience and intimate acquaintance with native character. Troubles with natives are also reported from Sagalla, where Messrs. Wray and Morris are stationed.

ALGIERS.—I have been in Algiers nearly a year now, and the Lord has blessed me, I have baptized four persons, one Arab, and three French people in the sea, and have organised a little church in "an upper room." To-day I have rented a hall in which to have meetings at night. One of the French baptized is an intelligent, consecrated Christian, who feels called of God to give his time to preaching the Gospel. I ask the prayers of God's people for this city. C. L. POWELL.
Algiers, 2, Rue de la Révolution, Dec. 20.

SPAIN.—In one of the most inaccessible parts of the Sierra Morena a little evangelical church has been formed. One of the villagers received a New Testament from one of the colporteurs at Granada, which, on his return, he read and explained as best he could to his neighbours. The religious knowledge, sincere piety, and Christian life of these people astonished an evangelist who visited them. They were not left without persecution; every effort was made to force them to return to the Romish Church. They remained steadfast, and are now left in peace.

THE MUEZZIN'S CALL.—The weird sunset hour passed while the breeze coming up from the ocean brought to the senses the perfume of the walled gardens which lie in the country outside Tangier. Suddenly above the hum of the motley crowd was heard the report of a cannon, a white flag darted up to the top of the minaret, and the long plaintive notes of the muezzin were heard calling the people to prayer. "Hark!" said the Hadj. "Do you hear him? What a magnificent voice he has to reach us here?" It was as the Hadj remarked. Every tone came out clear as a bell on the soft evening air, and the people around, one after another, fell upon their knees, struck their turbaned heads thrice to the ground, and breathed forth their Moslem vesper. The moor is never ashamed of his religion, nor does he allow the exigencies of business or the fascinations of pleasure to interfere with his devotions.—New York Observer.

Mission Appeals.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE.—Would your readers kindly send me 1000 Gospel books to give to the 2nd 60th Rifles on their departure to the North of Ireland? During their stay in Shorncliffe Camp many have professed faith in the Saviour.—H. BULL.

OLD FORD, LONDON, E.—I am anxious to give one hundred deserving poor families in this parish a warm blanket and a sack of coals. Will your readers help? The amount necessary is £35; I would prefer to receive the blankets or coal orders.—ANNIE SETON ADAMSON, The Vicarage, Old Ford, E.

READING FOR THE BLIND.—Dr. MOON's work of embossing the Scriptures, &c., in his type for the blind is greatly needing funds. This work has widely increased, and many thousands of the blind of our own land, and a large number in America and Australia and many other countries are now reading for themselves their precious Bible. Many of the readers are 60, 70, and 90 years of age. Dr. MOON's address is 104, Queen's-road, Brighton.

DISTRESS IN DUBLIN.—Some ninety Protestant heads of families, widows, &c., receive aid each Friday and Sunday evening at Trinity Church, Dublin. Without it many would die of hunger, want, and cold. There are ladies absolutely starving in cold, fireless garrets. There are Irish ladies of gentle birth at this moment in the pauper lunatic asylums, driven mad by want; no rents paid. Any donation gladly received by J. DUNCAN CRAIG, D.D., Minister of Trinity Church, Lower Gardiner-street, Dublin.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

This patient wrote me in December, 1886. She had lost two brothers by this fell disease. She had been ailing for three years, and had gradually got worse. The cough had now become violent, expectoration profuse, pure fluid blood was brought up, severe pains in the side were felt, accompanied by oppressed breathing, hectic flushes and palpitations. She had lost flesh in all parts of the body, and become exceedingly weak; the appetite had utterly failed, and nothing would digest. "I am recommended (she writes) by Mrs. McKintosh here, who knows of hundreds of cases cured by your treatment."

The Rev. John Ross, Free Church minister, of Staer, writing on behalf of the patient at this time, says:—"She has been known to me from her earliest childhood. She is sorely affected with Consumption—of which two of her brothers died. I trust that her circumstances will be taken into consideration, and all be done for her that can be done."

In the spring she writes:—"My cough is much easier, and I am generally improving. Many thanks for your great kindness."

Subsequent letters report a continued progress to recovery, and in a letter dated Sept. 19, a friend, Mrs. McKenzie, speaking of her, says:—"Annie McLeod was far advanced in Consumption before applying to you, and is now restored to good health."

In a letter dated Nov. 16, the patient writing again, says:—"Since I recovered I have not been one day from my usual work. You will be surprised to hear that I lately walked nineteen miles in seven hours and a half. I could wish from the bottom of my heart that all suffering from chest disease would come to you. May God spare you many years. You are welcome to publish my case."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS:

President of the "Women's National Christian Temperance Union of America."
With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER;
And a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.
CLOTH BOARDS, 2/6; WITH GILT EDGES, 3/-.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is most touching and interesting; so thoroughly natural and unconventional was her life and the expression of her thoughts. It is good to see how, through all the different modes of thought and teaching, and many mistakes perhaps all round, God draws hearts to rest in Him, and trains characters to serve Him."—Home Friend.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings; and the portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."

Letters to the Editor.

A HOSPITAL FOR THE NORTH SEA.

ir,—A colony of 12,000 men, without a single tor in their midst, is a conception a little diffi- t to realise. Yet it is a fact that the North Sea acksmen are, for eight weeks at a stretch, cut entirely from all home ties and comforts and various privileges of the land, and are, by son of the hazardous nature of their occupation, posed to constant and grave peril to life and b. They labour night and day amid furious rms and bitter cold, and the cases of illness accident—fractures, contusions, &c.—are so merous as to appal an average landsman.

or many years there was no succour for the r fellows, and we have before us details of cases which patients suffering from severe compound ctures were perforce detained at sea for a week n one instance thirteen days—before obtaining benefit of surgical treatment; and, under the st favourable conditions, a patient was two days' from the nearest doctor.

his state of things naturally involved a very ious, and, in our opinion, a most unnecessary, rifice of valuable lives; for many men were so lly injured as to be quite unable to survive the ck to the system caused by prolonged neglect exposure. Immediate aid would, in many of se cases, have meant just all the difference ween life and death; but the original malady been greatly aggravated by reason of the ab- ce of skilled assistance.

he eight vessels equipped by this Mission to ise with the trawling fleets are all fitted with ell-supplied medicine closet and surgical chest, the dispensary practice carried on so zealously our skippers—each of whom is fully instructed certificated—has proved an unspeakable boon the toilers; many a rough fisherman has been luenced for his eternal good as a result of skilful and kindly treatment of his bodily ail- nts.

t would be impossible, within the limits of this ter, to give details of the various cases; but the re mention of last year's aggregate — 3633 ients, or more than 25 per cent. of the total mber of North Sea smacksmen—will convince r readers that an enormous amount of suffering been alleviated, and they will not wonder that fisherman cry, "God bless the Mission Ships!"

What has been already accomplished, however, ly compels the conclusion that the means hitherto opted are utterly inadequate, and that a new parture is urgently necessary.

We have at various times been favoured by the its of medical men on board the Mission ships, much of our success in this important depart- nt of the work is owing to the wise counsel and ive help of these gentlemen.

It must, therefore, be conceded that the constant sence of a surgeon in the fleets, combined with rther facilities for the treatment of serious cases illness and accident on board the Mission ship, the retention there of the patients in cots pro- led for their reception, would prove of the most advantage to the thousands of poor fellows o are gashed, bruised, battered, and frequently ffering from severe illness while occupied in reap- the harvest of the sea for our tables.

The Hospital Committee of the Mission to Deep a Fishermen are most anxious to carry out what y consider to be the only suitable method of quately meeting the distressing need of these ousands of our fellow-countrymen, and the ility and practicability of the proposed extension not be doubted.

It is proposed to build and equip a new Mission ssel, which shall in every particular meet the quirements of the case, and serve the purpose of loating hospital. Her Majesty the Queen has aciously signified her deep interest in the scheme, expressed a wish that the proposed vessel ould bear the name of Queen Victoria. She has rther consented to become the Patron of the ission, and has contributed £50 to the funds.

We now ask your valued aid in placing before public the facts of the case, as vouched by ose whose experience in the fleets has made them e-witnesses of the terrible sufferings to which brave fellows are exposed. The Council of s Mission are profoundly impressed with the gent need of suitably crowning the work so well gun, but at present their hands are absolutely d by lack of the funds necessary for carrying recommendations of the Hospital Committee. Will not the British public, who profit by the smacksmen's toil, contribute at this season to the help and healing of those whose life, at best, is hard and comfortless?

PRAYER FOR A LEADER.

Sir,—In these days of rebuke and blasphemy, when on every side the enemy comes in like a flood, and the standard-bearers are fainting, and men's hearts are failing them for fear, we hear many voices asking, "What can we do?" There are many most desirable things we cannot do. There is one very easy thing which we can all do. Let us all plead earnestly with God to raise us up a leader, social, ecclesiastical, or political, or all three, who shall be a man after His own heart, and shall do all his pleasure; and to open our eyes that we may recognise him when he comes. Surely this is a prayer which can be offered without any distinction of denomination or party. And if offered with heartfelt confession of our national sins, and honest desire that the Lord would save England, who can tell what a blessing it may bring upon us? Let us so pray.

Emily S. Holt.

[This is a modern incentive to a very old prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus: come quickly." He is the Leader, social, ecclesiastical, and political, Whom God has made "a Leader and Commander to the peoples." He is the "Man after God's own heart, who shall do all his pleasure." Truly the prayer for his coming will bring "the Desire of all nations" to his rightful throne.—Ed.]

PRAYING FOR THE DEAD.

Dear Sir,—This Popish doctrine has been brought forward in the most unblushing manner lately, and more particularly in connection with the decease of the late Mr. Mackonochie, of St. Albans, Holborn, who recently perished in the snow in the Highlands of Scotland. I read in the London papers that the body had been deposited in the Chapel of St. Sepulchre, that prayers for the dead were being offered, and that the ladies of the congregation were watching by the body day and night. A Churchman spoke of him to me as a man who went much among the poor, and I quite believe that he was a man full of alms-deeds, and good works.

Now, if these self-denying labours sprang from faith in our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and love to Him, their late pastor is as surely "with Christ" as was the thief on the cross, to whom the dying Saviour said, "To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise;" or, as Lazarus, the sorely afflicted beggar, of whom the Lord affirms that he died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. That being the case, what a grievous slander Mr. Mackonochie's best friends are perpetrating upon his memory; and, more than that, are they not calling in question Christ's power to save to the very uttermost all that come unto God by Him? Who would ever dream of praying for the believing beggar, safe in Abraham's bosom? or for the believing thief, safe with Christ in Paradise? Who would think of praying for the great cloud of witnesses spoken of in Heb. xi., who died in faith, and who, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with all their sins and shortcomings, are now, by the saving power of our once crucified, but now risen and glorified, Redeemer, sitting, or sat down in the kingdom of heaven? What could we sinners do for them by our prayers, beyond what Christ has already done for them?

On the other hand, who, in the face of what Christ has said regarding the condition of the rich man who lifted up his eyes in hell being in torments, with a great gulf fixed between him and the sacred beggar, would hope to accomplish or effect by their prayers a crossing for the lost spirit beyond what Christ declares to be a great gulf fixed over which neither the one nor the other can pass? It would appear, then, that praying for the dead is a meaningless, unscriptural piece of will-worship.

The origin of it is not far to seek, as is the case with the most of the doctrines of the Romish Church, namely, the enriching of the priests. At the death-beds of their deluded followers the so-called fathers in God are to be found influencing the expiring men or women by the terrors of purgatory, to devote a large slice of their substance for the early release of their souls from the fires of Hades. But this praying for the dead is the legitimate outcome of the "Larger Hope" doctrine which is simply a modern thought name for purgatory. The men of this school profess to evolve their teaching from the love of God, in spite of the plain words of Christ, "He that believeth on the Son hath life, he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

R. S.

THE QUEEN AND THE POPE.

Sir,—The act of the Queen in sending a personal congratulation and gift to "His Holiness," the Pope, has, I believe, given pain to every loyal subject.

The Queen holds her position as the very head of those who, in the sight of God, declare his claims to be blasphemous and his practice idolatrous. I do not enter into the question which is right; but I cannot conceive of more flagrant trifling with all truth than to treat blasphemy and idolatry as a matter for congratulation, because it may have been carried on for fifty years. The charge is either the grossest slander, to be repented in dust and ashes, or the act of congratulation the most daring mockery of the Almighty I can conceive.

Neither can I see how the character of the act can be extenuated. The Pope has no temporal sovereignty; the Pope, as such, has no Jubilee. It is an act altogether going out of the way to recognise the priesthood of a sacrifice for discountenancing which as blasphemous and idolatrous the imperial crown of this realm descended on the Queen encircled with a coronation oath. The gift and its superscription are personal if published reports are to be trusted, and the Pope's pointed reference to their character is, they would serve for his "Jubilee mass."

I am, Sir, in common, I doubt not, with thousands upon thousands of others.—Yours, pained and alarmed beyond expression, M. H. Synge.

Southsea, December 31.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY STUDENTS.

Dear Sir,—In the opinion of a small, but increasing, minority of students here, the paragraph which appeared in The Christian of December 23, entitled "University Students," is likely to give its readers a wrong impression of the true state of religion in this University. The report referred to omits to mention what appears to have made as much impression on the meeting as anything else that was said at it. Its closing sentence runs as follows:—"The meeting was unanimous in its opinion that strenuous individual effort on the part of the students was the only way in which real permanent good could be done." Dr. Hardyman, who has just succeeded Dr. Paterson as resident Doctor at the Cowgate Dispensary, spoke in a very different strain, and he is certainly not biassed against the meetings, for, he tells me, he has rarely missed an opportunity of being present when in Edinburgh. He has been out of town for the last few days, and had not arrived many minutes, after a long railway journey, when he consented to put to paper, as nearly as he could remember, what he said. I give his own words:—

"I think I can give you a reason why not so many fellows are turning up at the meetings. A number of fellows who took a prominent part in the work, and who got what seemed to be a great blessing, have fallen back again; and these men have had influence on their fellow-students. It is sad to know, and makes the heart of every true Christian man amongst us sore when we think of it. Now, why have these men fallen away? I believe it is because they have not been building their faith on the true foundation. They were happy because they thought they had got what they wanted. But the only true foundation is the Atonement, and that has not been preached in my hearing at any of the meetings."

A dead silence followed these words; a silence which was not broken by Professor Drummond, but which we are still waiting for him to break. And not only we, but the readers of The Christian, and indeed the whole Christian public who have been in any way influenced by Professor Drummond's teaching, have a right to expect him to speak.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of St. Albans is suffering from illness caused by overwork, and has been ordered complete rest.

Rev. Robert Duckworth, head master of St. Peter's School, Weston-super-Mare, dropped dead at Dawlish on Saturday morning.

The Church Army has despatched its first three working men missionaries to India. Some of the worst characters at home are being reached.

Rev. F. R. Conder, who has for some time been helping Canon MacColl at St. George's, Botolph-lane, has been received into the Church of Rome by Father Bernard Vaughan.

Rev. James Johnson, native pastor of the Church Missionary Society at Lagos, West Africa, sends to The Record a lengthy letter replying to Canon Taylor's statements with reference to Mohammedanism.

The unemployed of Sheffield attended the parish church in a body on Christmas Day, and at the close of his sermon Archdeacon Blakeney invited eighty of them to take supper with him the following evening.

Dr. Walsham How, Bishop of Bedford, has received £700, which has been subscribed for a memorial of the late Mrs. Walsham How, which he intends to devote to the Walthamstow Home for Girls, in which his late wife was greatly interested.

It is noted as a strange coincidence that Rev. "Father" Lowder, the colleague of Mr. Mackonochie at St. George's-in-the-East, passed away, far from all his friends, in a village in the Austrian Tyrol, just as his associate and friend had died in the Scotch Highlands.

There has been a serious outbreak of cholera in Shanghai and Ningpo. Out of the small congregation of seventy persons of the Church Missionary Society at Shanghai, eight have been called away. A son of Archdeacon Moule and the infant daughter of Rev. J. Bates have died.

At St. Paul's, Upper Norwood, every Sunday afternoon, one of the curates, Rev. T. Taylor Smith, conducts a service intended for young people above the class that usually go to Sunday-school, and whose religious training is often sadly neglected. This service lasts about fifty minutes. So great is the interest created that, on a recent Sunday, the congregation, some of whom came long distances, numbered nearly seven hundred.

BAPTIST.

On Christmas Day Rev. T. W. Medhurst baptized fourteen persons at Lake-road Church, Portsmouth.

In Dr. Clifford's congregation at Westbourne Park the sick and poor are systematically looked after by the visitors.

Mr. A. G. Brown's twenty-first anniversary as pastor of the East London Tabernacle was held on Monday evening; we hope to give a detailed notice in our next.

It was announced on Sunday morning at the Metropolitan Tabernacle that Mr. Spurgeon intended to be amongst his flock on Sunday next, and to preach both morning and evening. On Monday, 9th instant, there will be a public meeting and tea at the Tabernacle to welcome Mr. Spurgeon home, and to celebrate the issue of his two thousandth sermon in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle pulpit.

Preaching to young men at Bloomsbury Chapel on Sunday night, Rev. James Baillie said he hoped all manly Christians would set their faces like a flint against the attempt to repopularise prize-fighting. The Prince of Wales might pat John Sullivan on the back as if he were an honourable man, but Christian men and women—England's patriots—could only look with scorn and contempt on the men who would brutalise our manhood by prize-fighting.

METHODIST.

Great blessing has attended revival services at Willington, Hanley, Leeds, Radcliffe (Bolton), Oldham.

Rev. Charles Garrett's work in Liverpool amongst the railway-men and their wives is being much blessed.

Rev. A. M'Aulay and Mr. William Sampson safely arrived at Kingston, Jamaica, on December 4, and immediately commenced their evangelistic labours in the island.

The health of Rev. R. W. Burnett, Primitive Methodist missionary at Fernando-Po, who has been seriously ill, is somewhat improved, but he will be unable to stay in Africa much longer.

Rev. William Rudd, aged eighty-three, superannuated Primitive Methodist minister of Diss, died suddenly in the pulpit of the Methodist chapel at New Buckenham, on Sunday night, while in the act of giving out a hymn.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, his wife, and some friends were early on Sunday morning attacked by some young gentlemen in Piccadilly. Describing the occurrence, Mr. Hughes said he and his party left the hall after the Watch Night service, and on coming into Piccadilly were mobbed by scores of well-dressed young men, most of them intoxicated. They conducted themselves in a riotous and disorderly fashion, greatly to the annoyance of those who had attended the service. They were violently assaulting everybody, and one of them stumbled and fell against Mrs. Hughes. Mr. Hughes said he had resolved to write to Sir Charles Warren complaining of the non-interference of the police. Poor men in such a condition would have been locked up at once. Mr. Hughes suggested that good men should enrol themselves as "special constables" on such occasions, and do their best to put down the vice of intemperance. "If," concluded Mr. Hughes, "we could clear the streets of these drunken and riotous young men, we should not long be troubled with 'unfortunates' of the other sex."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Francis Samuel Davis is paying an acceptable visit of a few weeks to Cambridge in connection with the work there.

The Australian Friend is making its way at the Antipodes, and is at once an evidence and cause of increased zeal among the Friends there.

H. J. Clotworthy is at present conducting an evangelistic mission in the Friends' Meeting House, Long Sutton, Somerset. The door seems wide open for service.

George Wood, of Luton, has been actively engaged in two series of meetings, at Scholes and Rawdon, in Yorks. Considerable interest was evoked, and converting power rested on the work.

On Mount Lebanon the work moves steadily on. At Brumana and Beit Mary, meetings for worship are regularly held. Patients waiting at the hospital are told of Christ, and among the various day and Sunday-schools the Gospel is earnestly spoken and taught.

SALVATION ARMY.

In future the "little soldiers" will be known as "junior soldiers," and The Little Soldier will be called The Young Soldier.

Commissioner Tucker writes that he has now two officers "prospecting" in China, with a view to commencing work there.

All the World says that in Sweden the Army people are mostly welcomed with open arms, and souls in crowds give themselves to the Saviour.

"Lieutenant" Franklin writes from South Africa that God is blessing the work of the Army throughout the length and breadth of that land.

The annual report states that there are now at home and abroad 2262 corps with 5684 officers. During last year 1,810,380 meetings were held, and 2,717,880 houses were visited.

The Army, writes the Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom, is going on persevering, diving into depths that no others could sound. There are sixty-four stations and outposts of the Army in France.

A scheme is on foot for providing cheap food and dormitories for the starving poor. Premises have been taken in Limehouse, and good wholesome food, as well as warm and clean sleeping accommodation, will be supplied at prices within the reach of the poorest.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. William E. Goward, of Hackney College, has been ordained a missionary of the London Missionary Society to the South Pacific.

A large number of persons were admitted into fellowship at New Court Chapel last Sunday evening. Most of them had been converted during the mission recently held there by Rev. Robert Balgarnie.

As a result of a recent conference held by the two denominations, in the Gloucester and Hereford County Unions, the Mission Church at Kingston has been amalgamated with the Baptist Church in the same place, amid the best of feeling.

The returns of the Congregational Union of England and Wales show that there are now 4501 churches and mission stations, as against 4461 reported last year, the total number of ministers being 2685; the entire sitting accommodation is given at 1,625,600.

On Sunday morning Rev. Henry Simon, the newly-appointed pastor of Harecourt Chapel, preached his inaugural sermon. Mr. Simon is wêlcomed to Harecourt because of a successful pastorate there in conjunction with the late Dr. Raleigh. There was a very large congregation, to whom the rev. gentleman delivered an impressive address from St. Paul's Epistle to the Thessalonians, "Brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified."

PRESBYTERIAN.

An excellent work amongst the poor is being carried on in connection with the church at Bermondsey, S.E.

Mr. John F. Gartshore, of Glasgow, has been ordained a missionary of the U.P. Church to Old Calabar, West Africa.

Dr. Aird, of Creich, N.B., has declined the nomination to the moderatorship of the next Free Church of Scotland Assembly.

An influential committee has been formed for the purpose of raising a monument to Dr. Duff, the Indian missionary, in his native town of Moulin.

Rev. D. Ferguson, minister of the Free Church, Westerdale, near Thurso, while preaching in the church in the afternoon of Christmas day, sat down in the pulpit, remarking, "I can say no more," and died almost immediately.

The new mission in connection with Willesden Presbyterian Church commenced some six months ago, continues to prosper, and the efforts are much appreciated by the people of the neighbourhood. The present meeting-room is found to be too small, and Rev. James Durran, Craven-park, Willesden, will be glad to hear from any church which has an iron building it can dispense with.

St. Andrew's Church, Chatham, was crowded on a late Sunday evening, when the pastor, Rev. S. D. Scammell replied to a lecture recently delivered in Chatham by Mr. C. Bradlaugh, M.P., entitled, "Justification of Scepticism." Many Secularists were present. At the close of the service, several young men remained to testify of a great change which they had experienced that evening in respect of the Christian religion.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. J. S. McDade. Methodist general missionary, has held evangelistic services in Longford. There were anxious souls at every meeting.

Rev. Charles Inwood, Methodist Conference evangelist, has concluded a successful series of mission services in Dungarvon and Youghal.

Rev. Dr. W. Pakenham Walsh, bishop of Ossory, has published a New Year's address to Sunday-school teachers, entitled, "How to Build."

The Belfast Free Breakfast Mission is doing an excellent work. During the past year it provided 7153 poor persons with a breakfast free of charge.

The annual sermon to the Belfast Y.M.C.A. was preached on Sunday evening week, in Rosemary-street Church, Belfast, by Rev. Wm. Park, M.A.

Evangelistic services have been held in the Methodist Mission Room, Sydenham, Belfast, by Rev. G. W. Rea. The meetings have been well attended, and some have been led to the Saviour.

The Presbyterian Orphanage at Ballina, of which Rev. Mr. Armstrong is the superintendent, and which has been doing a good work in the West of Ireland for many years past, is now quite full.

The late Mr. Denis Crofton, of Dublin, has bequeathed a sum of £10,000 to the Representative Body of the Irish Episcopal Church, and has also left £15,000 to found in Africa a missionary institution bearing his name.

Mr. William Henderson, a man of honour, integrity, and greatly beloved by those who knew him, and who had been for thirty years a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church at Duneane, has just died in the eighty-fourth year of his age.

The Week of Prayer is being almost universally observed by the Protestant churches in Ireland this week; it is pleasing to know that not only in Dublin and Belfast, but in many of the smaller towns it will take the form of united services.

Many of the Presbyterian Churches in the South and West of Ireland have suffered severely during the past year from emigration and agricultural depression, and it is believed that the Assembly will have to change its system in dealing with the wants of this part of the country.

A series of evangelistic services, which have been much owned of God, have just been held on the Sligo Methodist circuit. The meetings were largely attended, and it is believed that not a few persons were brought to the Saviour, while the spiritual life of many others was greatly quickened.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. D. Ferguson, Free Church minister, of Westerdale, N.B.—Mrs. Eliza Leng, wife of Mr. Joseph W. Leng, of the National Temperance League.—Rev. Aneurin Lloyd Lodge, rector of Holy Trinity, Wavertree, since 1857.—Mrs. Mary Ann Holway, wife of Mr. Thomas Holway, of South Wimbledon, and late of Upper Gloucester-place, N.W.—Rev. D. Griffiths Davies, vicar of St. Catherine's, Pontypridd.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Dr. J. H. Rutherford, of Newcastle, says modern science has made it perfectly clear that sipping cold water slowly is the best cure for the drink craving.

In one coroner's district of Surrey eight children were suffocated in bed in a single night—last Christmas Eve. The supposition thrusts itself forward that the explanation may be that more women are drunk on Christmas Eve than at other times.

Mr. William Forbes writes: "There are in Holborn, between Chancery-lane and Gray's Inn-road (about two hundred yards) two bakers' shops and sixteen places where intoxicating liquors can be obtained. The present licensing system makes it easy to get drunk."

Mr. W. D. Stephens, Mayor of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on a recent visit to the local gaol, found that of the 172 men there not one was a teetotaller, and most of them were there through drink. The Governor in his seventeen years' experience had never seen a teetotaller in gaol.

Several persons have been proceeded against at Cardiff Police-court for keeping illicit drinking clubs, and were in each case convicted in penalties ranging from £10 to £50 and costs. Up to the present time over twenty club keepers have been convicted as a result of the recent raids by the Cardiff police.

FOREIGN.

The Prohibition party in the United States are to meet in convention on June 6, to nominate a candidate for the Presidency of the Republic.

In Austria it is proposed that persons fined under the drink laws three times in one year shall be forbidden to frequent public-houses in their own town and district.

Andrew Carnegie, the Scottish-American millionaire, in a recent address, said, "I never made myself so common that I could enter a public bar and ask for liquor."

For eleven Assizes, consecutively, at Halton, Canada, the judge has been presented with a pair of white gloves, there being no prisoners to try. The Scott Act is in force at Halton.

In Sydney, New South Wales, the Inspector-General of Police states that the drink traffic is becoming a danger to the State. Three thousand in the colony are known to be confirmed drunkards.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 8.——EZEKIEL XIII.

We have here the parallel passage to Jere-iah's prophecy (chap. xxiii.) against the false rophets. The false prophesying against which he prophet contends continues substantially o exist in the Church of the New Testament." —Hengstenberg. It is worthy of note that we ave also two parallel New Testament protests gainst false prophets (Jude and 2 Pet. ii.).

4.—Thy prophets are like the foxes.—" Foxes ere correspond to 'ravening wolves' in Matt. ii. 15, and 'grievous wolves' in Acts xx. 29, epresenting false teachers. 'Ruins' are a avourite resort of foxes: so also the spiritual oxes; the false teachers flourish the better, the ore degraded the condition of the people."—Iengstenberg.

10.—Saying, Peace; and there was no peace.—ee Jer. vi. 14, and the contrast, Isaiah lvii. 19.

11.—Untempered mortar.—" The word means laster, employed to patch up a wall so as to ive it an appearance without the reality of trength." — S.C. "The plastering is the overing up of inward corruption by means of utward appearance."—Keil. Sacramentalism, part from the Gospel, is but "untempered ortar," wherewith many souls are being daubed" to their destruction. See, as a arallel to the ruin of the wall, Matt. vii. 27.

18.—Woe to the women that sew pillows to all rmholes.—The reference of this very obscure assage seems to be to arts of sorcery which he false prophetesses used in order to deceive. Most ancient interpreters, and many modern nes, understand the 'pillows' and 'kerchiefs,' r whatever else these words may denote, as ppliances to which sorcerers had resort in rder to attract notice."—S.C.

MONDAY, JANUARY 9.——EZEKIEL XIV.

The subject of this chapter is twofold: (1) he uselessness of coming to inquire of the ord while "the stumblingblock of iniquity" s still cherished in the heart, and (2) the hope-essness of expecting that when God's judg-nents are being executed any but God's true ervants themselves will be delivered.

3.—These men have set up their idols in their eart.—" We should not picture these elders to urselves as given up to gross idolatry, the xpression, 'have set up in their hearts,' means o be mentally busy therewith."—Keil.

4.—The stumblingblock of his iniquity.—In hap. vii. 19 this expression is used of "silver nd gold," which makes it possible that the dolatry spoken of here may be that recognised n Col. iii. 5 and Eph. v. 5, "covetousness, hich is idolatry." See two forms of idolatry ut together (Job xxxi. 24—28).

7.—Which separateth himself from Me, and etteth up his idols.—The Christian's attitude hould be one of separation unto God, not of eparation from Him. It is to those who are 'in Him that is true, even in his Son Jesus hrist," that the Apostle says, "Little children eep yourselves from idols" (1 John v. 21).

9.—I the Lord have deceived that prophet.—' Deceived" is not the right word, it should e "persuaded." See 1 Kings xxii. 20.

14.—Noah, Daniel, and Job.—These three re mentioned as having been the means of elivering others. Noah, his family; Daniel, he wise men of Babylon (chap. ii.); and Job, is friends (xlii. 7—9). But in such a judgment s was approaching they could but deliver hemselves.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 10.——EZEKIEL XV.

"As the word of the Lord in the latter part f the previous chapter overthrows false con-idence in the righteousness of the godly being vailable for others, so now is opposed the fancy hat Israel cannot be rejected because of its lection to be the people of God, as the figure f the vine suggests. See Ps. lxxx. 8; Isa. v." —Keil.

2.—What is the vine tree more than any tree? —The answer might be given, its advantage ver other trees lies in its fruit, and this is the very point of the parable. Had Israel been fruitful as a vine, and brought forth fruit to God, its superiority over other trees would have been freely acknowledged; but "Israel is an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself" (Hosea x. 1). As Israel is all wood and no fruit, the comparison is between the wood of the vine and that of other trees, where its inferiority is manifest. Useless as wood, it is rendered more useless by being burnt with fire. The New Testament counterpart is John xv., where Christ, as the true vine, is set forth as the source of fruitfulness to his people: "He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for apart from Me (R.V.) ye can do nothing."

8.—They have committed a trespass.—Or, rather, "an act of treachery." (See Jer. iii. 20.)

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11.——EZEKIEL XVI.

"The prophet's aim is to show how utterly destitute the people was from the first of any claim to the kindness lavished upon it. Israel was like a child abandoned from its birth. But on such the Lord looked with pity, tended, adopted it, decked it with all that could grace and adorn it. Under such care it grew up to be comely and beautiful, and the Lord joined it to Himself in that close union which is figured by the bonds of wedlock."—S.C.

3.—Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan.—This, along with the succeeding words, "thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite," show that the application is not to Israel as a people, who, as descended from Abraham, could not be so addressed, but to the city Jerusalem, the capital of Judah, which, before the Lord chose her "to put his name there," was a city of Canaan (see Josh. xii. 10). As it was the appointed centre of worship for the whole land, it points to the unfaithfulness of the Jewish Church as such as being here chiefly depicted.

6.—I said unto thee...Live.—The historical fulfilment was when David took Jerusalem and brought up thither the ark of the Lord (2 Sam. v. vi.). The individual spiritual application is to the time when a soul passes from death unto life. The "covenant" (8) is not the Abrahamic, nor the Sinaitic, but the Davidic (2 Sam. vii.).

60.—I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth.—Comp. 2 Chron. xxi. 7, "The Lord would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant that He had made with David."

61.—Not by thy covenant.—" But by 'my covenant' (62). The people's covenant was the pledge of obedience. That had been found ineffectual. God's covenant was by promise (Gal. iii. 17)."—S.C.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12.——EZEKIEL XVII.

6.—So it became a vine.—The change of character of the "branch of the cedar" is to be observed. When planted in Babylon (12) it is "set as a willow tree" (5). Comp. Ps. cxxxvii. 1, 2. But it there became a vine. Being in its right place, according to God's appointment (Jer. xxix. 4—10), it subserved his purpose, and so fulfilled the figure of the vine in fruitfulness towards God. The carnal mind of those who looked to Egypt for help (the second eagle of ver. 7) thought the vine character, or church position, inseparable from the external ritual of the Temple, and the worldly pomp of the throne at Jerusalem. God thought otherwise.

22.—I will also take of the highest branch.—"The rightful representative of the royal house of David—the Messiah."—S.C. Comp. "a tender one" with Is. liii. 2, "a tender plant." The sphere in which God plants his "goodly cedar" is described as "a high mountain and eminent. In the mountain of the height of Israel." Comp., as to the kingdom to be established "in the top of the mountains" (Is. ii. 2).

FRIDAY, JANUARY 13.——EZEKIEL XVIII.

"Among the people of Israel, when the Divine judgments burst upon them, the delusion arose that the existing generation had to suffer for their fathers' sins. The word of God here deprives them of this pretext for covering over their sins, and quieting their consciences, by showing that every man bears the guilt and punishment of his own sin."—Keil.

2.—The fathers have eaten sour grapes, &c.—See Jeremiah's reference to this same proverb (xxxi. 29) as silenced for ever by the mercies of the New Covenant, in the light of which Israel sees and acknowledges every man "his own iniquity."

4.—The soul that sinneth, it shall die.—"'Soul' is used here as in many other passages for 'person.'"—Keil. As to the death intended (so far at least as to the primary application to Israel) see Jer. xxi. 8, 9. But the words admit of a deeper spiritual application.

24.—All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned.—As "there is not a just man upon earth who doeth good and sinneth not" (Eccles. vii. 20), this principle, viewed in its spiritual application, for ever closes the door of salvation against mere human righteousness. But it must be remembered that the salvation of the soul is not the subject of this chapter, but rather the escape from coming judgments on the land of Israel, and moreover that its teaching is addressed to a people under the law, and deals with principles of law, and is therefore law, not Gospel. Those who are accepted in "the righteousness of God" have more than a mere human righteousness.

30.—Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions.—The duty of repentance here urged upon Israel is quite consistent with that further provision of Gospel grace spoken of in Acts v. 31, which alone can cause repentance whether individual now, or national hereafter. This does not lessen man's responsibility, but it enhances God's grace, which alone can produce the condition on which depends the desired blessing.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14.——EZEKIEL XIX.

"A dirge or lamentation for Jehoahaz and Jehoiakin." — S.C. Each of these kings reigned but three months, after which they were deposed by Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar respectively, and taken captive, one to Egypt, the other to Babylon. See 2 Kings xxiii. 31—34, and xxiv. 8—15.

1.—A lamentation for the princes of Israel.—"The princes of Israel are the kings (see xii. 10, xxi. 25), two of whom are so clearly pointed out that there is no mistaking Jehoahaz and Jehoiakin. They are simply mentioned as examples to show what the end must inevitably be when kings of Israel become ambitious of being lions like the kings of the nations."—Keil.

10.—Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood.—The difficulty of this latter expression has much perplexed commentators. The most satisfactory solution is that which refers to the blessing of Judah (Gen. xlix. 11), where the juice of the vine is called "the blood of grapes." It would thus denote a fruitful vine. Possibly, also, with a reference to Judah's blessing to be realised in the Messiah, whose blood should be the source of all fruitfulness to Israel.

14.—Fire is gone out of a rod of her branches.—"The reference is to Zedekiah, whose treacherous breach of covenant (xvii. 15) led to the overthrow of the kingdom and of the earthly monarchy."—Keil. She hath no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule.—The allusion is again to the promised blessing of Judah (Gen. xlix. 10), not to be realised till Shiloh come.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, January 15.

Matt. xiv. 22—36 (compare Mark vi. 45—56 and John vi. 15—21).

This lesson tells us—I. Of Jesus.

1.—Under great temptation.—It is likely that the sudden and almost overwhelming enthusiasm of the great multitude brought Him under great temptation. He was forced afresh to choose the meek and lowly path which led to the cross, in preference to the path of earthly power and greatness which seemed so near. It was like a repetition in another form of the temptation in the wilderness. (See Matt. iv. 9.)

2.—In his dependence and prayerfulness.—He needed this time of prayer and communion. Probably, the severe stress of the temptation overcome, made his need the greater. The strength and comfort received in solitary communion with the Father through the Spirit were necessary to Him. If to Him, how much more to us!

3.—As the Friend (1) Watchful.—From the hill-top, despite the darkness, and despite the fervour of his devotions, "He saw them toiling in rowing" (Mark vi. 48). So to-day, from the fair hills of the glory-land He sees his bewildered, toiling, despairing friends. (2) Able and Confident.—His "It is I; be not afraid" bespeaks a happy confidence in full ability to help. The words say, "It is enough that I am with you." Happy are we, in our trouble, if we can answer:—"Yes, Lord; it is enough! 'I fear no foe, with Thee at hand to bless.'" (3) Pitiful.—He watched them from the hill-top with compassion. Thus moved, He walked across the deep to their help. His pitiful friendliness is further seen in 34—36, the people crowding around Him so confidently, bringing their sick, and the glorious outgoing of his power to heal. "As many as touched were made perfectly whole." (4) In his Majesty as Lord of Nature.—There is indescribable sublimity both in his own walking on the sea and in his kingly "Come!" spoken to Peter. "Where the word of a king is there is power." His power is seen as gloriously in the healing of diseases (34—36).

II. Of his People's Trials.

1.—They sometimes meet us in the very path He chooses for us.—The disciples had been unwilling to embark. They wished to stay with Him. He had to constrain them to go. They spend that night on the sea against their wish and in obedience to his. If they could have had their way they would have avoided that storm. Those who yield their wills in obedience to Christ's have often to face troubles they might otherwise avoid. They who would follow Him must expect stormy seas. The brave boy who chooses to obey the right for Christ's sake must prepare to endure many things.

2.—These trials are often sudden, unlooked for, and terrible.—That night of toil and weariness and fear spoken of here is a true illustration of the experience of many good men.

3.—They have often to be met with no outward sign of the Saviour's knowledge and sympathy.—The disciples felt as though they were alone in the darkness, almost in sport to the elements. Christ was watching, but He gave no sign. So now, good men have to do right steadily and bravely, without sign or even any inward feeling that God knows all, and cares for them in all. They must believe that He sees and feels when they have no sense of his sympathy.

4.—Deliverance will come, sooner or later.—It will probably be later rather than sooner, as here. Not till the fourth watch (3 a.m.—6 a.m.) did Jesus come. He left them to toil alone for eight or nine hours in weather so rough that in all that time they could only make about three and a half miles of their journey, a little more than half way. If his help is long in coming, let us wait in patience. "He never is before his time; He never is behind."

5.—His appearance sometimes brings terror.—They thought it was a spirit, and cried out for fear. So what we sometimes take to be a new trouble is the Lord's deliverance. We mistake God's helps for hindrances, and cry, "All these things are against me" (Gen. xlii. 36).

6.—These trials are very precious.—This one gave the disciples a new view of Jesus (33). This alone was a priceless result. Consider also the good their experience has brought to others.

III. What Faith is, and what it does.

1.—It seeks a word from Christ Himself.—Peter cries:—"Lord bid me come." He will rely on nothing but his Lord. Promise—command. So, true faith is always looking out for the sure word of God. It looks beyond men and things, feelings and probabilities; it cries for a promise given by God and suited to its needs. This is the way to be saved. Study the Bible, and seek, with prayer and pains, to find a word from the Lord for you.

2.—It trusts that word.—Peter, stepping out from the boat on to the water, trusting only to the power of Christ's "Come," is a splendid example of that trust which is simply faith in exercise. Many say they believe the Word of God, but they don't trust it. Yet there is no other way of salvation. Saving faith is simply trusting faith. "He that trusts his soul to Jesus, he that trusteth heaven shall win."

3.—It overcomes gloriously, just so long as Christ Jesus is trusted.—Peter found no trouble in walking the waves. Doubtless he felt a mighty joy and a glorious liberty. Men of faith, who do and bear in simple trust in the sure promise of God, do so with ease and joy and liberty. The work is easy, as walking the water was easy, so long as the heart rests quietly on the promise.

4.—Even when feeble and failing its exercise is precious.—Far better, both for himself and for millions besides, that Peter should venture and fail, than that he should never try at all. If he had feared to go to Christ on the water, this story would never have been told. What we should have lost! This should encourage to boldness in trust.

5.—See what simple faith in Jesus can do.—Faith made a way in the waters. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me;" "According to your faith," &c.

IV. What unbelief is, and what it does.

1.—It is a turning of the eye from Jesus to surrounding objects.—While Peter's mind was full of his Lord's enabling command, and while his eyes looked steadily at Him, all was easy. But the rowing, hissing, crashing wave caught his eye and his attention. That sight came between him and Christ—and then unbelief conquered faith—"When he saw the wind boisterous he was afraid." The very soul of unbelief lies in giving heed to anything that seems to deny the promise of God.

2.—It effectually hinders the forthputting of Christ's power.—It may seem a simple thing to doubt; yet that act of doubt shuts out from the soul the very power of God. It is a simple thing to break, as any child may do, a thin iron wire. Yet the breaking of that wire destroys a great electric current which is lighting a noble hall. The brilliancy and beauty are gone in an instant—black darkness comes in their stead. So unbelief breaks the glorious current of God's power, and light, and life, and thus brings weakness, darkness, and death. Peter believed, then he walked safely: Peter doubted, then he sank. Unbelief is truly mighty, as mighty to destroy as faith is to restore.

BISHOPSGATE MISSION TO JEWS.—Mr. Abraham Hornstein, a Christian Israelite, who was converted about two years ago, and baptized by Rev. J. M. Eppstein, of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, has since been engaged in Gospel work amongst Jews in London. At a meeting in a country district south from this, where signs blessing have been seen for some time, number of old and young were under conviction of sin, an several young men and women professed decisio for Christ. It was delightful to see Christia parents praising God for the salvation of thei families. We praise God for all He has done.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Work on behalf of Young Women and Girls

IN PRAYERFUL RELIANCE on DIVINE HELP, this Institution was founded in 1857, and the work commenced almost without unds in hand, but, during the whole of the completed THIRTY YEARS' WORK, the LORD HAS SUSTAINED IT.

8,382 HAVE BEEN ADMITTED to the REFORMATORY HOMES.

3,153 HAVE ALSO BEEN admitted to the PREVENTIVE HOMES, and further, 12,842 young Women and Girls have been sheltered n the OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE.

ONE SPECIAL CAUSE for thankfulness was the opening of a NEW TRAINING HOME for 50 FRIENDLESS YOUNG GIRLS, : PARSON'S GREEN, costing nearly £2,000, which amount, chiefly by the kindness of CHRISTIAN LADIES, has been wholly defrayed.

OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE.—The Committee have determined to appropriate the Central Home for this merciful purpose, and the ecessary works to adapt it will be commenced early this Spring.

In 1857, when this Institution was founded, the population of the Metropolis was TWO MILLION, EIGHT HUNDRED and NINETY-SIX THOUSAND, FOUR HUNDRED and TWENTY-FIVE.

THE FUTURE.

In 1885, the latest published return estimated the population at FIVE MILLION, TWO HUNDRED and FIFTY THOUSAND, nd SIXTY-NINE; showing an increase of TWO MILLION, THREE HUNDRED and FIFTY-THREE THOUSAND, SIX HUNDRED and FORTY-FOUR INHABITANTS.

Thank God for the REVIVAL OF CHRISTIAN ZEAL AND EARNESTNESS in this GENERATION; but the enemy's forces ust NOT BE OVERLOOKED.

MUSIC HALLS have greatly increased in the Metropolis in this generation, and proved to be most demoralising in their influence.

OVER-CROWDED DWELLINGS of the poor, consequent of the exorbitant rent charged for apartments, are also a GREAT NDIRECT CAUSE of the low moral tone amongst the masses.

Intemperance is also a terrible cause of immorality. But the UNREGENERATE CONDITION OF MANKIND is the foundation nd source of ALL THESE EVILS.

The SCRIPTURES ASSURE us that "GOD WILLETH NOT THE DEATH OF A SINNER," therefore it is for us to seek nd save as we may be led by the Holy Spirit, so that if the Saviour comes in our lifetime He may find us, each one, "occupying" as He may ppoint.

MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C., will kindly take charge of any contributions for the ork of 1888. Reader, do help by Prayer.

BOSTON AND ITS MAYOR.—Mr. Hugh O'Brien has been re-elected Mayor of Boston, U.S. Mr. O'Brien (says an American contemporary) is best known throughout the country as one of the friends and admirers of the champion prize-fighter of America. Boston has also voted in favour of continuing the saloon by a majority of 8,483. To have the saloons and O'Brien too is indeed a calamity. But the majority for license was not very large in a city of nearly 400,000 inhabitants.

THE POPE'S JUBILEE.—The Rome correspondent of The Record writes:—The worldly spirit the Vatican is showing in this jubilee, and the way in which it fosters emulation in the gifts offered to the Pope, the money lavished on useless baubles and jewels to please the vanity of an old man, while it is needed to stem the tide of misery and vice, is a reproach to the Church of which he declares himself the head. Many are scandalised at this lavish waste, and intelligent Italians are making a contrast between the Gospel story of our Lord's simple life and this ostentatious display.

DEAR FRIENDS,

The present is a time of such extreme need that, unless speedy and liberal help is forthcoming, our work for the dear children must be curtailed, and this at a time of exceptional distress. I therefore appeal to you in hope, feeling sure that the children in their mute helplessness will elicit your sympathy and aid, so that we may be enabled to maintain—if not to extend—the work. Even when all branches are in full operation we can only help a small proportion of those who seek our aid; but I feel sure that it is only necessary to make our need known to insure a liberal response. For seventeen years we have been enabled to shelter thousands of children, and to cheer the hearts of the toiling women whose lives are cast amid the shadows, by the sympathy of those to whom the Lord has given the means of blessing the poor, and they that have no helper.

Yours in the Master's service,
MARIE HILTON.

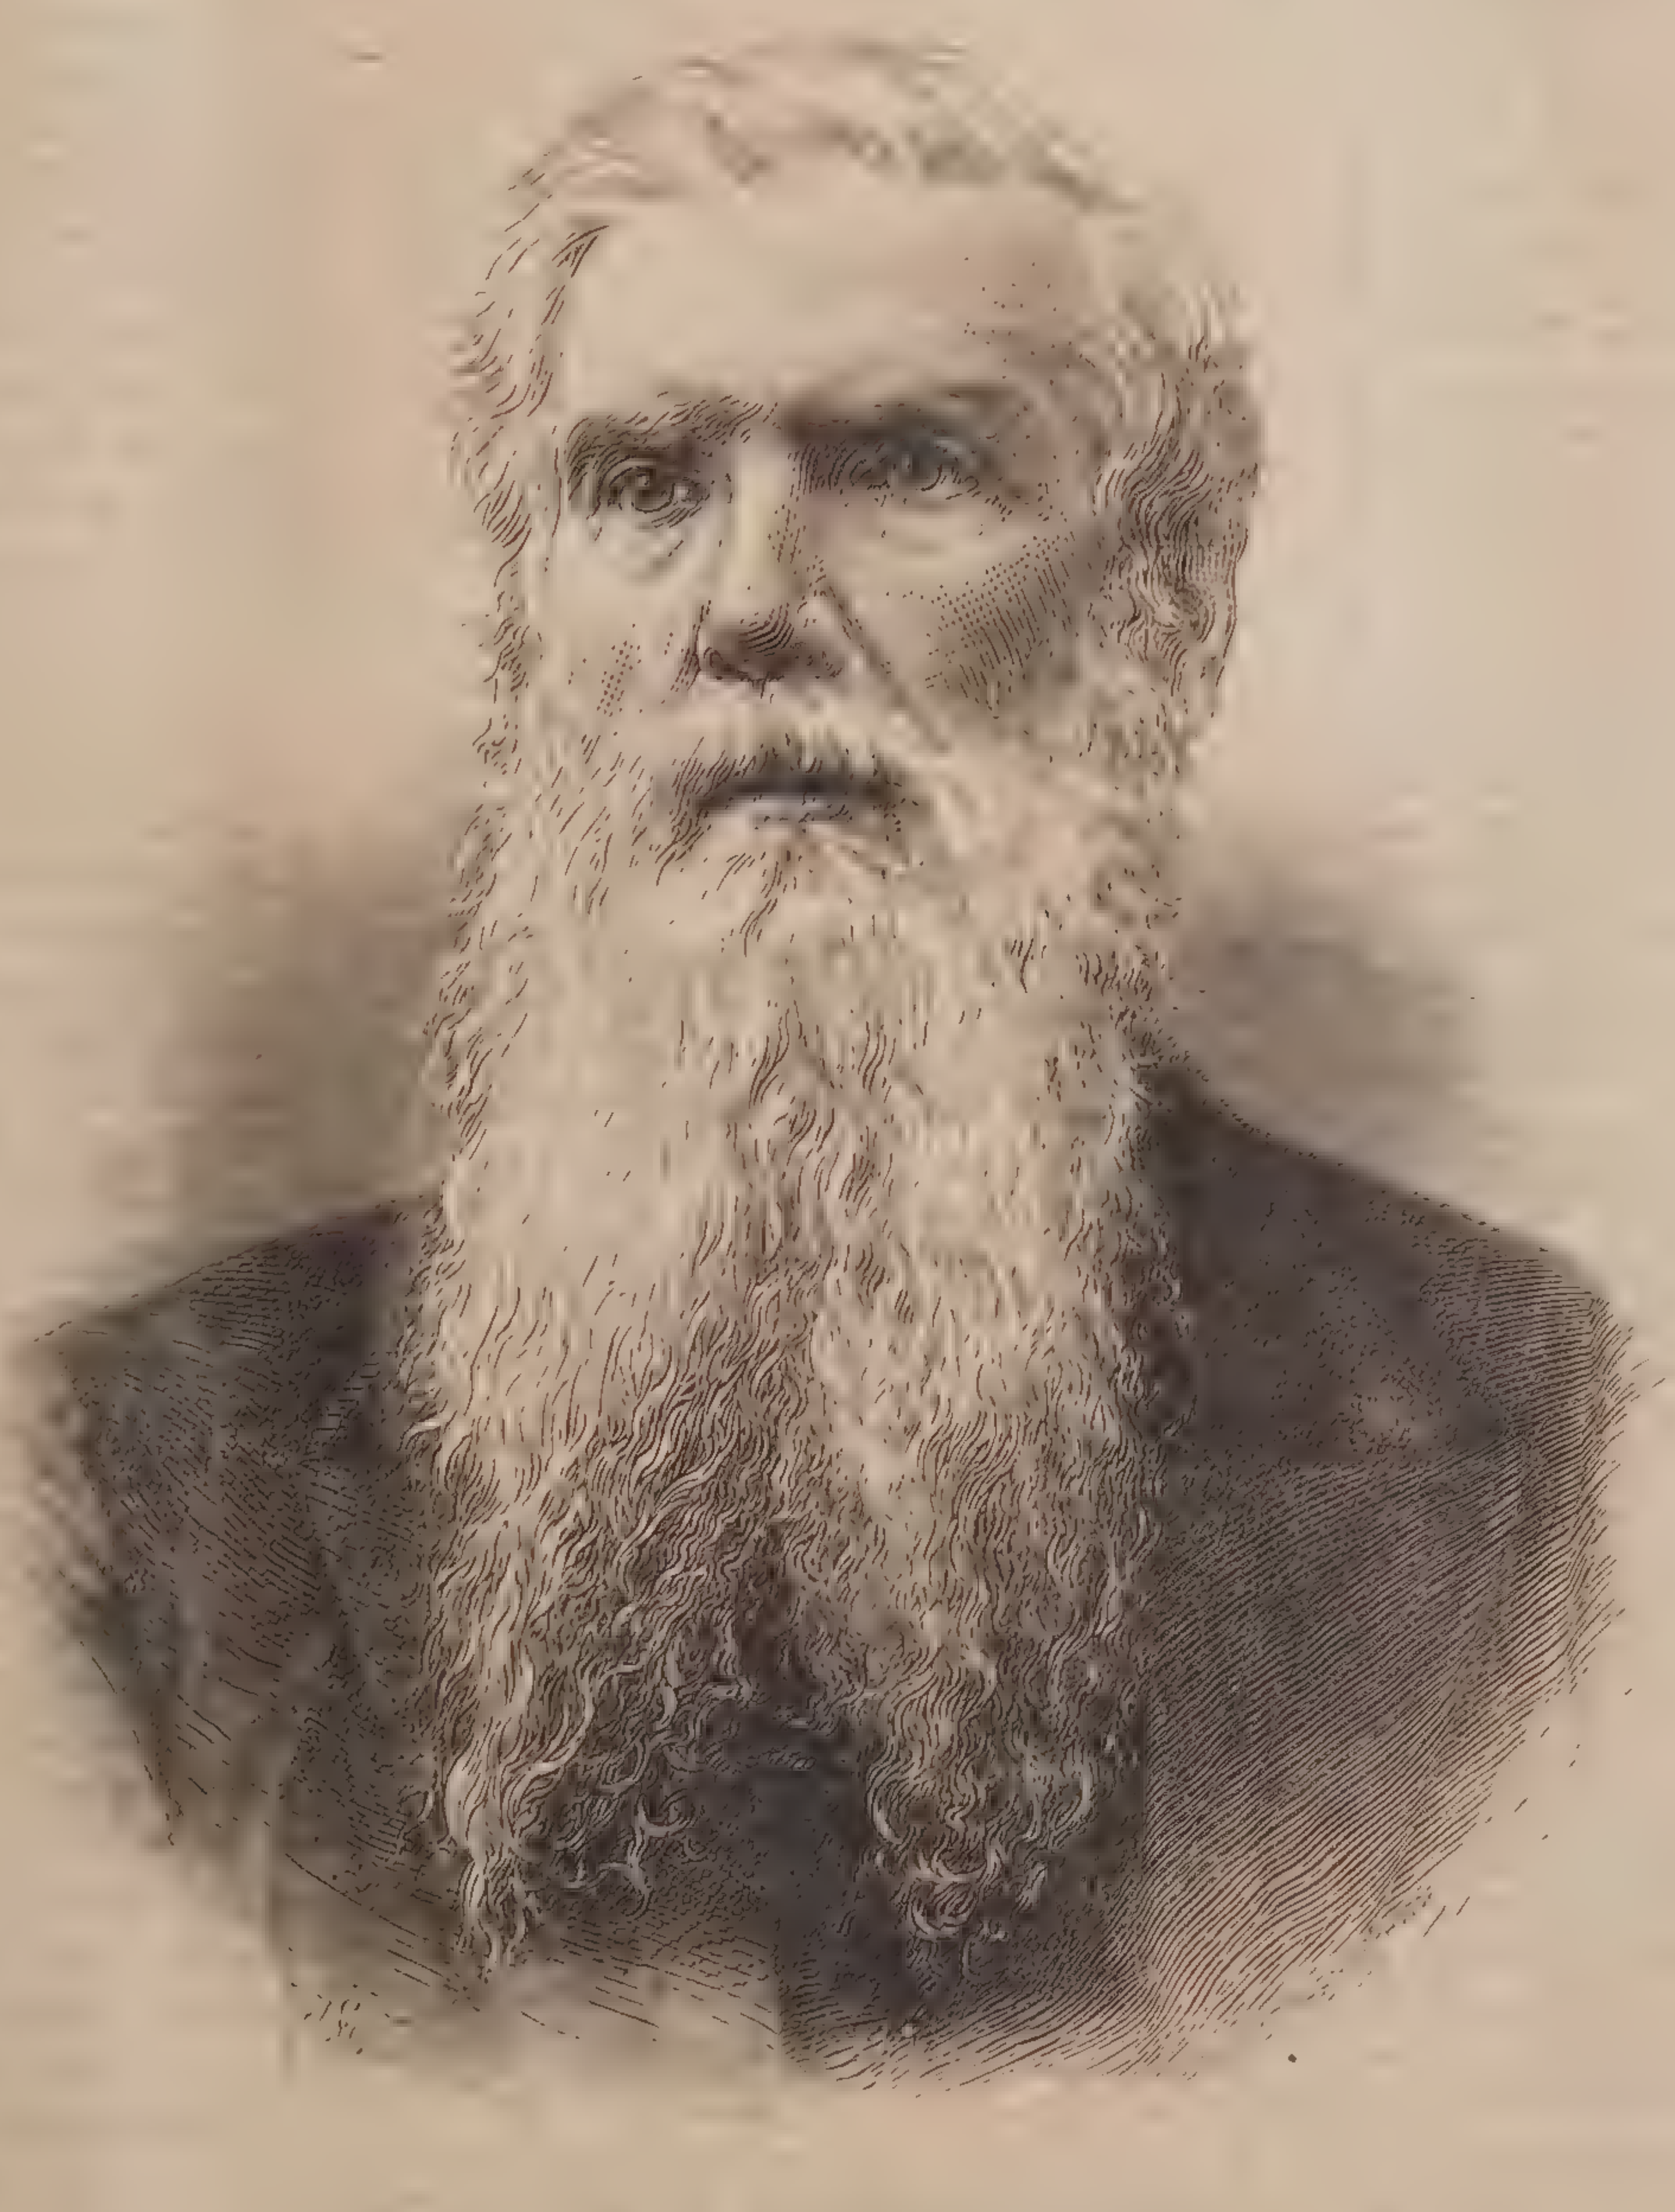
THE LATE

REV. ROBERT WALTER STEWART, D.D.,

Of Leghorn, Italy.

"HE was a man who faithfully and nobly filled the niche to which God had appointed him!" Such is the honourable testimony that many have borne of ROBERT WALTER STEWART, the subject of our sketch. The place which God had chosen to be the scene of the greater part of his life-work as a minister of Christ was not in his native land. The first few years, indeed, of his public ministry were spent by him in his native parish of Erskine, in Renfrewshire, whose beautiful green parks and shady woods fringe the banks of the Clyde for several miles. Here, for a brief time, as assistant to his father, and alone for a few years after his father's death, he laboured in the midst of a people who were attached to him by many tender bonds. A weakness in his lungs rendered it necessary that he should seek the benefit and healing influence of residence in a milder climate. After sojourning for a time in Malta, and subsequently in Constantinople, some remarkable leadings of Providence brought him to Leghorn. In this important Italian seaport there was a Scottish community mainly composed of merchants attracted by its peculiar trading advantages, and of other residents. In a very short time, after having had ample trial of his gifts, the people, in concurrence with the Continental Committee at home, addressed to Mr. Stewart an earnest invitation to become their minister, and he willingly assented to the call. Thus, in 1845, did he enter on a ministry and a work extending over forty-two years, whose benefits were not restricted to Leghorn, but shed themselves in many blessed forms and influences over the whole of Italy.



Religious liberty was at that time still unknown in this beautiful peninsula. Even to sell or circulate a copy of the Bible involved the penalty of imprisonment or exile. The heart of the young minister burned with a strong desire to work beyond the narrow circle of his own little flock, and to send some light into the surrounding darkness. The secret introduction and scattering abroad of the Divine Word seemed, in the meanwhile, the only way of doing this without discovery, and this was attempted with much caution, mingled with a sense of hazard. Many a time during those dark years that preceded the dawn, copies of the Bible, hidden in bales of merchandise, were brought in ships from England; and this glorious contraband was borne from the harbour and through the gates of Leghorn undiscovered. Silently and secretly this water of life found its way into homes in Tuscany and Piedmont, and became the means of a new and undying life to not a few.

At length, in 1848, the epoch of liberty began to dawn upon Italy in the new Constitution given to his subjects by Charles Albert, the King of Piedmont and Sardinia, which secured to them the priceless boon of religious toleration. The cry of liberty was followed by the call for unification, and not many years passed before the whole of the formerly divided Italy, with its petty states and opposing interests, was wedded and welded into one strong kingdom, under the wise and paternal rule of Victor Emanuel; and liberty of faith and worship became the right of every man from Monte Viso, with its eternal snows, to Mount Etna, with its eternal fires.

The heart of Dr. Stewart rejoiced with a great joy, as he thought how those beneficent political changes threw all Italy open to the efforts of a wise and ardent evangelism. He was not unmindful of the little Scottish and English-speaking communities, which were formed one after another into a congregation with a Presbyterian pastor, and whose united ministers and elders were at length constituted into the Presbytery of Italy. But his chief interest was turned to the Waldensian Church, which the movements we have named had now placed in new and favourable circumstances. For many years it had been his growing impression that this little faithful church, so long imprisoned, as it were, within its own valleys, had a destiny before it, and a great work of some kind for which it was preserved. With intense delight he beheld this ancient church, which for centuries had been subjected to such cruel and humiliating treatment from the enemies of liberty and of the Gospel, rising to the occasion, declaring their conviction that their mission was no longer that of a suffering but of a working church, and preparing to carry the Gospel of Heaven's grace into the very heart of Italy, in so far as God might afford them means and strength to do it.

Dr. Stewart hastened to their help. By means of incessant correspondence as well as personal influence, he did much to awaken interest in the Waldensian Mission in benevolent individuals and churches in other lands, obtaining for them from year to year constantly increasing pecuniary assistance. In their Synods and Committees, he was ever ready with his encouraging words and faithful counsels, winning for himself the unbounded confidence and glowing gratitude of pastors and people. Bursaries were obtained by him for poorer students; a pastor's library was formed; the whole educational system for classical and scientific training, in their little capital at La Tour, was re-constructed and enlarged. And when the Synod, in strong faith, and with a proper conception of the magnitude of the work which Christ had laid to their hand, resolved to found a theological college at Florence in the Palazzo Salviati, for the higher training of its pastors, and especially of its evangelists for Italy, he never rested in his efforts to help until its success was secured. For many years before his death, Dr. Stewart saw Waldensian churches and stations planted in the cities and towns and villages of Italy more than a hundred in number. In the honourable list of friends of the Vaudois Church, in which shine the names of General Beckwith and Dr. Gilly, that of Dr. Robert Walter Stewart must now be placed as the third of the three worthies.

Dr. Stewart's undertaking of the superintendence of the colportage agency of the National Bible Society of Scotland, as well as his Presidency of the Society for the printing and publishing of Christian literature, in connection with the Claudian Press at Florence, put a power into his hands which he was not slow to use. Irrigating streams of religious truth were sent into many a place which the pastor and the evangelist could not so easily reach. By his Commentary on the four Gospels, translated into the language of the people, the ripe work of thirty years, and only completed within the last year of his life, he has also left behind him a rich legacy, not only for the present, but for the churches of the future in Italy.

In the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity, conferred upon him by Princeton College, America, and in his unanimous election in 1874 to the Moderator's Chair of the Free Church of Scotland, all the churches felt that the academic and the ecclesiastical crown alike could scarcely have fallen on a worthier brow. His jubilee, celebrated last year, had something about it of a holy triumph, and was a most fit and beautiful winding-up of his active life. But few who were present foresaw that the higher jubilee of heaven, in which angels were to share, was so near at hand. Paralysis came, not so much in the failure of any particular member, as in the gradual weakening and prostration of his whole body, which no human skill was able to arrest. The messenger came on Nov. 23, and summoned him away into the presence of the King.

Shortly before his illness, he was cheered by the visit of one of his sons who had been far away in another hemisphere, and whose strong arms and tender ministries contributed greatly to his comfort and happiness. This was one of many causes which filled the soul of this faithful servant of the Lord with peace and joy to the hour of death—a sweet note in the Nunc dimittis of the aged saint.

THE DOWN-GRADE.

In our issue of December 2 appeared a letter on "The Down-Grade," signed "A Lover of the Old Truth." The writer is a much-esteemed Congregational minister. The Congregational Review thus speaks of him:—

> A writer in The Christian, quoting some passages carefully culled from the papers which appeared in our October and November numbers, contends they prove Mr. Spurgeon's position "up to the hilt." The writer does not seem to understand what the position is, and to be, in fact, in that nebulous state of mind in which everything like discriminating criticism is impossible. What is worse, he is possessed with controversial animus, and that of so severe a type, that he seems to forget he is writing of Christian men, who do not intend to make any points against an adversary, but simply to set forth the truth.

This is a remarkable statement, seeing that the greater portion of the letter consisted of the replies of ten leading Congregational ministers to questions to which answers were solicited by the Editor of The Congregational Review. The rest of the letter consisted of the obvious deductions from these replies.

This Down-Grade controversy has been characterised by singular indefiniteness. Mr. Spurgeon has specified, definitely enough, the views against which he contends, but not the persons who promulgate them.

The Christian World, indeed, not only accepts Mr. Spurgeon's statements, but glories in them, imagining that the Down-grade has an upward tendency. But The Congregational Review repudiates, on the one hand, The Christian World as representing Congregationalists, and Mr. Spurgeon and ourselves on the other. It says, in an article on "The Evil Spirit of Controversy," from which we have already quoted:—

> They do not deny the presence of evil tendencies, and certainly still less do they attempt to show that the theology of Congregationalists generally is that of Mr. Spurgeon, or The Christian. If that were all which had to be proved, there would be no controversy. We frankly admit that not a few, but a vast majority, of our ministers are not of that school, and have no desire to be so regarded.

It then denounces Unitarian doctrine, and adds:—

> But if the charge be that Congregationalists are not of the school represented by The Christian, we must plead guilty. We are as strong Evangelicals as are its members, but we are not of their company...We deny the authority of any men to set up a standard and to read out of the Church of Christ all who will not conform to it. We claim our right to read and to interpret the Word of God for ourselves, and we refuse to be bound by the traditional opinions which have grown up around it, or the interpretations which have been put upon it by great divines, however gifted and however holy. We dare not question the brotherhood of any man who from the heart confesses Jesus as Lord, even though he may reject many conclusions which seem to us to follow from that primary truth.

We have no controversy with this position. We heartily accept it. But to acknowledge brotherhood in Christ is one thing; to be united with those who not only hold but teach false doctrine is another. The Congregational Review does not specify wherein it differs from us; but it is evident from the above declaration that Mr. Spurgeon and we are, and The Congregational Review is not, at one with the "great divines, gifted and holy," to whom reference is made.

But while speaking thus our contemporary gives no statement of its own views, and we must believe that a large number of Congregational ministers and members adhere to the old truths, which are not Mr. Spurgeon's, nor ours, but those of the Bible and the Reformation.

A VISIT TO BIRMINGHAM.

By the kind invitation of my friend Mr. George Cadbury, of Woodbrooke, Selly Oak, Birmingham, I went down on a recent Saturday evening, in order to see the First-day morning schools for men and women carried on by the Friends at Birmingham. Mr. Cadbury teaches a class of about 350 men.

We began the day early. Rising at a little after five, and leaving Woodbrooke at six, we had a delightful drive of four miles in the crisp morning air; and as the day dawned and the beauties of nature were unveiled, one could not but marvel at the unwisdom which leaves out of our ordinary life the delightsome early morning, the invigorating freshness of its air producing a capacity for enjoyment which passes as the day proceeds.

Having arrived about seven o'clock at the buildings occupied by the British Schools, in Severn-street, we met about forty gentlemen, who are the teachers, and who breakfast together before the school commences, at half-past seven. After breakfast a chapter was read, and a few minutes were spent in silent meditation and prayer. Sometimes audible prayer is offered, as the Spirit may lead. For the distinguishing feature of the faith and practice of the Society of Friends is dependence upon the direct guidance and inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

Leaving the breakfast room, we found upstairs in one of the large halls an assembly of about 220 men. This was the class of Mr. Alderman William White, and was only one of several, many rooms in this and in the new School Board buildings being similarly occupied with classes numbering in the aggregate over three thousand men, from twenty years of age upwards.

The school is opened by reading, in the hearing of all in the room, the chapter which is the subject for the day. Then generally a brief address is given, and they separate into groups of perhaps a dozen each. They then read verse about, and a conversation ensues, in which the men are given the opportunity of freely expressing their thoughts and opinions. These may sometimes be crude enough, but it is a great end gained to know the character and calibre of each individual, for then a wise teacher can adapt his remarks to their actual need; whereas, if he only gave out his own thoughts from his special point of view, he might fail to interest them, and they would cease to come.

Indeed, in some cases the conductor gives great latitude, so that a discussion may arise—(as in one group of about fifty men in another class that I visited)—on Secularism; and a very profitable time this was, giving a judicious leader the opportunity of knowing the views of the men, which proved to be very far from anarchy, or a general distribution of property. For when a man gives up drink and begins to read and think, he gradually but surely rises in the social scale, and saves his money for the use of his family. He then immediately sees that it would be foolish and useless to divide it equally with others, for with inequality of character, of prudence, industry, and thrift, inequality of possession would immediately result.

The school lasts two hours—from 7.30 to 9.30. One hour is given to reading and conversation in class, and one hour to writing; so that after the first hour there is a turn over, and those who have been reading go to the writing desk, and those who have been writing take their turn at reading. Theological or other controversy is discouraged, because the main purpose of usefulness for time and eternity is steadily kept in view, and practical godliness is sought to be built up on foundation truths. There is no endeavour to proselyte to the views of Friends—who are indeed very conservative as to the admission of members; but conversion to God is definitely sought, and then if they wish to become "Friends" they are welcomed.

There are also libraries, savings funds, and other useful and beneficent accessories, which encourage independence of mind and thought, and amazingly develop the natural ability and quality of the men, who manage these things themselves.

This work was begun forty-two years ago, and has been adopted by other bodies, so that there are about 10,000 men in other schools besides those of "Friends."

It may be asked, how are the men induced to come? Largely from temperance and other meetings in Birmingham and its surrounding villages. In many cases they bring their mates; and fathers their sons, as they grow up. These schools afford an admirable opportunity for leading those who have been induced to sign the pledge, into association with others of their own class who are living soberly and frugally, righteously and godly; so that they are strengthened by personal acquaintance and friendship, and are far less likely to fall away than when, as is sometimes the case, they are received into church fellowship, and then are taken no notice of.

The appreciation manifested by the men of the interest taken in them is most gratifying, and not a few of them have advanced to positions of wealth and responsibility through the influence of the First-day morning school.

Leaving the men, I visited the schools for women, of whom there are about 900. The Society of Friends has always fully recognised the value of women's work, and it was interesting to note that the various organisations are conducted as efficiently as in the men's classes by the able Superintendent, and also by the officers of the Sick, Benevolent, and other societies, who are elected in the different classes by the women from among themselves.

My evening was spent at a crowded meeting, at Selly Oak, of the Friends' Christian Society. This organisation was established in 1874, and has now eleven meetings, with eight hundred members, and an average attendance of two thousand every Sunday evening. This is an outgrowth of the adult schools. Three or four took part, either in prayer or address, and the meeting lasted only an hour. A prayer-meeting followed, in which several poured out their hearts in brief, fervent, loving supplication. There was liberty without licence, and freedom of utterance for men and women, which was used to the enjoyment, refreshment, and strengthening of those who were silent, and of those through whom prayer found expression.

Similar work is going on in six or seven other places, chiefly in Yorkshire, and it is great cause for thankfulness that Friends are thus doing some real aggressive Christian work on a more definitely spiritual, and therefore more permanent basis than that in the adult schools. Some of the views of Friends may not be approved by their fellow-Christians. I dissent from their abrogation of the Lord's command to baptize as well as teach, and to show forth his edath until He come, in the Lord's Supper: yet it is surely a far less mischievous mistake to set these ordinances aside altogether, than to pervert them from their Scriptural meaning and their Divine purpose. They are, I believe, object lessons of God's own devising, but they are better disused, than abused to the subversion of the Gospel, which is the case when Divine efficacy is attributed to the symbol instead of to the fact.

The Friends have their post to occupy in the army of the Lord, and if in earnest all through the country, thousands now outside the Church of Christ may be gathered in. Indeed, their history abundantly proves that in proportion to their numbers, no other body of Christians has exercised more influence for good: and in some very important fields of testimony and usefulness, such as temperance, and peace, and social virtue, they have pushed the battle to the gate; and their women are the modern representatives of the model woman of Prov. xxxi. The indirect benefits of their "Christian Society" are as great as the direct ones, for other Christians have been stirred up to renewed effort by seeing men, nearly all dependent on their own labour, in receipt of small weekly wages, giving their leisure to visiting the sick, distributing tracts, promoting temperance, teaching the children; without earthly recompense; prompted by love to Him who first loved them.

On Monday morning, after addressing about 1000 work-people at their usual morning service at a manufactory situated in a peaceful valley in the country, we drove down to the Medical Mission, at the corner of Floodgate and River streets. As these names indicate, they lie at the lower part of the town, and the depressing contrast which this presented to the bright and sunlit village we had just left, gave emphasis to the physical, social, moral, and religious advantage of removing our industries from the "stifling town" to suburban or country villages. Ernest Jones, in one of his poems, deplored the "generations growing down," and prayed—

> Give us, God, to save our nation,
> Less of cotton, more of wheat.

If this cannot be, because other nations supply us with wheat cheaper than we can grow it ourselves, it is possible for manufacturers to build airy premises in the country, and to avoid the hideous compression of their workers into a mass of misery.

We were rather too early for the doctor and his dispensers, but we found something like a hundred patients waiting, to whom we had the opportunity of addressing a few words of human sympathy and of divine promise, which were received with genuine thankfulness.

The work begins at 11 a.m., and goes on busily till 10 at night. The Secretary, regretting that our early visit precluded our seeing the work in progress, writes:—"There is a real, hearty, Christian work going on here. We do not pride ourselves on the number of cases relieved, or rather seen, yet the number is considerable. They do not pass the doctor at one a minute, but every case is as carefully attended as if a guinea were paid; and besides, to each one the question is brought home, 'Are you a Christian?' and we have abundant testimony that it has been blessed to many and many a poor weary soul. All the agencies that are carried on are full of life, and the power is felt to the saving of many."

We called at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, which numbers about 600 members. The Secretary, Mr. Whitwell, is enthusiastic in the work; he has relinquished a lucrative profession to consecrate himself to it.

We also called at the offices of the Gospel Temperance Association, and saw its indefatigable and I fear overworked secretary, Mr. Goodchild, from whom I hope to receive a fuller and more graphic account of that good work than my brief visit enables me to give.

As I left the Midland metropolis, after a full morning's work among agencies for good comparatively little known, even in the town itself, my heart was cheered by knowing that there is an abundance of good work carried on both by the Church of England and the Nonconformist bodies; and what is true of Birmingham is no less true of many other towns, villages, and cities. It would be encouraging to other Christians if those engaged in or cognisant of any earnest work for God, whether in the regular and stated operations of churches or in any special effort within or outside of them, would make them known. Nothing is more calculated to reproduce such work elsewhere than its narration. Who can read the Acts of the Apostles without desiring to be similarly used by the Holy Spirit? Who can read any narrative of the Lord's working in our own day without hearing, like a refrain at the end of every sentence, the appeal of God: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" And the answer which Isaiah gave will rise from every ready heart: "Here am I: send me." To those who are willing but not ready will come the desire to be made ready; and those who are not willing will be convinced of the sin of their unwillingness.

R. C. MORGAN.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—The committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society invite the committees and officers of the various foreign missionary societies to unite with them in special prayer at the Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., to-day (Friday), at 4 p.m.

THE SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY sent to Canada between 400 and 500 souls last year, at an average cost per head under £5. Organised correspondents receive and secure employment in the various townships for those who are sent out, and each emigrant on landing has a small sum given to him. The work of the Society is cheerfully and efficiently done by unpaid agents at home and in the Dominion. This country, says Lord Dorchester, in The Times, ought to support a scheme that will bear every scrutiny, and the working of which will bear comparison with any charity in the land as to cost—the mere printing, and under payment of a most valuable and energetic minister who acts as secretary, Rev. R. Mackay, 50, Fleet-lane, E.C., who enters upon and interests himself in the cause, which he understands thoroughly, and who has much experience of Canadian life.

THE WEEK of UNITED PRAYER.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 3.

CONFESSION.

Of vices prevalent throughout Christendom, such as drunkenness, impurity, profane language, and Sabbath-breaking; of great public wrongs, such as oppressive laws, or demoralising trades, or exciting hatred between nations; also of luxury and the wasteful use of God's gifts by some classes of society, and, among others, lawless discontent and covetousness; of hindrances to the acceptance of the Gospel by the inconsistent lives of nominal Christians; of jealousies and rivalries among brethren; of personal unfaithfulness, imperfect consecration to God, faults of pride or temper, and the worldliness and inaction which render so many believers unfruitful.

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE

At Steinway Hall.

THE list of subjects for prayer to-day (he said) is an awful one. We are gathered together in almost the luxury of our religious worship. Through Christendom we have got to bow our heads before God about our drunkenness and impurity—impurity buttressed by the very law of a Christian land! Go through the whole list—oppressive laws, demoralising trades, the opium traffic, exciting hatred between nations, luxury, the wasteful use of God's gifts, and all the rest of it. That is not the worst. The worst is that ninety-nine Christians out of a hundred do not seem to fret about it. Most of us want to make our fortune, and, when we die, to get to heaven; but these terrible evils scarcely make a heart ache, or spoil an appetite even, or break up a night's rest. What can we do in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ? One does want words of fire, for Christ is being scorned because of all this. I would we could get right face to face with Jesus and see that agony of his. If the disciples, when they went forth with the triumphant assurance that Jesus Christ was going to be King, had dreamed for a moment that in the nineteenth century after the commencement of Christianity there would be gathered together in a great capital a number of Christians bewailing a set of evils like these, they would have been simply appalled. How is it? There never was so much energetic evangelistic work as there is to-day. Never was the Gospel preached so fully, so freely, so blessedly; never was there such downright earnest, simple Gospel preaching; never was the Bible so widely circulated; never was good literature so widely dispersed; never were Christians more white hot than now; never were men and women more ready, for Christ's sake, to set themselves to look into evils and see whether they can remedy them.

The great question of total abstinence has been taken up, at last, by the churches; and yet here are these evils. I cannot help asking myself, If England is a fair specimen of what Christianity can do for the world, is it worth while to go to the expense of training men as missionaries, and sending them to heathen nations to make them like England? I am told by foreigners of all nations that there is no sight on the face of the earth so appalling, in its hideous debauchery, as the sight which those of us who came out of St. James's Hall on the morning of the New Year, saw in Piccadilly and Regent-street. And that is Christianity, and those are Christians! Is it worth while going on—if we cannot get something better than this? Why not wash our hands of it—eat, drink, be merry, and die?

Then, look at caste—caste as rigid and haughty and as exclusive as anything in India; and yet we call ourselves by the name of the meek and lowly Jesus! Is Christianity not able to do the work God meant it to do? Are we off the lines? If Christianity is able to cast out these devils, why are they not cast out? If Christianity cannot do it, let us pray God to send us something else. If we are off the lines, let us try to get on them. It is time for us to be in downright earnest. I would I knew how to speak about these things. One wants more than simple words; one wants a new method of speaking—the fire of the living God to set our words ablaze. Shall we, every man and woman here—for we are all responsible—set to work and try to find out the lines which Christ has laid down for the Church?

There are three aspects in which one's thoughts about Christianity may be summed up. (1) Christianity is a great revelation of God and of our relation to Him, our Father. (2) Christianity is a means of individual salvation. (3) Christianity is God's power for subduing and regenerating the world. This last we often forget; and yet if we leave it out the other two must be ever incomplete. Looking further we can trace the very evils in our midst to the fact that we forget our own responsibility in relation to the world's conversion. The very evils which Jesus Christ has come to remedy will be perpetuated and intensified by our religion, unless we surrender ourselves to the complete claims and purposes of God in Christ. We can only know the blessings of Christianity when we hold ourselves in connection with the conversion of the world. What do I know about Fatherhood in God, except as it begets in me a great brotherliness towards all men? How can I kneel down and call God Father, unless there be cast out of me the devil of scorn, pride, and unbrotherliness? These are the things we so often overlook. Tracing our holy religion back to its fount and spring, I find them up in the holy mount. "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son." Wherever that love of God is, it will always shape itself after the pattern seen in the mount: it will be a boundless love to the world.

Now Christianity has become a poor, little, shrivelled thing—every man selfishly seeking the salvation of his own soul. God knows how horribly true it is with most of us. Am I wrong? Thank God, if I am wrong. If I am uncharitable, thank God for that also. No one will rejoice more than I in finding that it is false. But that is the history of the matter: Christianity as revealing the Father, and Christianity as bringing a personal Saviour, has been accepted by Christians; but Christianity as a power, by which God would lay hold of the world and regenerate it, has well nigh dropped out of our thoughts.

Turn to Acts i. There you find Christ laying down the lines upon which the Church is to work. "The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began." It is strange to say, "Began both to do and teach." When men are dead, we do not talk about what they began to do and teach; the influence of their doing and teaching may live, but their work is over, and they can teach no more. Jesus Christ was a great beginning. "Until the day in which He was taken up." Here you have Christ going on doing and going on teaching, but in a new relation, as the risen Christ; and by a new method—through his Church. Before He spake with human lips, before He looked out upon the world with his own eyes of compassion, before He wrought with his own hands. Now, you, my brothers and sisters, are the eyes through which Christ's compassion is to look out upon this world, and yours are the lips through which his love is to speak. Yours are the hands with which He is to bless men, and yours the feet with which He is to go about doing good, through his Church, which is his body. "After that, He, through the Holy Ghost, had given commandments unto the Apostles whom He had chosen." Here is a strange thing. Could not the Lord have given commandments without the Holy Ghost? Had He not authority to say to one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh? If we get at this, we can find the lines upon which the Church is to work. Jesus never did anything until He was filled with the Holy Ghost. Jesus Christ accepted exactly our human conditions from the first—entered precisely into the conditions upon which his Church was to work. He never wrought a miracle for Himself. God wrought no miracles for Him—miracles through Him, but not for Him. Now, He comes to his Church and says: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," i.e., "Ye shall go forth just as I have gone forth, and ye shall be many Christians, living my one life over again. Just as I was fitted for my work, so you shall be fitted for your work." Ye—that is where it rests. Jesus Christ has laid the world's conversion upon us. Ye—that is how it is to be accomplished. Here is the mistake we make. We are always standing with eyes uplifted. "Lord, wilt Thou?" And Jesus Christ is ever looking down upon his Church, and saying, "No; ye." That is where the responsibility rests. Unchristlike Christians are the worst hindrances. The devil, or the world, cannot hinder. The foes are "the foes of his own household."

What, then, can we do? Get right down before the Lord alone and say to Him, "Now, Lord Jesus, here am I; I do want to go out and live thy life all over again. Take me, give me this power." Expect it for the asking, and say, "I am sure the Lord is glad to give, and the power is mine"; and go forth in the strength of it. I see in the papers that Her Majesty was pleased to confer titles upon worthy recipients, because it was the New Year. My heart went up to the King, and said:—Wilt Thou give me a New Year's gift? If Thou wouldst decorate me with an order and adorn me with a new cross, Master, I have this gift to ask of Thee. Be Thou to me the fairest, so dear and so bright that, like the stars dying in the sunshine, all shall be lost in comparison with Thee. Master, I have yet another gift to ask of Thee. May thy work be my ceaseless joy! And yet I venture to add, Master, I would give Thee a New Year's gift. Wilt Thou have it? It is a very poor gift, and not worth thy acceptance; but it is the best I have. Master, wilt Thou take me? So let us deal with Christ, and let Christ deal with us. That is our power for remedying the ills that we deplore.

REV. HENRY DENING

At Centenary Hall.

Let us look at Confession in three aspects; National, Ecclesiastical, and Individual. As to national sins, we look abroad and deplore the Nihilism of Russia, the Atheistic Socialism of Germany, the godless Communism of French society; but let us not forget that at home we have lawlessness which may well cause us sorrow. There is also Scepticism on the part of those who are regarded as leaders in the nation and in the Church. If there is one sin above all others we have to confess nationally, ecclesiastically, and individually, it is that of selfishness, hydra-headed, far reaching, and demoralising. Have we sent the Gospel abroad to the nations of the earth as we ought? Here, in the nineteenth century after our Lord ascended to heaven, millions have not heard his name. We believe that Christianity is the grandest civiliser, but we are willing to make no sacrifice that the Gospel may be proclaimed, and we suffer for this. Look across the Channel and see Ireland groaning under unnumbered woes. If the Word of God were known, and read, and valued there, it would make the Irish people God-fearing and law-abiding and just—then we should not hear of lawlessness and troubles. Centuries ago we should have had the Bible translated into the Irish tongue and circulated amongst the Irish. We failed to do that, and we are reaping the consequences of our selfish neglect.

Then think of a hundred and fifty millions spent in strong drink annually, and one million to send the Gospel to the heathen. We send the Gospel to Africa, but we also send fire-water to demoralise the native tribes. Selfishness, the desire for gain, lies at the root of this drink traffic. What is it but our selfishness that is forcing the opium on the Chinese? To fill our own exchequer we foster the trade, regardless of the ruin that is wrought. It is said, and we must believe it, that our opium has done more harm than our missionaries have done good.

Nationally, have we helped the poor as we [illegible] In Canada and Australia there are vast continents waiting for settlers. We will spend hundreds of millions in war for our own glory and honour, and refuse to spend ten millions in giving the poor a fair chance in these lands. We want to be done with party, and see our legislators as God-fearing men enter on the tasks awaiting them. There is Sabbath-breaking too, one of the crying sins of the day. One day's rest in seven is the law of the human frame, and without it we can look for neither blessing nor success.

And surely we need confession ecclesiastically. What a blessed thing if the Church were united with one heart and mind to make David King. We want to care less for the pence and more for the people. We want more unity in aim and effort. I remember when the gas failed in a parish church, they sent across to the Methodist and the Baptist and the Presbyterian chapels and borrowed the lamps. The lamps were different, but the light was the same; as you passed the church and saw the light shine out, you could not tell whether it came from Methodist, Presbyterian, or Baptist lamps. There may be differences in church polity; but, if we are all shining as lights for God, we will shine to one purpose, and then the world will believe that the Father hath sent the Son.

We are usually ready enough to join in a general confession, but when it comes to changing We into I, that is a different and harder matter. Let us cultivate the grace of confession before God; we shall find it the secret of blessing and power. Real confession includes conviction of sin, contrition for sin, conversion from sin, and consecration to God. There is no true confession if these elements are awanting.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was announced to preside during the second hour, but was unable to be present. The time was profitably spent in praise, prayer, and testimony.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4.

PRAYER FOR FAMILIES.

For the hallowing of the home in all its relationships—for the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon the efforts of parents to guide their sons and daughters to Christ; for invalided members of the family; for domestic servants; for both teachers and taught in Universities, schools, and colleges, and for Sunday-schools; for Associations of Young Men and of Young Women, and for every effort to protect the immature against temptation, and to equalise the standard of morality for both sexes.

REV. COLMER B. SYMES

At Steinway Hall.

IN the course of his address Mr. Symes said, We do well to remember that the home is really the unit of the national life; that no nation will ever rise to a higher moral level than the level of its home life. It is there that we must look for the real strength and the ennobling of our English life. Our young people grow up accustomed, to some extent (until they find us false), to look at things from our standpoint, and to copy our judgments and estimates of life. If we are anxious, on patriotic grounds, that England's influence should be stronger morally than it has ever been, that it should have a higher, a purer, a more spiritual tone, I am sure that it is to the home life that we must look.

Our spiritual interest in our children will reveal the reality of our own spiritual life. Do we crave the spiritual for them supremely; being far more anxious what good service they shall render to Christ in the world than we are how they shall stand commercially or socially, or politically? May we not test our own spiritual life thereby? I am surprised very often in conversing with Christian people, to find that, while their hopes for the future of their children are intensely spiritual, their ideas with regard to their present life are very far removed from the spiritual. I would simply say, as a matter of common sense, that in whatever way we wish our young people to walk hereafter, we must train them now. If we do not wish them to be theatre goers, we must not train them to love the theatre by the pantomime and other theatrical displays. If we do not wish them to go into the ball room, we must not train them for the ball room by the gay children's parties at Christmas time, when dances and other occupations of a similar character are introduced. If we do not wish them to make money getting the great concern of their life, we must not encourage them in their youthful days to be so very keen about monetary considerations. If we want them to form high moral standards by which they will estimate life and estimate men, we must accustom them to form those judgments every day, and must at once correct any tendency on their part to estimate life by its worldly standard.

No one who looks out on life to-day can be ignorant of the difficulty of Christian parents, in ruling and governing in the home—the intense anxiety that all feel lest by undue and unwise restraint we shall send our children to the opposite extreme or incline them to think for a moment that the parents who love them so intensely are out of sympathy with what delights and interests their young life. But while we do feel this, and feel it so that it brings us to our knees to ask for the wisdom which God has promised to give, we yet feel that, where God places people in authority and responsibility, they cannot throw that authority away and escape the responsibility of their position. Let us seek grace, then, in our home that God may find—if I may speak after the manner of men—no difficulty in answering our prayer for the conversion of our children, by the atmosphere which we are creating in the home life. Let Him find that the atmosphere is a good conductor for the spiritual influences which must come from above. If thus we are able, in the spirit of love, and spirituality, and prayerfulness, to create the atmosphere, I believe God is willing to do his divine work and to pour his Spirit upon our children.

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE

At Centenary Hall.

The president of the first hour's meeting was Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE, who read "the Householder's Psalm," as it is called, Ps. ci., making some pithy and practical comments as he read. On verse 4, "I will know no evil person," he said: How much more is the social position of our guests regarded than their relationship to the Lord Jesus Christ. There is no blacker and fouler thing in the Christian life than this. Oh, it is a horrible thing, and a libel upon our holy religion, that the bond of union between Christians should not be the fact that they are one in Christ, but money and social position. We can do with bad people if they are only "gentlemen;" but we cannot do with a fellow believer if we know that he keeps a small shop. God help us. Nobody asks the harlot to his table; in God's name, why do we permit the guilty man to enter our household? "Mine eyes shall be on the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me." Our old men cannot get employment now, because they are not sharp enough, and cannot put on the steam as they once did. But if a man has been a faithful servant, says the Psalmist, I will not find the first opportunity of turning him away. I will find a place for him somehow. "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house." There are many ways of telling lies. A man may have two prices for his goods, or he may under-colour or over-colour. Surely we want a great revival of Quakerism—our words being yea, yea, or nay, nay, and no beating up or beating down.

THE RAISING OF JAIRUS' DAUGHTER.

After prayer on the subject of the day, Mr. Pearse gave an address based on this narrative as contained in Luke's Gospel. Let us think, he said, of the children's need. They need Jesus. A very commonplace thing to say, and of course we all believe it. Indeed we do not; most of us do not believe it at all. Many people treat their children as if they could do without Jesus. A penitent man or woman is pointed to Christ, but the penitent children are told to be good. They can no more break the bondage of evil, or be good without Christ, than we can. We think the children cannot understand theological explanations, for which let us thank God devoutly. Thousands of our children have been so perplexed about faith and repentance that they have gone clean away from Christ. When Jesus said "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," He knew He was down low enough for them to find Him. Do not try to explain salvation; tell them about Jesus, and give Him a chance of loving them. Let every parent take it into their hearts that the need of our boys and girls is the presence of Jesus.

Jairus went forth himself to seek Jesus. This is the responsibility that we have to take to ourselves to-day. We wish that our children should be such good, useful men and women; but our greatest power in blessing them is in finding Jesus for ourselves. There are hundreds of precepts for the training of children, but not one of them is worth a straw to us unless we have ourselves got down at the Saviour's feet, as this ruler did. Then we should know what to do with all the rest. Finger posts will not do much in the religious life. It must be the loving heart, and the brotherly hand, and feet that go in the right way. It is no good talking about Jesus to the children if we are strangers to Him. But most of us have probably come to Jesus. Notice, then, what is said further of this ruler—he besought Christ to come into his house. Ah, that is where He wants to be. He will meet his people in the church, but He loves to meet them in the house. He is so friendly and familiar, and so glad if anybody will open the door, and bid Him come in and stay. He loves to sit at the table and to get in amongst the children. Let us think of Him thus to-day. Many of us put Christ so high up that we can never touch Him; so far off that nobody can get anything from Him. He wants to be one of the family, and to make Himself at home. Let our hearts go forth to Him and say, "Master, I beseech Thee come into my house, sit at the dinner table, and with the children at the day's end, and dwell with us."

See further how Jairus kept close to Jesus; the throng pressed, but he allowed nothing to get between Him and the Saviour. Everything depends on that close walk with Jesus. A man may keep religious usages and be able to tell all about his conversion; but the vision of Jesus, and the close communion with Jesus, has so much to do with the atmosphere of the home. It is not so much the precepts we teach, as the tone, the look, the temper that can only come from a close walk with Christ. Nothing brings sunshine into the home like the abiding presence of Jesus. Let us each ask ourselves if we have got the hand of the Master; if we are in touch with Him. That is the only life that will satisfy us. When we are tempted or tried, let us refer it all to Jesus.

Then, note this man's entreaty; he fell down at Jesus' feet and besought Him. He put his whole heart into his desire. There is a great tendency in us—I know it from my own experience—to think in a vague sort of way:—Our children will get all right by and by; they are very amiable, and all that, and we have much to be thankful for, and so forth. But it seems as if this man put his arms about the Master's feet and said: "Thou shalt not stir from this place until Thou bless my child." There is one thing that Heaven cannot stand. God does not care for all the threats of hell; He laughs in derision at the counsels of the kings and rulers of the earth; but He cannot resist the entreaties of a broken heart.

Is it too much to ask that every father and mother should set aside a quarter of an hour every day for earnest waiting upon God on behalf of their children? A little while ago I was staying at the house of a gentleman not far from London. In conversation I took the opportunity of asking if his family and servants were Christians. "Yes," he said, "thank God, they are, and all working for the Master." I asked him how long that had been so, and he replied, "It came about in this way: my children were growing up to manhood and womanhood, and I began to think that they were not decided for Christ, though they were very amiable and lovable morally. So I set aside a quarter of an hour every day, and began to pray for them all by name, putting the needs of each before the Lord. I cannot tell you how, but one by one they came right out on the Lord's side, and gave themselves up to his work." So I believe, dear friends, that the matter of the conversion of our children lies very much in our own hands. We spend much time, and are in great haste to make money for them; is it much to ask that every father and mother here will spend one quarter of an hour each day this year in pleading with God for the children and for the servants, name by name?

Think of what there was to try the faith of Jairus. As he went along, the woman with the issue of blood touches the Master, and He stops; as though the little maiden were not dying. Then Jairus sees his servant coming, and his heart sinks within him, as the messenger presses through the crowd, lays his hand on his master's shoulder and says, "Trouble Him not; thy daughter is dead." Unbelief seems to fling its cold shadow over Jairus, but he hears the Master speak to the woman who had touched Him, and had faith to believe that Christ would do as much for his little daughter as for her. And Jesus lingered not because his love was slack, or He had forgotten the little maiden, but because He would give her a richer and fuller gift. Jesus never forgets or trifles with the deepest feelings of our nature; but He treasures up a larger gift than we dare to ask from Him. So there comes the tender word, "Fear not, believe only, and she shall be made whole."

We must pass over much that might be said, and note how, after He had restored the maiden to life, He "commanded to give her meat." We cannot give life; that is Christ's work. It is ours to minister to that life. He does not tell them to give her medicine. Alas, how often we misread this passage in our dealings with the children. When one of them is naughty, how often it is, first a punishment and then a lecture upon religion. So they get to associate religion with that which is unpleasant, and dark and gloomy; and they do not soon lose the associations of their childhood. Let us learn of Jesus; give her meat—the daintiest, sweetest, most delicate, and most tempting morsels. We must associate in their minds the religion of Jesus Christ with all that is bright and happy. I heard a story related of a boy who was listening to his grandfather's long, dreary prayer, and at last broke the dreariness by saying, "Father, grandfather has lost his Amen."

Mr. Pearse concluded his address by an earnest plea to employers that they should show sympathy, and extend care towards the young men in their employ, who may be away from the shelter of home. He remembered when he came to London as a young man to study at one of the great hospitals, how delighted he would have been if anybody had asked him to visit them on Sunday; he thought then that the world was the unkindest, dreariest place that ever was. He told an incident related by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, of a young man whom she had found in a music-hall, and rescued from one who wished to lead him into evil paths. She called on his employer, who thanked her for the interest she had taken in the youth. I do not think, said Mr. Pearse, Christian men have any right to take young men or women, and leave them to the temptations and perils of this great London alone and uncared for.

ADDRESS BY REV. W. HAY AITKEN.

The same subject was continued during the second hour in an address to a crowded hall by Rev. W. Hay Aitken. Basing his remarks on the request preferred to Pharaoh by Moses to let the people go out of Egypt with their little ones to worship, Mr. Aitken first traced the progressive enlargement of God's dispensational dealings with men in the history of the ages. God began with man as an individual, and all through the Antediluvian period we read of eminent individual men. Then in the Patriarchal epoch He dealt with the family of which Abraham was the head. After that there came the Divine dealing with a chosen nation. Now is the dispensation, not of one nation, but of the Church, taken from among all the nations. By and by there will come in a world-wide dispensation, when the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of God and his Christ, and when God shall sit enthroned over the ransomed and renewed nature of mankind.

The family, said Mr. Aitken, is formed on the same Divine idea as that of the upper world, where the children of the great Father are gathered around his feet, and live in his presence, where sin and sorrow are unknown. So the Apostle speaks in one place of "the Father from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named." In another place he informs us that our children are holy; we are not to regard them as belonging to the world, as though Satan had any sort of claim upon them. The Lord demands them from us, and it is our privilege to place them in his hands. If the Christian Church only realised this more fully, and responded to her privilege more faithfully, what a different world we should soon have. There would be a continual increase of the spiritual Church according to the laws of arithmetical progression in the natural increase of the race. But the fact is, that while the Church is winning some here and there from the outside world, Satan is winning to his side those who are of Christian parentage; so that the gain from without is neutralised by the loss from within. Thank God, there are many of the children of Christian parents who grow up to love and serve the same Master; on the other hand, it cannot be denied that there are not a few who are the children of believers who by their life dishonour Christ's name, and brand with discredit the household of faith from which they have sprung. This fact calls for deep self-examination on the part of Christian parents, that they may see wherein lie the causes of this defection.

Notice, first, that our influence for God, as Christian parents, will always be in exact proportion to the depth, reality, and spirituality of our own piety. Children are very shrewd in detecting inconsistency in character; partly, perhaps, by reason of their natural guilelessness. Where parents are genuine and real in their religious life, a profound impression will unquestionably be made on the minds of their offspring. On the other hand, if the piety of the parents is shallow and superficial, and almost unconsciously hypocritical (for we do not speak of arrant hypocrites), the children will be among the first to detect the presence of this unreality, and it will affect their own estimate of religion. Mr. Aitken repeated in part some conversation he had with the head master of a large private school in England, as illustrating the evil effects on the children of the inconsistencies and failures of professedly evangelical parents. In one case a son had told this teacher that at home family prayer was very regular when pious people were in the house; when the visitors were not pious people the prayers had to go to the wall. If a clergyman or prominent Christian happened to be at dinner, there was a good deal of religious conversation; but, if not, one might wait for many a day before such a thing was alluded to. The young man said he had come to the conclusion that the whole thing was a farce, and he had ceased to believe in it—in fact, he did not believe in anything at all. This teacher's conversation, added Mr. Aitken, had made a deep impression on him, and since then he had kept his eyes open, with the result that he had observed, over and over again, that in cases where there was this unreality in the religious life of the parents, the children did go wrong, and it was not in the least surprising that they should.

Another reason of these defections in Christian families is that parents neglect to take steps for bringing direct influence for good to bear on the children. They trust to the general influence that pervades the household. The head master referred to mentioned the case of another youth who said that his parents were in the habit of retiring after breakfast to have a season of prayer and Bible study, but the children were not asked to join in the exercise. If specific and direct efforts are not made to draw the children away from the world and its follies, parents cannot say that they have embraced the opportunities their relationship gives them of influencing them for God.

On the other hand, the danger of turning a Christian home into a spiritual hot-bed has to be avoided. It is a mistake to lead children on too hastily to an outward profession of Christ. Most children are open to the influence of praise, and if they see that a certain course of conduct on their part will lead to expressions of approval from their parents, they are tempted to profess more than they really feel. The result of this forcing process too often is that a violent reaction sets in. As the child grows up, he comes to the conclusion that the whole thing was pretty much a delusion from beginning to end. He professed certain things merely for the sake of pleasing his parents and gaining their approval; when he leaves home and is surrounded by very difficult influences, he cannot stand out against them. How judicious parents need to be, lest in seeking the good of their children they should do them irreparable injury.

Another danger of a very serious kind is the undefined notion, too often entertained, that the children must serve an apprenticeship to the devil before they are converted to God; and that in order to render a genuine conversion possible it is necessary that in the first instance they should be averted from the Great Father to whom from the first they belong. Christian people, of course, will not say this, but practically they act as if they believed it. Do we not console ourselves sometimes by saying that sooner or later they will get converted and it will be all right; that he is only a child, and so forth. Only a child! Why, we ought to claim them for Christ from their tenderest years, and teach them to come to Him at the very dawning of their intelligence. Thank God, the Gospel is so simple that a child may accept it, though a philosopher may not be able to understand it. Let us regard it as our privilege to bring our little ones into saving contact with Christ, even though there may not be any very marked conversion, and they are not able to point to any particular epoch in their lives when they consciously passed from death to life. I believe such young people often make the best Christians we have; at any rate that is my own experience and observation. Some of the most devoted, whole-hearted, and God-glorifying Christians I have known have been those who said they could not tell the time when they first began to love and trust Jesus Christ. Yes, the children are to go with us, and we must claim them for Christ from the very first. We cannot afford to lose them; what are we doing to prevent the loss? Thank God for the power of prayer, and for the answers He gives to prayer. But are we definitely laying ourselves out to win our families to Christ? God grant that we may realise our responsibilities in this respect, and take out of the way everything in ourselves that would hinder the attainment of this result

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5.

PRAYER FOR THE CHURCH OF GOD.

For every branch of the one universal Church, that all may be filled with the Holy Ghost and enabled to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; for more love and co-operation among Christians; for the removal of needless causes of division; for the better observance of the Lord's Day; for greater wisdom and zeal to labour for the conversion of the ungodly, the religious education of the young, and the growth of believers; for the Spirit of Truth to guide students of his Word into a fuller understanding of it; for bishops, pastors, evangelists, and church councils; for the attainment by all the Lord's people of a higher standard of holiness and consecration to service; for a more faithful testimony against false teaching; and for the speedy coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

REV. DR. DAVID MACEWAN

At Steinway Hall.

IN these days, when tendencies are shown towards errors in doctrine, it is especially important that the Church of God be upheld by prayer, in bearing a full, clear, and unmistakable testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus. Never did the Evangelical Alliance resolve upon a more worthy object than when it recently determined to hold certain meetings and to put forth certain efforts in order to bring prominently before public attention the grand fundamental truths of the Gospel—the Divinity of our blessed Lord, the true atonement that was made for sin upon the cross, the necessity and sanctifying power of God's Holy Spirit, and the great truths concerning the rewards and punishments of the future world. All these truths belong to that testimony which the Church is called to deliver. When we have tendencies that are leading the minds of men away towards Rationalism on the one side, and on the other to Superstition, and the mummeries of mere formalism, it becomes all who have the love of Christ in their hearts, and who are animated by true loyalty to his holy name, to proclaim the great saving truths of the Gospel with fidelity, and with courage. God of old required the trumpet to give no uncertain sound, and He is requiring this of his Church at the present day. Take Christ out of the Bible, and you take the light out of the lamp, the Shekinah out of the Temple. Take Christ from the preaching of the Gospel, and you reduce it to the condition in which Samson was when he was shorn of his locks: its power to convert is gone, its power to regenerate is gone, all its energies are paralysed. Men may speak of the truth in Christ as if it had been outgrown by the progress of modern science and philosophy, but you may as well tell the husbandman that the progress of agriculture has outgrown the fertilising power of the earth, and the vivifying influences of the sun; or the mariner, that the progress of navigation has outgrown the guiding power of the compass and the dimensions of the sea. It is when the Gospel ministry has most of Christ in it and least of self, that the Church is most powerful for the accomplishment of the great ends which the testimony of Christ is destined to secure.

The Church is also called to exhibit a special character. That character is personal holiness. While the utterance of the word of God in our pulpits is of great importance in connection with the Church's history and welfare, and while a sound Christian belief is of unspeakable value, nothing can be so valuable, in a practical point of view, for the accomplishment of the Church's immediate ends, as personal holiness on the part of all who profess to be connected with it.

REV. E. A. STUART

At Centenary Hall.

He based his remarks on 2 Chron. xxix. 27, "When the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also." After a brief exposition of the different aspects of our Lord's atoning work, typified by the burnt offering, the meat offering, the peace offering, the sin offering, and the trespass offering, Mr. Stuart emphasised the need of a full and thorough consecration to God before the Christian could enter into the joy of the Lord. This joy is inseparable from self-sacrifice. Let us begin a new year by opening up to God every avenue of our nature that has hitherto been closed to Him. We have been confessing the sins of the Church; it is easy for us to do that, but it is comparatively hard to confess our own sins. We must get down into the inner chambers of the heart, and confess not merely the harsh judgments and the want of charity on the part of the Church, but our own uncharitableness. There can be no burnt offering till the temple has been thoroughly cleansed, and until this burnt offering of whole-hearted surrender is offered there will be no joy. This self-sacrifice may be carried in different spheres of action. Our carnal love of ease, and the promptings of our lower nature, must give way in order to secure the cultivation of the spiritual life. Then we ought to deny ourselves for the sake of our fellow-men. One reason why the Gospel makes so little progress is that the world sees so little self-sacrifice on the part of professing Christian people. The Christian may be just as selfish in attending his prayer-meetings and Bible-classes as the worlding in attending the theatre, if these things are done simply for self-gratification and enjoyment. It is not the general idea that joy is the fruit of self-sacrifice; but, surely, it is true in the deepest sense. And the joy will enable us to render the sacrifice. He who lives for himself alone, though he be a millionaire, is the most unhappy man in the world. God help us to consecrate ourselves more fully and joyously to the Lord.

MR. FRANK A. BEVAN

presided during the second hour, and contributed some practical remarks to the topic of the day. Having read Ephesians iv., in which the Church of Christ is described as "one body," he said: When we hear of the controversies that are going on between those who profess to be members of this one body, we find it difficult to believe that there is one body at all. Much time is spent, or perhaps wasted, in finding fault, instead of forbearing one another in love, and devoting ourselves to work for the Master. Still we are one, and such an event as this Week of Prayer brings out the oneness of the Church universal in a remarkable way. The tie that binds us together, whether we be Englishman, Negro, or Chinese, is one which can never be broken.

There are several things set before us in this passage as essential, if the Church of Christ would fulfil her mission. The first essential is a faithful ministry. If ever there was a time when we needed to pray for such a ministry it is now. We need men who will keep close to the Word of God, and will feed the Church with the sincere milk of the Word furnished by God for our growth and edification. There is a great temptation in these days of novelty and sensationalism, for ministers to bring forward something new and startling rather than adhere to the simple old-fashioned Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We ought to make all allowance for this, and, out of love to the Master and his Church, never cease to pray that ministers of every denomination may be men deeply instructed in the Word themselves, that they may be able out of it to teach others.

Then, as to Christians generally, there is the worthy walk mentioned by the Apostle—"with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love." These are not the characteristics probably that we would have suggested; but who can deny that they are needed? I believe that even the most diligent of workers for Christ sometimes fail in these things. We are to speak the truth—to be faithful to our convictions; but that fidelity is to be exercised in love. We must recognise that we have varied gifts, and each is to exercise his own, rather than to find fault with his brother, who may do things differently. Then another great essential is the effectual working of which the Apostle speaks. There is a tendency, perhaps, in these days, to magnify work at the expense of walk, but both are equally necessary. We are each to find out the work that God gives us to do and then ask for grace faithfully and perseveringly to do it. If we ask his guidance He will show us whether He would have us remain at home or go to some distant field of labour abroad. If every professing Christian were true to his calling there would be plenty of workers for both, and God would add daily to the Church such as should be saved.

Much prayer was made during the two hours, in connection with the subjects suggested by the Alliance.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 6.

INTERCESSION FOR MISSIONS.

For the quickening of a missionary spirit, and for the power of the Holy Ghost upon the preaching of the Word; for all agents in Gospel work, that they may be kept humble, devoted, and courageous; for native churches and converts, especially such as endure persecution for the Gospel's sake; for Mission Colleges, Bible and Tract Societies, and the spread of vernacular Christian literature; for the conversion of Jews, Mohammedans, and heathen to the faith of Christ; for the overthrow of all false religions; for the more complete opening up of Africa to the light, and the cessation of its slave trade; and for a blessing on all Missionary Conferences to be held this year.

THE address at Steinway Hall was given by Mr. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, who founded his remarks on the proclamation of liberty to all the inhabitants of the land, that was issued by God's command, at the Jewish year of Jubilee. Applying this to the present condition of the world, he said, has not the Christian Church refrained from fulfilling the great commission which Christ laid upon it, the work He gave it to execute? Christ redeemed the world: He left the Church to carry out the great mission of reconciliation. God was in Christ reconciled, and God is in the ministry of the Gospel beseeching men to be reconciled. The first is accomplished; the second is only partially, hardly half, accomplished: it is in slow process of accomplishment. Do we not need to remind one another of these facts, to stir one another up, and to call upon the Church to obey the Divine command to proclaim liberty—spiritual liberty—bought with the blood of Jesus: to proclaim liberty throughout Africa, and India, and China, and in all parts of the world? Oh, that we might understand, and bow to our great responsibility, and do the work which God has laid upon us! There are in heathendom 870 millions! How small a portion have ever heard the Gospel, or have any chance of hearing and receiving that liberty which we enjoy. Let us continue in prayer and labour this year, crying to God and calling to men—crying to God to pour upon the Church the mighty fulness of his Spirit; and calling upon men, upon churches, denominations, societies, individuals, to proclaim liberty to the captives throughout the whole world, and to every creature, according to the command of Christ that "ye break every yoke and bid the oppressed go free."

REV. F. B. MEYER

At Centenary Hall.

In the course of the preliminary service of praise and prayer, Mr. Meyer succeeded in infusing unusual life and warmth into them. He said the great bane of all our prayers, public and private, is lack of definiteness. In order to be general we must be particular. It is recorded in Harlan Page's memoirs that after he died they found entries in his diary to the effect that on such and such a day he had a great spirit of intercession poured out on his soul for such and such a missionary station. It was his practice to let God's Spirit have His way with him. He used to pray specifically for such and such a place, and it was found that revivals broke out in each different place thus prayed for. Let us believe that now, as each of us flashes a message to the Throne of God, some lonely worker, perhaps in the New Hebrides, or on the Congo, or in India, or China, shall feel as it were a blessed inspiration, and shall say in the heart: "I am sure somebody is praying for me away in old England." Let us send up, to-day, any number of personal messages to scattered Christian workers by way of the Throne of God.

After a season of silent breathing, a good clerical brother, with a foreign accent, began, unasked, to pray in the usual roundabout and diffusive way, and continued in this strain for some time. A gentle reminder, however, made him resume his seat, and Mr. Meyer said he wanted some twenty or so of the friends present to rise in turn and just tell out to God in a sentence the specific burden that was on their heart. The effect was almost electric; it was as if a fresh breeze from the sea had come sweeping down some valley where the atmosphere was stagnant and stifling. In quick succession, brothers and sisters—as many of the latter as of the former—sent up short prayers on behalf of workers and places in which they were specially interested. The spirit of prayer seemed to descend on the company, and the mouths of the handmaidens were opened—a thing unprecedented, so far as we recollect, in these too formal programmes for the Week of Prayer. Among fields and workers mentioned were North Africa; work among sailors at home; Spanish Honduras; Victoria Nyanza; Russia; Arabia; Wilmot Brooke's mission in Central Africa: Sheikh Othman mission, Aden; missionaries en route for China; Miss Reade's work, India; Stanley Smith and Studd in China; Baptist Mission on the Congo; South Africa, &c. Instead of the silent spaces and halting prayers that we have sometimes had during the week, Mr. Meyer had to stop the flow of petition. He said that as we had prayed, now we must believe and praise, in the assurance that—

> Jesus shall reign wherever the sun
> Doth his successive journeys run;
> His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
> Till moons shall wax and wane no more.

This song of the coming triumph was sung right heartily, and then followed Mr. Meyer's brief address on the PERSONAL ELEMENT IN MISSIONARY ENTHUSIASM.

We all feel, he said, that during the last few years, the tide of missionary enthusiasm has been rising, until, to-day, the Church at home has become, to a large extent, permeated by the missionary spirit. But, seeing the vastness of the world's need, it is of the utmost importance that that spirit should spread even more widely, and it concerns us to know how best to foster and increase it. We may lay before the people statistics as to the needs of the world, and of the vast numbers as yet unreached by the Gospel. We may also appeal on the side of duty, and bid people remember our Lord's marching orders. But if we rest our appeal on these calls to the intellect of the Christian Church, I am persuaded we shall not stir it as it ought to be stirred in order that the Master's work may be done. Some of you have been thinking of this question and have come to see that the only effectual link between us and missionary work is that of personal sympathy and interest. You first became interested, perhaps, by reading some missionary biography; and there is no better way of quickening the hearts of our young people than by missionary story and adventure, that are often as charming as any romance. Others have been moved mainly by the fact that some dear relative or some close friend has gone forth into a distant land. In other cases individual churches have been linked to some specific point in the mission field; and there is nothing that will keep aglow the spirit of missionary enthusiasm in a church more constantly than this.

But these, after all, are lower efforts. Those tears of Jesus as He wept over the doomed city of Jerusalem must have been ever present to the minds of the Apostles, and the fact that their Master had loved the city so well and shed such bitter tears over it made them feel that, whatever else they did, they must not forget to begin there. Their personal love to Christ must have stirred them to greater exertion than otherwise had been possible. Those tears of Christ over the doomed city were, as it were, but a specimen of the constant sorrow of his heart over a dying world. Do you read the Gospels simply as a narrative of what Christ was—as being so many incidents in past history, or do you not rather read them as being a leaf out of the diary of the living Saviour, who is ever living through the ages the same life of ministry that He lived for thirty-three years on earth? Those tears He shed over Jerusalem are not an isolated instance of his sympathy and the yearning of his heart over lost men. Has He ceased to suffer those pangs of sorrow? In the midst of the throne of God to-day He stands, the Lamb as it had been slain. It is when your ear is put against the bosom of Christ, and you hear his heart beat that you come into personal sympathy with Him, and feel as He feels in relation to the perishing world. Again and again I have sought to lash myself into a sense of interest in the missionary field, but how often it was only the result of a spasmodic stimulus. It is when we approach the dark world through our friendship with Christ, that we become deeply interested in that which is stirring his own nature in the heaven to which He has gone, that we enter into his command and his promise, "Go ye—and I am with you."

Let us consecrate ourselves afresh to-day to the missionary cause. Is there not something that we may do to signalise our attachment to this cause so dear to Christ? Shall we not make some resolve—say, to acquire a more thorough knowledge of missionary methods and missionary enterprise? Or, perhaps, we can spare from our person, our homes, or our purses, of that which would cost us something, in order to bring some alabaster box with which to anoint the feet of Christ. Or, again, we may make it easy for some member of our own family to pursue a cherished purpose in going forth as a missionary, whilst we support them by our intellectual or manual labour at home. And if God should open our way, we will lay our own lives upon the altar, and be prepared to go forth whither He shall call. Above all, should we not bring our hearts into contact with Christ, asking Him to come and incarnate Himself in our mean lives, and weep through those eyes the tears He wept, and feel again in our hearts the love that beat in his, and brought Him to the cross.

MR. J. H. TRITTON

presided during the last hour, and gave a most suggestive address. He remarked at the outset that he was moved by the memory of his own father, who had during the past year gone into the company of heaven, and who took the deepest interest in missionary work. He proceeded to give as a missionary motto the word which, he said, occurs seven times in the Scriptures, and each time in circumstances that have close application to missionary enterprise. Its first appearance (Num. xiv. 30) is in connection with lost privileges. The spies sent out to view the promised land came back telling of a land flowing with milk and honey, but then there were the walled cities, and the Anakim, so that the children of Israel were afraid and refused to go in and possess the land. God was angry with them because of their perversity, and Moses interceded for the people. Then we have what we might call the great missionary charter, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." But God says, in verse 30, "Doubtless ye shall not come into the land." The land lay before them; had they believed, the cities would have been as nothing, even as Jericho was; but they rebelled, and so were not permitted to enter in. Is there not a lesson for us in this? Do we not find all the lands open to us if we will go in with the Gospel in the strength of God; yet we have not done it. We have believed the report of the dignitaries, and the leaders of society, who tell us our efforts are not worth while, and we are surely attempting too much. So we have adopted the attitude of the children of Israel; and might not this bitter word of the Lord go forth against us: "Doubtless ye shall not come into the land."

In 2 Sam. v. 19 we find the second mention of the word, which we may call obedience rewarded. It is an incident in the life of David. He had asked of the Lord, "Shall I go up to the Philistines?" Many are asking this question now as to their duty respecting the heathen. Hear the answer to David: "Doubtless I will deliver the Philistines into thy hands. Brother or sister, if you are asking that question, may not the answer be a message from the Lord to you?

Another passage is the well-known one in Psalm cxxvi. 5, 6, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." This is success assured. How many of our brethren and sisters all over the world are at this moment sowing in tears. What a blessed promise is here for such! We cannot command results: they are with God. But we can scatter the seed in the assurance that He will give success. Wearied, weeping servant of God, rest thyself upon this "doubtless" of our God.

We find the word again in Isaiah lxiii. 16, "Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us." The Jews, as pure monotheists, acknowledged God the Father, but the doubtless here goes far beyond that, for we read on, "Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer." So here we have a proclamation of redemption backed up by this "doubtless," and that is the message we have to carry to the lost world.

Coming to the New Testament we find the word three times. In 1 Cor. ix. 2, Paul says, "If I be not an Apostle to others, yet doubtless I am to you." May not our brethren in the mission field turn round and say the same thing to us? They are apostles in the truest sense of the word. The nations to whom they have gone may not recognise their apostleship, but we certainly ought, for many of them are well known to us; some are members of our own families. And they might say to us, using the argument of the Apostle in the same chapter, "So hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." These our friends need of that material wealth which we here in England and in London are heaping up. The country is growing richer every day. Do missions share, in anything like their true proportion, in the increase of our property? We may take shame to ourselves, our kindred, and our country that it is not so. Why, we spend twenty times more in unnecessary luxuries every year than we give to support those faithful and true apostles whom the Lord has sent forth.

At the close of that well-known narrative of missionary perils in 2 Cor. xi. we find Paul saying (chap. xii. 1), "It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory." Neither is it expedient for us to glory, but rather with shame to take a very low place in this matter of missions. If Paul, recounting his wonderful work, would not glory, what right have we to do so, with so many more opportunities of spreading the Gospel, and so much improved methods in our ships, and telegraphs, and posts; with no hindrance anywhere and, so to speak, no separation? Let us, I say, take home to ourselves how we have done so little.

Lastly, we have in Phil. iii. 8, what may be called the Christ-like motive: "Yea, doubtless, and I count all things less for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." How many of our friends have done that by giving up all in going to the mission field. How few of us at home have done it in the fulness of its meaning. May the Lord grant that in these considerations there may be a word of warning as well as of cheer and encouragement from our Lord, whose word standeth sure—"Doubtless they shall come again with rejoicing, bearing their sheaves with them."

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7.

INTERCESSION FOR NATIONS.

For Kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life; for legislatures and judges, that laws may be wisely made and administered; for the abolition of the opium traffic and the cessation of all forms of cruelty; for a pacific spirit among States; for soldiers and sailors; for emigrants and travellers; for the deliverance of the nations from the superstition and idolatry of Romanism; for a kindlier feeling between classes; for the amelioration of the condition of the poor; for a plentiful harvest the world over; for the elevation of public morals, especially in respect of temperance and chastity; for the cultivation of art and science in a reverent and Christian spirit; for the spread of a pure literature; for all philanthropic work among the suffering or degraded.

Rev. J. F. Kitto, in the course of an address at Steinway Hall, said: Look at our social difficulties, the great problem of the unemployed, the social disturbances we have witnessed in the Metropolis. Do they not, all these things, make us feel our helplessness? Do we know how to solve them? The only plan is to put the case into God's hands, and say, "We can do nothing without Thee." If, in attempting to solve these and other questions which perplex us, we are resting on schemes, organisations, or plans of any sort, devised by ourselves, and are not resting on God, they cannot prosper. Oftentimes, in these days, there is a spirit of pride, of self-reliance, and almost of boastfulness, in the Church of Christ; what we want is, in deep self-abasement and humility, to cast ourselves on the help of God.

The special thought before us to-day is of the position of rulers in all countries, especially the rulers in our own land. Persons who occupy prominent positions have an extraordinary amount of influence. What the Church of Christ wants is, and I believe what even the nation that is not godly wants, is that those who occupy high stations should be influenced by high motives, should be guided by high principles, that they should not truckle to the necessities, or the seemly necessities, of the moment; that they should not stoop to win the breath of popular applause, but that they should look to the Lord for their guidance and direction. We must pray, as only Christians can pray, to God that those who guide us in the State, who control all the influence and the destinies of nations, should not rest with self-satisfaction and in the spirit of boastfulness upon the magnitude of the armies or the power of the weapons which they wield, but that they should be content, in all humility, that stand before God, the King of kings, and the Lord of Lords, and say, "We rest on Thee, Lord, be Thou our helper!" If the spirit of religion were to influence those who guide and govern us in this land, the influence of the country would oftentimes be differently used. For Christian people, at least, it is wiser to consider the Christian character of those whom they elect to guide us than the mere party calls, from one side or the other, which vary so much from day to day. Is it too much to hope, too much to pray for, that God would so move the hearts of his people that God-fearing men may be elected to serve Him in the State and in the Government? No, it is not too much to pray for. If we desire the adoption of those measures which will tend to the advancement of true religion, it is our business to pray that those who rule may be men qualified to govern by the sole qualification which, I believe, can qualify a man to guide the affairs of the nation—and that is, devoted love to God, and earnest reliance upon the help which comes from God.

Y.M.C.A. WHITTINGTON-AVENUE, E.C.

Evening meetings were held here in connection with the Week of Prayer. On Monday evening a thanksgiving service was held, when statements of an encouraging nature were made as to the progress of the Association during the past year.

On Tuesday evening an address was given by the Bishop of London, in which he dealt very forcibly with the topic of the day—confession of sins and shortcomings. This, said his Lordship, is a very solemn thing, which ought to be very deep and real. That which lies at the root of so much of the evil, not only in the Church but in the world, is the imperfect consecration of professed Christians. How many Christians there are who do not find Christ's yoke always easy and his burden light, and the reason is always the same—that consecration to God is imperfect. They have not learnt the lesson that it is easier so serve God entirely than partially, and far more blessed. There is such a thing as the endeavour to serve two masters, and it is far more common than we were apt to think. We think of it as a kind of warning to the worldly, the frivolous, and the hypocritical. But there is not one of us who has not good reason for perpetually putting it to himself that he must not serve two masters. There will still be temptations to overcome, and we shall find, as long as we are in this present world, that we are not entirely redeemed. That redemption of the body belongs to Christ's coming again. There is much evil in the world—at our very doors. With sin there is of necessity degradation, and with degradation there is misery. How much suffering is wrapped up in that one word, intemperance. How awful the evils which come from impurity; what a secret poison to the souls of many, and all the worse because it works in secret so deep within the soul that there is not sometimes the slightest suspicion of its presence. Again, there are cruelty, hardness, and the want of sympathy with our fellow-creatures. How much of all the evil that prevails amongst those who do not call themselves Christians is due to those who do so profess themselves. Think of the inconsistent lives of not only nominal but real Christians, only half in earnest. Their inconsistent lives do terrible mischief. They prevent those who are not Christians from seeing the glory and the beauty of the Gospel.

A marked form of imperfect consecration is cowardice. Sometimes a man who really means to serve God is yet too much of a coward to speak when he ought to speak. If a man heard language used dishonouring to God it was his duty to let it be seen that he did not partake in it. There is no sin of which our Lord spoke in stronger language than that of cowardice. In the matter of intemperance, are we doing our utmost to get rid of it by the means within our reach? Then there is the awful sin of impurity. What a stain it is upon a nation—what a stain upon the soul that indulges in it. Consider the awful language used about it in the New Testament, and yet men speak lightly about it, and call upon us not to be too hard in speaking about it. Let each one say to himself: If I am to be indeed a Christian, if I am to belong to the Lord, it must be by determining with my whole soul that I will give myself to Him, and following in his steps. Whatever I can do to remedy or to prevent the sin and the evil that prevail around shall be my constant purpose.

On Wednesday evening a singularly powerful address was given by Rev. W. H. Aitken on "Aggressive Purity." In vivid and expressive terms he sketched the baneful results of impurity on the life of both sexes, and urged that, for those placed in circumstances of special temptation, the only safe course is that of aggressive action on the right side. A merely negative course is dangerous to the individual, and gives no help in the great battle with sin. The true and Christian course is to enrol ourselves in the ranks of those who, in the strength of God, are fighting this giant evil of our time. Mr. Aitken related an encouraging incident of a gentleman who was brought to a saving knowledge of Christ at one of his meetings in the north. Since then this gentleman has been instrumental in establishing an active effort in a Scandinavian town for coping with the outward manifestations of the social evil. At the close of the address an invitation was given to any disposed to help in rescue work among young men in the West-end of London.

On Thursday evening an interesting and helpful address was given by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston. At the closing meeting on Friday evening an address was given by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. At the beginning of the year he said they had prayed for 100 missionaries for Inland China. They knew times were bad, but it was for God's glory. If they sent the 100 missionaries it would mean an increase of £10,000 expenditure, and this amount coming in the usual way of small donations of an average of 2s. 6d. each, meant the receiving and acknowledging some 80,000 communications. They asked God to send the amount in large donations, and He delighted to answer prayer. They had received the £10,000 in eleven donations, and they had sent out 103 missionaries, selected from some 600 applicants. He pressed home the argument that if God is willing to answer prayer for one mission He is for others. Mr. Taylor asked the prayers of all Christians for those who are labouring among the homeless and starving thousands in China, who are victims of the awful floods, and that this terrible calamity might be overruled to the opening of that part of China, which has been so hard to get at, for the entrance of the Gospel.

WANDSWORTH.

In his address on Tuesday, Rev. E. A. Stuart led the thoughts of those present by way of self-examination, bringing before them God's standard, in Exodus xx., and inviting them to examine themselves by the light of God's Word. Introductory to this, he read Psalm xxxii., and, commenting upon several of the passages, pointed out some of the most important truths bearing upon confession. It was easy to say they were miserable sinners, but they must put the finger down upon the individual sins, calling them by the names that God gives them. Sins against God they must confess to God; sins against their neighbour they were to confess to their neighbour. Every confession must be made over Christ, as Aaron laid his hand upon the head of the great sacrifice. Confession must be accompanied with submission to the chastisement of the Lord, must be instantaneous, and accompanied with separation; there must be the forsaking, as well as the confession, of sin. "He that confesseth and forsaketh his sin shall find mercy." Lastly, there must be faith in the cleansing blood of Jesus.

The address on Wednesday, delivered by Rev. J. F. Andrewes, Vicar of Roxeth, Harrow, dealt with the power of prayer, as illustrated by the release of Peter from prison, but had no special bearing on the subject for the day—prayer for families. Rev. C. J. New's address on Thursday we hope to give at length in our next issue.

On Friday an address was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer, similar in its purport to that he delivered on the same day at Centenary Hall, and noticed elsewhere. On Saturday afternoon, a service for young people was conducted by Captain the Hon. C. Hobart-Hampden, who gave an interesting address adapted to the juvenile audience. There was a large attendance, the body of the Hall being quite full.

The attendance throughout the week was well sustained. The service was simple, but varied. The prayers were fervent, and with them was blended praise, in which were not forgotten the answers vouchsafed to the supplications of the previous year. A number of ministers, representative of different denominations of Evangelical Christians in Wandsworth and the neighbourhood, participated in the exercises.

Besides the meetings which we have reported above, others were held at Exeter Hall, Mildmay Conference Hall, and various churches and chapels in South London. Correspondents in Bath and Ipswich report that united meetings have been held in these places, with much blessing resting on them.

For the Young.

"MORE BLESSED."

A LITTLE girl, a little purse, and a little money in it. That is what my story is about. The little girl we will call Faith. She was about eight and a half years old, and she had half a crown in her purse, which had taken her such a long time to save out of her pocket-money—two whole months, I suppose. Being such a little girl, she did not get very much pocket-money, but she had contrived to save this, and she was going to spend it all on Christmas presents.

"You shall go with me into town after luncheon, to-day, dear, to buy your presents," said her mother, on Christmas eve; at which promise Faith was much delighted, for going into town meant seeing all the shops at their very best, with their bright Christmas dresses on, and possibly, it meant seeing a mysterious package or two carried home, of which she was not allowed to know the contents.

Anyhow, it was all very nice, and Faith took her place at the luncheon table, planning again what present each should have, and counting and recounting, in case the money should by any mischance overstep the limits of the precious half-crown.

But during luncheon she listened to some conversation, which turned all her little plans topsy-turvy.

A collection was made at the table for a society which sheltered and trained little orphans; and Faith listened to the talk as it went round, and heard stories told of the poor little ones thus rescued from a life of misery, until a great longing rose in her heart to do something to help on the work.

The society wanted some money, she knew, and everyone at the table was putting bright little coins, of more or less value, into the box that was being passed from one to another.

Faith would very much have liked to put in something too, but then she had only her half-crown, and she did not think she could part with that in this way, and miss the pleasure of buying the presents she had planned.

What would her little brothers and sisters say to receive nothing from Faith on Christmas morning? Everyone giving presents, and she the only one excepted! Oh no! she could not put her half-crown in the collecting-box.

Then she remembered a little talk she and Aunt Lucy had had the night before. Aunt Lucy was staying with them for Christmas, and she and Faith were great friends. She had been telling Faith a story of two little children, who had saved up their money and given it to the Lord Jesus for a birthday present on Christmas-day, and she had taught her the verse—"It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Suppose, after all, she were to do the same. Everyone in her home would have plenty of presents at Christmas time, even if Faith gave none, and perhaps those poor little orphans needed the money far more than her own brothers and sisters. "More blessed," too. Yes. She had made up her mind. She would give the half-crown; so, when nobody was looking, she dropped the money into the box, and hardly liking to say what she had done, ran away to get ready to go with her mother into the town.

But it so happened that Aunt Lucy was counting the money collected, after luncheon, and saw the half-crown.

She was quite sure no one else had put one in, and the thought struck her that it must be the little one's gift; so she went upstairs to ask her, and found it was really the case.

"Yes, auntie, I put it in," Faith said; and then she told her the reasons which had led her to give it to the society.

But she could not buy her presents, her money being all gone, and so she told her mother while on their way to the town.

"I've given it all away," she said. "Shall I lend you half-a-crown?" asked her mother.

Faith would like that very much. "But it will be a very long time before I can pay you back," she said, "two months!"

However, her mother lent her the money, the presents were bought, which came to two and threepence; and the shopping ended satisfactorily.

That evening, after Faith was in bed, and her stocking hung up in expectation of a visit from Santa Claus, Aunt Lucy told her father the story of the half-crown, which resulted in another half-crown finding its way into the toe of the little stocking hanging at the foot of the bed.

"Oh, Auntie," she cried, coming with it in her hand in triumph the next morning, and forgetting to kiss her, or wish her a Happy Christmas, in her excitement, "see! Jesus has given me my half-crown back again, and now I can pay mother, and have threepence over besides!" and away she ran to discharge the debt, returning presently with a wee, silver threepenny-piece instead.

"I am so glad I gave Jesus my half-crown," she said. "What a number of presents He must have to-day! I have given Him my heart, and you have given Him yours, auntie, and of course, everybody else has done it too!"

But Faith did not know how many people will not give the Lord Jesus their hearts, and so let Him have the Christmas present He most longs for. Have you let Him have your heart, like that little child, who gave up her half-crown because she loved Him? If not, will you not do it to-day, and give Him yourself as a New Year's gift, although New Year's Day is past?

PROVIDENCE-ROW NIGHT REFUGE.—This Institution, a notice of which appeared in a recent issue, is carried on by Roman Catholics, Dr. Gilbert being the Roman Catholic Rector of St. Mary's, Moorfields. We think it due to our readers to state this fact, of which we were ignorant when we inserted the paragraph.

NURSING THE SICK POOR.—The surplus of the Women's Jubilee Offering to Her Majesty is to be devoted to the foundation of an institution for promoting the education and maintenance of nurses for the sick poor in their own homes. The institution will have its chief centre in London, but similar central institutions will be in Edinburgh and Dublin, and that with one or all of them will be affiliated any institutions desiring such affiliation, and satisfactorily fulfilling, in any part of the kingdom, the general purpose of the foundation. The surplus fund amounts to about £70,000.

Y.W.C.A., DUBLIN.—On Thursday last week a meeting was held at the Molesworth Hall, Dublin, Mrs. Hatt Noble presiding, to bid farewell to Miss Clara Bradshaw and Miss Johnson, two young ladies about to leave Ireland for missionary work in China. The former is the firstfruit of Mr. Hudson Taylor's recent visit to Dublin. Mrs. Hatt Noble spoke from Isaiah vi. on the position of true service, the secret of influence and the yielded will for service; and Mrs. Tottenham gave an earnest exhortation on missionary work. These were succeeded by addresses from Miss Johnson and Miss Bradshaw; after which prayer was offered on behalf of missions, these young missionaries, and the many members of the Y.W.C.A. from Ireland now in the mission fields of India and China.

WEEP—PRAY—WORK!

"He that winneth souls is wise."—PROV. xi. 30.

How many buds of promise rare,
Tended with loving, anxious care,
Are plucked before the blossom fair!

Ah, wherefore mourn? They go to grace
The heavenly Gardener's dwelling-place;
They know the sunlight of his face.

On Time's highway, how many feet
Grow weary ere the noontide heat,
Nor stay the journey to complete!

Yet grudge them not their peaceful rest,
Fold gentle hands o'er gentler breast,
And freely yield to God thy best.

Weep not for these, but weep instead
For those whose feet, unheeding, tread
The path which sin hath overspread.

Thy bitter tears, ah, let them run
For such as see life's setting sun
Decline, with life's great work undone.

Nor weep alone! arise and pray!
Follow the erring where they stray:
Win them for Jesus while you may.

BLIND IN SYRIA.

The work among the blind, begun by Mr. Mentor Mott, has been going on more than a quarter of a century. Schools for the blind were established in Beyrout, Damascus, and Tyre, in which the young people learnt reading and handiwork—the girls knitting and basket-weaving, the men broom and brushmaking. We were obliged to give up the men's work, as we found no ready sale, and the expense was greater than our limited means could meet. The Bible teaching being very thorough, several of the young men have become Scripture-readers, and their influence is singularly blessed. We have now six blind men employed as Scripture-readers and teachers, scattered throughout the land. A reader is not unfrequently a welcome visitor, even in the latticed harems of Moslem ladies. Thus the seed of life is sown.

A very few of these Scripture-readers are supported by friends in England; but we require about £200 to keep our work in efficiency.

MANITOBA NOTES.

The Dominion Government has established industrial schools for the Indian tribes under the direction of the different churches; when these have had time to show results we who are interested expect great things from the pupils. The Mosley Methodist Mission is a most successful one, under the care of the large-hearted missionary, Rev. John McDougal, son of the pioneer missionary who died on the prairie. The Church of England has long-established mission stations here and there among these tribes, and the Baptists are about sending teachers to some tribes hitherto neglected. At Long Lake the Government has established an industrial school under Presbyterian auspices. The intention is to teach the Indian boys agriculture and trades.

Our little Sunday-school here has been an experiment. We began on a Sunday last June, when on driving out to the encampment of about eighty tents we found the men, with painted faces and otherwise ornamented, gathered in a large circle on the prairie, engaged in one of their heathenish gambling festivals. None of the squaws or children are permitted to approach when the "braves" are thus engaged. The scene was weird and uncanny enough as one looked at these fierce, paint-streaked faces, distorted with evil passions, while they watched the game which proceeded to the music of tom-toms, and the metallic clinking of a string of bells. Often these poor pagans gamble away horses, wives, tents, and even the indispensable blanket, before giving up the game. May I beg for the prayers of your readers that the missionaries may be blessed in the work of saving these Indians. Our little school has gathered only squaws, some lads and little ones, but they can now sing in their own tongue, "Yes, Jesus loves me," and follow the Lord's Prayer, and in the repetition of John iii. 16. Next spring we hope to have a day-school for them here.

The W.C.T.U. are about establishing a Band of Hope, and have been helping the Y.M.C.A. to make their parlour comfortable. The young men are doing a good work, but have not as yet been able to hire proper rooms, or to afford to keep their room open oftener than once a week. Such rooms are urgently needed as a refuge for the many strangers who come here.

I thank those friends who continue to send copies of The Christian, The Life of Faith, and other useful papers and tracts. I could distribute any number of these precious Gospel messages. Some have been saved through them, I know; how much must have been taught by these silent seed-bearers we cannot know till hereafter.

EVANGELISM IN BOMBAY.

Rev. J. S. Stone, M.D., of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, Bombay, writes to us:—

Never since the days of "California Taylor," now Bishop Taylor, of Africa, has Bombay been so stirred as under the labours of Rev. G. C. Grubb and Colonel Oldham. In a peculiar sense has the old Cathedral been the hospitable home of the people this winter. Without distinction of sect or denomination, they thronged it night after night. Faces never seen before in the building were then eagerly turned upon the mission preacher. From Roman Catholics and Ritualists to Plymouth Brethren and Salvationists, all classes of religious thought were represented, and all classes drank from the smitten Rock and were refreshed.

In one of his addresses, Mr. Grubb said: "As for Peter, when he, full of the Holy Spirit, preached, he got 3000 souls; but when Stephen, full of the same power, preached, he got nothing but stones. Now, it must always be so, stones or souls. You Bombay Christians need a good drubbing, all of you, from the Bishop down; it would be a good sign of real life among you." Mr. Grubb got more souls than stones while among us; but he got a few hard words, which hurt at times more than stones.

In our missioners we recognised three special marks. They were anointed men; sent of God; they were men of the Book. Mr. Grubb and his Book were very much talked about, especially the Book. He ranged through that Book, from Genesis to Revelation, as a pearl seeker, and we shared in the results. Then Mr. Grubb and Col. Oldham were simple men. They were natural in their manner, both in the pulpit and among the people. No one hesitated to approach them, no one felt abashed in their presence. The young especially were drawn to them. Mr. Grubb has very long arms, and with them he proved himself able to reach, by the Lord's help, people afar off. He also hit very heavy blows. He knew how to throw bombs full of spiritual dynamite. These bombs were usually taken from the Scripture, and they were used as though he meant to kill spiritual do-nothings, spiritual dwarfs, pious worldlings and gossips; and church-going agnostics, who knew nothing, and denied the right of others to know anything about spiritual life, and comfort, and power, he attacked with a heavy hammer, and a two-edged sword, using in every instance the Word of God. Many were hunted out of their hiding-places, abandoning their refuges of lies.

As far as possible the aim in the mission was to reach all classes of people. At 7.30 each morning there was a service for believers; this was largely attended, and many of us considered these meetings the most profitable of all. Two services were conducted in the evening, one at 5.30 o'clock and the other at 8.30. One of these was in the Cathedral, the other in Framji Cowasji Hall, the most neutral ground in the city. The attendance was large in each of these places, and the impression alike profound. From the first the missioners secured a strong grip on the young men; this was never slackened till the end, and many of them were converted publicly; like Andrew, showing the change of heart by hurrying after their friends. We doubt not, however, that the largest returns from the mission will be in the broader, brighter, and more Christ-like lives of Christians. We owe hearty thanks to the originators and promoters of this abundantly precious mission. India is largely the better for its coming.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The large hall in Sion College, says The Record, was crowded in nearly every part on Tuesday last, when the C.M.S. committee assembled to take leave of eight missionaries, all, except Rev. A. Clifford, proceeding for the first time to the foreign field. Their names and destinations are as follow:—Miss E. Armstrong and Miss A. S. H. Vidal, for Palestine; Rev. Alfred Clifford, Calcutta; Mr. R. F. Ardell, Tinnevelly; Rev. W. S. Moule and Miss A. L. Wright, China; Rev. W. Weston and Rev. W. B. Buncombe, Japan.

ANOTHER PROSPEROUS CHURCH.

On Sunday week Rev. H. E. Stone, Baptist pastor, Nottingham, preached a quarterly sermon to young women, his subject being, "Loose thyself from the bonds of thy neck, captive daughter of Zion." These sermons provoke unusual interest, and on this occasion the pastor and deacons were kept until nearly 10 o'clock seeing these who were desirous of confessing Christ.

On Tuesday, the choir rendered several anthems, and 960 partook of refreshments provided by the friends, thus being drawn from the worldly amusements so prevalent at this time of year. The bread and milk breakfasts for 150 children are given twice a week, and the workers would gladly do more if they had the funds.

On Tuesday a tea was given to poor children in connection with the Ballom Court Mission, situated in one of the poorest localities in the town. God has owned the word preached here, and so interested are the people that after, a room was taken, but not furnished, they urged the friends to hold the service in the unfurnished room, and came bringing their own chairs with them. Since then it has been fitted and furnished, but some help is needed towards the rent, &c.

ROMISH PROTESTANTISM.

The MacAll Mission in this city has an earnest worker in M. Borel, who has recently come. The outlook is encouraging. The meetings are bright and varied. I hear Mr. Young, pastor of the new Presbyterian church, spoken of as a devoted and admirable minister of Christ.

I attended the English Church on one occasion, and was pained to find it but a stepping stone to Rome. In the one short sermon I heard, the following errors were pressed on the large audience with the utmost dogmatism, viz.:—(1) Apostolic succession, by which the Holy Ghost is continuously imparted from "priest" to "priest." None are priests save the Church of England clergy (and, doubtless, by necessary inference, the Romish priests, as the "succession" was viâ Rome). All ministers of the "sects" are presumptuous, self-willed, and self-appointed. The "priest" may be far from what he ought to be, but the Holy Ghost is resident in him by the laying-on of hands. (2) Priestly absolution. These "priests" have power to remit sins. What they bind on earth is bound in heaven. It is no more for a "priest" to say, "I absolve thee" than "I baptize thee." Both rest on the same authority. (3) Regeneration and divine illumination in baptism. The infant receives "illumination" that never leaves it. (4) The reception of "eternal life" in the Lord's Supper. These last two are "miracles" that authenticate the mission of these "priests." Thus they, by baptism, give "sight to the blind," and by the Lord's Supper, "raise the dead." Then (5), last of all, this discourse was spiced with Purgatory. Some thought, the preacher said, that "priests" would have to suffer for their sins in another world. Why do not such men go at once to their own place—Rome?

SYDNEY.—A Registry Office and Home have been opened at 199A, Elizabeth-street, near Park-street, Sydney, New South Wales. The object is to provide a means of escape from the allurements of city life for friendless virtuous young women arriving in Sydney from the country districts or elsewhere. The Home is under direct Christian supervision. A letter advising of the arrival of any young woman will ensure her being met at the station or wharf in Sydney. Address: The Matron, Jubilee Registry Office and Home, 199A, Elizabeth-street, Sydney.

The Week of Prayer.

SINCE the Week of Prayer at the beginning of the year was instituted, it has never been more needed than at the opening of 1888. Whether we have regard to the Church or the world, the nations abroad or the people at home, the rich or the poor, the employers or the employed, parents and children in the family, or those children under tutors and governors in schools—everything is in a condition of transition and unrest. Religiously, politically, socially, morally, scientifically, spiritualistically (if we may coin a word), men, in their relations to this world and the next, are in uncertainty and perplexity; their hearts failing them for fear; the winds and the waves roaring.

In Europe there are rumours of war; at home we have the difficulty with Ireland. Romanism like a cancer is eating its way into the heart of the nation; diligently pressed forward by the Ritualistic party in the Church of England; unconsciously fostered by Nonconformists in the name of religious liberty. Buddhism and Spiritualism are befooling the rich and idle to their destruction. Riches and luxury demoralise and emasculate the children of men who gained their wealth by work; poverty and starvation dishearten and degrade the poor, whose offspring in the country are stunted and dull; in cities, preternaturally sharp and prematurely old. The rich despise yet fear the poor; the poor envy and hate the rich. The professing Church is divided into believers and unbelievers, and these are becoming separated under their respective banners. Even amongst the professedly evangelical a division seems inevitable between those who hold to the doctrines of the Reformation and the disciples of "modern thought."

Everywhere there is a sense of self-helplessness and a general want of confidence. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God—the saints who shall possess the kingdom. Unconsciously, the Desire of all Nations is the Coming King. In every nation the throne is unstable, because kings have not been "just, ruling in the fear of God." The failure of Governments to secure the welfare of their people, and of the Church to evangelise the world, tell that the time is near when the Ancient of Days shall crown the Son of Man; and Satan shall be cast into the bottomless pit; and the ancient people, having looked upon Him whom they pierced, and mourned for Him as for an only son, and washed away their sin and their uncleanness in the fountain opened to the House of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, shall be the Lord's priests and ministers to the nations and the far-off isles, which have not heard his fame nor seen his glory; and there shall be one Lord and his Name one.

But even now, in the midst of so much to cause sorrow and apprehension, there is abundant cause for praise and thanksgiving. God has not forsaken the earth. He is nigh to all that call upon Him. Still one chases a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. Never were there so many Christians in the world; never was the Gospel so widely preached; never were works of love and mercy conducted on so grand a scale. Wherever the seed of the Kingdom is sown a harvest springs up; and out of the lost and neglected children of our cities, transfigured by an incredibly brief training under the Gospel of love, we are peopling Canada with God-fearing and industrious men and women. A missionary spirit of unprecedented intensity and extent is pressing out to dark and distant lands the very flower of our Christian youth, and God is doing marvellously by them. But all this is but as the sample out of the sack: intimations of what shall be done very speedily when the enemy of God and man is bound and imprisoned, and Jesus, whose right it is, takes his great power and reigns.

The public meetings in London and elsewhere have had the address for their main feature; perhaps this is inevitable; and the great volume of prayer has been offered individually and socially at home.

The addresses, so far as we have heard them, have been very much to the purpose, and calculated to lead to great searchings of heart in us all, as individuals, as Christians, as church members, as citizens, as men. The words of two laymen, both Lombard-street bankers, were as practical, as useful, as suggestive, as those of their clerical brethren. The study of the word "Doubtless," by Mr. Tritton, was admirably appropriate to a meeting for prayer for missions.

It seems difficult to attain unconstraint of spirit and freedom of utterance in these meetings of an hour in an unaccustomed place. But much depends upon the leader. Mr. Meyer by a very few hearty words succeeded well in dissipating the stiffness, and eliciting from many brethren, and even sisters also (an unheard-of innovation) short, pointed, pithy petitions, which were far more to the purpose, and contained far more actual supplication, than long and laboured utterances.

The "Week of Prayer" should only be the first in a year of prayer. May we each contribute thus to signalise the year upon which we have entered—thus looking for and hastening the coming of the Day of God.

MR. SPURGEON'S WELCOME.

THE more than enthusiastic welcome accorded to the famous pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday evening by an immense congregation, must have been peculiarly gratifying to him at this crisis. Despite the dense fog the great building was full, except a part of the top gallery. The affectionate greeting of so many friends must have compensated Mr. Spurgeon somewhat for the change from sunny skies to the murky atmosphere of London.

It was a deeply interesting story that Mr. Spurgeon had to tell of the wonderful blessing God has vouchsafed in connection with the circulation of his printed sermons, of which the two-thousandth was issued last week. From far and near tidings have come of sinners converted, believers edified, and teachers and preachers helped by their perusal. He had some amusing things to say of the way in which these discourses have been "appropriated" by other preachers; but, as he admitted that he is himself a great collector of good thoughts wherever he can find them, he was lenient in his judgment of the pulpit pilferers. The prevailing note was that of thankfulness to God for making his words to be messengers of blessing the wide world over.

The utterances of the other friends who spoke were naturally of a somewhat laudatory character, but, as the Pastor remarked, it was a family gathering; besides, he said, if any thought he would be overdone with praise, they would do well to remember that he had got a plentiful supply of "the other thing." Those who spoke were Rev. James Spurgeon, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. D. Davies, Brighton, Rev. W. Stott, Rev. E. H. Ellis, Rev. C. Spurgeon, Greenwich, and Dr. Duncan. All these gentlemen expressed their affectionate regard for Mr. Spurgeon, and their sense of his recent service to the cause of evangelical truth.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mrs. Tibbles ("Bright Eyes"), who is now in this country pleading the cause of the Indian tribes of North America.

A special meeting is announced for the 26th inst. at Exeter Hall, to bid farewell to a party of missionaries going out under the China Inland Mission. Miss Geraldine Guinness is amongst the number.

Our London readers will notice with pleasure, from our Church Notes, that Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, will begin his ministry at Regent's-park Chapel on the first Sunday in February. We congratulate the Metropolis on receiving such a valued accession to the ranks of its preachers.

We are glad to publish the following statement from Rev. J. M. Braithwaite, vicar of St. John's Church, Croydon, in reference to the note which appeared in our last issue. He says:—

> The Croydon Skating-rink was hired by the Volunteers from the Gospel Temperance Committee for their annual distribution of prizes. Mrs. Braithwaite was asked to give the prizes away.
> Among a very large number of prizes, consisting of silver trophies, money, watches, books, &c., there happened to be three orders for beer, wine, and spirits, presented by local hotel-keepers. Mrs. Braithwaite could hardly pause in the midst of the distribution to make distinctions between the gifts, and she therefore handed these with the rest to those who came up to receive them. The Croydon Advertiser chooses to make fun out of these three orders. You interpret the ill-timed joke seriously, and draw serious deductions from it. My remarks, culled from The Croydon Guardian, referred to the distribution of the prizes generally, which were awarded to members of one of the smartest Volunteer corps in the country, of which I have the honour to be chaplain.
> Your mention of dancing classes in connection with my name, is only of a piece with the rest of the extract. I have nothing to do with the Skating Rink, and if dancing classes are ever held there it must be by some arrangement between a professor of the accomplishment and the Gospel Temperance Committee, of which I do not happen to be a member. I have always been deeply interested in the temperance cause, and in the two permanent missions connected with my parish church, temperance work plays an important part.

All friends of missions will remember the seven young Cambridge students who went as missionaries to China in 1885; and ten thousand readers have possessed themselves of the record published at the time, under the title of "A Missionary Band," by Mr. Broomhall. That book is out of print, but a new edition, greatly extended and improved, is now ready under another title.* Every page is a study. The book as a whole is an encyclopædia of varied and valuable information. Its compilation has been a labour of love; our brother Broomhall has put his soul and spirit into his useful work. It is beautiful in purpose—for "how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him who publisheth peace"; exquisite in execution, literary and artistic; and the charming cover, designed con amore by one of the ladies at Mildmay, though mentioned last, inspires us first by its pointers to the Polar Star. We say, with more than common emphasis, that every Christian family should possess this book. It will adorn the drawing-room table; it will "make all glorious within" those who make it inwardly their own.

* THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD. A Record of Consecration, and an Appeal. By B. Broomhall, Secretary of the China Inland Mission. Cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.

Our contemporary, The British Weekly, has stated that a beer and wine license has been granted in connection with a bazaar in aid of Christ Church, Leeds, and that application was made for a spirit license also, but was refused by the magistrates. We would commend to the notice of the Bishop of the diocese the recent action of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, who has prohibited intoxicating drink being given in prizes at such a bazaar. What with dramatic performances, and raffles, and beer and wine licences, these bazaars are fast becoming a disgrace and a scandal.

The old missionary spirit which sent Columbanus, and Columba, and their numberless Christian colleagues, from Ireland to evangelise Scotland and parts of Europe, is reviving in the sister island, and it is not unusual now to read of farewell services in the case of ladies who are leaving Ireland for missionary work in the East. Perhaps the latest was one held at Clontarf, near Dublin, last week, the Vicar's daughter and several other ladies being about to start for China.

The recent success of a Parsee girl named Sorabji in graduating in the first class at Calcutta, the only others who took a degree at the same time being five male students, ought to do much to stimulate the advocates of female education in the East. Miss Sorabji's scholarship will do something to break down the almost invincible conservatism of India, and may have much wider results than can at present be foreseen or anticipated.

Another singular illustration of the influence in India of Western culture and opinions is afforded by the recent action of the Maharajah of Darhanga in establishing a hospital and dispensary for female patients near his ancestral palace in Behar, and building, at a cost of 55,000 rupees, a new building for the purpose. This step is a remarkable sign of the great social changes which have taken place in India during the past twenty or thirty years. This hospital is the third which the Maharajah has endowed, and he has built and maintains twenty-three schools in addition to many other charitable works, his gifts up to the present representing no less a sum than about £350,000.

As a pendant to the letter on openings for women in California recently reproduced in these columns, the following extract from a letter of "An Australian Visitor," in one of the daily papers, may be found useful and suggestive:—

> In many parts of Australia nursery governesses and useful helps in the family can obtain far more comfortable situations, in a brighter and healthier climate, than in England. Salaries range from £30 to £40. Trained nurses with certificates can make £2 a week by private nursing. Competent dressmakers, milliners, and young women, with good references from first-class English shops, can easily find employment, and at higher pay than here.

In the present glutted state of the English labour market such opportunities may be seized with advantage. But, let it be added, none but sensible, willing, capable women are eligible for these situations. Again, intending voyagers should not go alone, or without making sure that someone will receive and care for them on landing. The writer of the above letter states that a protected party starts on March 1, as to which further particulars may be obtained from Miss Denison, 196, Cromwell-road, S.W.

Not the least of a missionary's trials is that some of his foes should be those of his own country. The news comes from India of a somewhat violent speech at Gwalior, by Sir Lepel Griffin, the Governor-General's Agent for Central India, in which he advised the Mahrattas to look askance upon those natives who had thrown off the shackles of caste and abandoned the national dress. He says: "Cherish and observe your ancient and noble religion, cherish and observe strictly your rules of caste, which missionaries and philanthropists tell you is a bad thing, but which is really the mortar which holds together the building of Indian society." Seeing what a hindrance this degrading caste system is to Christianity, such utterances as these do great harm. If Englishmen in high position in India would but recognise that our responsibility to our Eastern Empire is religious and spiritual, no less than civil and imperial, and that the heathen judge of Christianity by the lives of its professors, there would be less cause for lament that one of the greatest impediments to the spread of the Gospel is the evil example of the ruling population.

More than eleven hundred thousand of the women of England have memorialised Queen Victoria in favour of the Sunday closing of drink-shops. It is well that they should be strongly exercised on this point, and it is also well that Her Majesty should know what subject has been pressing heavily on the hearts of her humble sisters during her year of Jubilee. If Her Majesty could see her way to follow the example of the first lady in the American Republic, and become a total abstainer, the influence in favour of temperance reform would no doubt be great. But after all, in a question of national legislation, any effective appeal must be to the Hall of St. Stephen's rather than to the Court of St. James's.

We are gratified to observe that a serious attempt is to be made in France to repress the flood of evil literature now issuing from its presses. Senator Pressensé describes this movement in last week's Christian World. Public lectures are being given, he says, in many of the large towns, and the League of Public Morals is about to petition the authorities to apply the existing laws to pestilential journalism. Dr. Pressensé hopes to raise a debate in the Senate that will strengthen the cause of purity, and every well-wisher of the French nation must surely pray that he may succeed. A movement is much needed in our own country for the stricter application of the laws affecting the publication of noisome literature.

The important correspondence now going on in The Times and other daily papers, arising out of Lord Salisbury's recent plea for political clubs, must advance the cause of sobriety. Notwithstanding some disclaimers, there seems to be ample positive and direct evidence that these clubs foster the drink curse to an alarming extent. Surely they ought, at least, to be placed under the same restriction, with respect to hours of sale and consumption, as ordinary public-houses. The difficulty no doubt is that if artisan and middle-class clubs are dealt with, those in the aristocratic region of Pall Mall cannot righteously escape. Too many of the members of these latter are in Parliament, to hope for any sweeping reform that will affect them.

The London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is doing splendid service in bringing into the light of publicity cases of the maltreatment of tender children. Some of the cases recently reported are horrible in their hideousness; especially one tried at the Derbyshire Sessions, where a mother was sentenced to six months hard labour for abusing her own daughter in a manner worse than brutal. Every lover of the little ones should tender a hearty support to this Society.

While it is always bad generalship to underestimate the power of the enemy, a too pessimistic view does not conduce to victory. The late Dr. Ker, of Glasgow, in a passage quoted in the newly published posthumous volume of his "Thoughts," furnishes a good instance of the way in which we think we ought to regard the seeming Romeward movement of the day. He says:—

> Its strong opposing forces are the mighty sweep of the time towards liberty, civil and religious; the vast field of literature, ancient and modern, which rebels against its Index; the activities of the manifold agencies of evangelical churches which outnumber its orders and priests; the appeal of the Gospel to the soul when it is clearly and warmly preached, and the influence of the open Bible, specially in the English tongue, going forth as a world-encircling power.

We hear now and then of defections to Rome among the "classes"; we believe it is a fact that the Popish system loses rather than gains ground among the "masses," into whose hands political power is passing more and more. If Protestant Christianity is true to its mission of permeating the people with the spirit and genius of the Gospel, we can well afford to laugh at all the plots and secret intrigues of Jesuitism and the Vatican.

The Allahabad Pioneer, in its issue of December 1, has a leading article, two columns and a half long, lamenting the probable repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts in India. Commenting upon this, and upon articles in other Anglo-Indian papers, the Calcutta Indian Witness says:—

> Some of the Anglo-Indian papers are excessively mad over the inevitable repeal of the C. D. Acts in India. Mrs. Butler and her "band of fanatics" have "achieved all the success that belongs to zeal and pertinacity," and the "prospect cannot be contemplated by the authorities in India without the gravest and most justifiable alarm!" The Colonial Office has stated that "the people and Parliament are prepared to forego whatever advantage is derivable from the system!" This is excellent. There is hope still. The English people are not ready to repeal the Ten Commandments even if some editors in India think that the interests of the Army demand it. We cannot think that the lamentations of these editors can be called "godly sorrow." It may be difficult to call it by its proper name, but it is certain that Christian men in every land will feel like rejoicing more than weeping over the prospect.

Before the holiday time is over, and whilst some heads of households are perhaps undecided what schools to choose for their daughters, it may be opportune to utter a word of earnest warning and entreaty to Protestant parents not to send their children to convent or "Sisters'" schools, either at home or abroad. The lowness of the terms and the possible superior order of instruction given are, it is feared, a temptation to some. But mayhap the price will be felt to have been all too dear when the family is rent asunder by a "perversion." It is said that no attempt at proselytising is made in these establishments. No overt attempt, possibly; but the accessories of the Roman Catholic religion, with which the inmate is at a particularly receptive age brought into daily contact, are too often presented in such subtle and attractive guise that the deadly seed is then sown which germinates (to all appearance, suddenly) many a year afterwards.

Mr. Denham Smith is now lying in a very prostrate condition, having had a return of some of the more serious symptoms of his illness. He asks that "definite prayer may be made that he may have strength for suffering."

In a pastoral charge the Bishop of Lichfield wisely draws attention to the want of preparation for the Gospel ministry in candidates who present themselves before him for orders. In some cases he has found that the only qualification possessed was a university degree, recently obtained. He recommends that at least one year should be passed at a theological college. He desires that, in future, three months' notice be given to him by intending candidates. It is to be hoped that his lordship's words will receive due consideration in the proper quarter.

The hardships which poor people undergo who, by the pressure of bad times, are compelled to seek a refuge in the workhouse, are, it seems, sometimes unnecessarily increased. Husbands and wives far advanced in years are often separated, put into different wards, and companionship made impossible. A correspondent to the daily papers points out that it is illegal, as, by 10 and 11 Vic., c. 109, s. 23, a married couple, both of whom are above the age of sixty years, can claim, as a right, that they shall not be separated in the workhouse.

The system under which licenses are granted in Pennsylvania is said greatly to commend itself to those who desire to decrease the drink saloons. Besides the payment of a large sum of money, two responsible property-owning sureties are required, who are not engaged in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. Twelve "reputable electors," who have known the applicant for six months, must also endorse the application, and must join the sureties in an affidavit that no other petition has been promoted by them in the same year. Something like this in our own country might prove a good half-way house to more repressive measures.

We read the following in an American contemporary :—

> In Massachusetts the Supreme Court has decided that young men who have imported packs of hounds, whippers-in, and all the other English provision for fox-hunting, cannot let loose a poor fox who has been kept in confinement, and then, just for fun, ride after him until he comes to grief in some miserable way. Judge Devins rules that the fox is an animal, and that the fashionable hunters are liable to punishment under the act for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

We presume that the crime of "cruelty to animals" does not alter its complexion by being transported across the Atlantic. We feel very curious to know what would be the result of a similar appeal to the law courts of this country on the subject of hunting tame foxes or deer.

The Book World.

The Covenant of Peace.

Dr. Marvin Vincent, of New York, gives us, under this title, twenty excellent sermons dealing with certain puzzling phases of Christian experience, and with some popular misconceptions of duty and privilege. In thought the discourses are marked by breadth, vigour, and penetration; many of them are fresh and original in conception and treatment; all are eminently practical and the glow of spiritual fervour by which they are pervaded makes them tender and telling. Dr. Vincent is known as an able, eloquent and helpful preacher. The reader will find him at his best in these discourses which are worthy of a place beside some of the best pulpit literature. (J. Nisbet & Co.)

Free Rum on the Congo.

This is an American book written by Mr. Wm. Hornaday. It contains statements of fact which make the blood curdle, and which should be put before every moral legislative assembly, and every Christian missionary. "The idea that civilisation is an unmitigated blessing to be sought after by every savage is one of the dearest delusions of this age...Were I a king of naked savages on the Congo or the Zambesi, I would resist the Caucasian to the death. No white man, except a missionary, should ever enter my territory and live. It would be far better for me and my people to die by bullets than brandy." These are some of the burning words spoken on this burning subject by Mr. Hornaday. He adds: "If Equatorial Africa is to be 'developed' in the same way as South Africa, then, I say, away with such development! If the savage cannot be benefited, in God's name, let him alone." Christian Solidarity.

This small volume by Mr. Henry Stanley Newman (2s. S. W. Partridge & Co.) contains solid matter and sound thought, in which an important subject is treated with ability, and in a manner thoroughly Scriptural. Christian Solidarity is defined as a joint relationship in which Jesus Christ has so identified Himself with man, and in which men are so related to one another that their interests and responsibilities are identical. The principle is broadly illustrated in relation to human need, family life, representative government, society, sacrifice, redemption, the Christian Church, and the human race. The thought of our oneness with Jesus Christ, with all his wealth of power and sympathy, in the trials and efforts of life and service, is most encouraging, hopeful, and stimulating to Christian workers. Face to face with grave, social, and religious difficulties, we are reminded that Jesus Christ in and through the sympathetic bonds of common brotherhood, is the chief factor in their solution, and that the Spirit of his life and teaching must ever be the soul of all true progress. The book is timely, healthy, and helpful.

A Masterly Treatise.

God without Religion: Deism, and Sir James Stephen. By Rev. William Arthur. Author's uniform edition. Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, 23, Old Bailey. There can be no question as to the intellectual vigour and masterly grasp of argument shown by Mr. Arthur in this work. As a polemic he takes high rank. His spirit is dispassionate; his tone, conciliatory; his reasoning, logical. Such a work as this might do excellent service among young men of an intellectual cast and inquiring spirit, both by way of fortifying them in the truth and extricating them from the sophistries and the plausibilities of sceptical denial. To one established in the faith, anything Sir James Stephen has to say seems too puerile to deserve an answer. But we live in the age of magazine literature and royal roads to profundity. Mr. Arthur, therefore, has done well to show up with a masterly touch the argumentative weakness of the enemies of the Cross. We cannot but admire Mr. Arthur's patience and judicial candour in treating so fully his adversary's rough and ready assumptions. Every point is closely examined, every detail weighed, every extravagance even, formally and seriously confuted. Our feeling is that Sir James Stephen and his summary of opinions are not worth the expenditure of ammunition that is here laid out. There is, however, a value in the book far beyond any reference of that kind; and, in particular, the treatment of the whole subject of the mystery of life, and what is involved in the antecedents of it in any form, is well fitted to fill the mind of the reader with adoring reverence of God.

A Story for Girls.

The Palace Beautiful. By L. T. Meade. 5s. Cassell & Co. The author has chosen an attractive title, and we enter the portal wondering what lies in store. But an announcement meets us at the outset to the effect that the book is intended for lady readers; so with becoming modesty we withdraw in favour of one of the fortunate sex who after perusal pronounces it (with unwonted brevity) to be "a good story well told."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Earth's Ecliptic Angle. By Edward Dingle. S. W. Partridge & Co. This work is exceedingly obscure, and not less mathematically incorrect. Mr. Dingle, we fear, meddles with matters too high for him, and is not to be complimented on the result.

The Curse of the Fevrills, by Sylvia Penn, is a powerfully written temperance tale, mainly illustrating the strength of the hereditary taint in those of intemperate parentage. The story is full of a thoroughly human interest, apart from its immediate object, and we wish for the volume a career of widespead usefulness.

Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners. By John Bunyan. Edited, with introduction and notes, by Rev. John Brown, D.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The writings of John Bunyan, in readable type, should be found in every good library. Such, with its companion volumes, is the book before us. The introduction gives some particulars not contained in the narrative, and thus supplies connecting links which enable the reader to gain a more complete idea of this God-made and God-taught preacher of his Gospel.

The Parchment Library Edition of the Gospel, according to Matthew, Mark, and Luke. Kegan Paul & Co. This is a very dainty volume. Binder and printer have combined to make the book attractive. The division into verses has been abandoned, but the paragraphs have been carefully arranged after the best authorities on the Greek text. Quotations from the Old Testament are printed in italics, and dialogues are marked by inverted commas. In this way the three Synoptic Gospels are printed as though they were an ordinary English classic. It would make a charming and useful present to a thoughtful young student.

Prophecies concerning England and Egypt in the Last Days. By the Author of "Notes on Dan. vii." 8s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This is a favourable specimen of an Anglo-Israelite book. The anonymous writer is a well-read Biblical scholar, a friend of Israel, and a courteous controversialist. Like many noted expositors, he applies Isa. viii. to England governing in Egypt; unlike most Anglo-Israelite writers he would identify the English, not with the Ten Tribes, but with Ephraim only; unlike them, he believes England, even if it be Ephraim, to be on the verge of a terrible humiliation. His chapters on "A new Map of Europe, and the Jesuit Conspiracy" are exceedingly interesting.

The Divine Word Opened. By the late Rev. Jonathan Bayley, A.M., Ph.D. Published by J. Speirs, Bloomsbury-street, London. A volume of Swedenborgian discourses. Dr. Bayley, judging by the brief memoir, was a man of culture and kindness. As a religious teacher we cannot recommend him. The man who asserts that the first eleven chapters of Genesis are not historical, but purely allegorical, must read God's Book with a deplorable bias. The admirer of Jesus Christ who calmly writes that "the doctrine of imputed righteousness has been one of the most fearful plagues of the Church" would certainly be described by Paul as an "enemy of the Cross of Christ." The Divine Word opened by Paul needs opened eyes and hearts to receive it.

The Two Babylons. With 61 wood-cut illustrations from Nineveh, Babylon, Pompeii, &c. By the late Rev. A. Hislop. Seventh edition. 5s. Partridge & Co. A book so full of learning that has reached a seventh edition is a literary wonder, and we only hope it will not only be read but thoughtfully digested. The Church of Rome boasts of her antiquity and here she is traced back to ancient heathenism. She delights in rites and ceremonies. Here are exhibited the patterns which she has too closely followed. She decks her churches with images and pictures. Here are the rude and often grotesque originals which proved as ruinous to millions in the East as her modern use of music and art has proved to millions in the West. Dr. Hislop's death is a deep loss to the cause of Protestant truth, but his book cannot die and will not fly. It is too full of God's truth and authentic history.

ASTOR A. G. BROWN'S MAJORITY.

HE twenty-first anniversary of Mr. Archibald rown's pastorate at the East London Taberacle was celebrated on Monday week, when a ublic tea-meeting was held. There was an nmense audience.

Mr. T. A. Denny discharged the duties of airman in his usual genial and happy style, nd in his brief introductory speech thanked od for men like Archibald Brown, who have ot outgrown the good old Gospel, but who aintain the primitive method of preaching hrist in the plainest and simplest manner. Ie congratulated Mr. Brown upon his "coming f age," and upon the fact that he was still resh and vigorous, notwithstanding his twentyne years' hard and incessant toil in the service f the Master in the depressing East-end.

Mr. Brown, who was most cordially greeted, refaced his address by reading a letter from Rev. Robert Culley (Wesleyan), an old Eastnd pastor, in which the writer bore testimony hat he received great stimulus from Mr. Brown luring his six years' ministry in that neighourhood. Mr. Brown referred to the pleasing act that they had again with them on the ccasion of his anniversary his own mother, emarking, in a jocular way, that as a church hey owed a great deal to her, because he was ure their pastor would have been a terrible capegrace if it had not been for her influence. Adverting to the many changes that had taken lace, since his appointment to the East London Tabernacle, in the church and in the neighourhood, Mr. Brown observed that there was great difference in the style of Christian work s a whole. Many people are putting the ark f God on a new cart, and as it was in the days f David, so it is now, the new cart does not arry the ark safely; there is a rocking to and ro. He did not believe in attracting the eople to places of worship by fine singing, led y cornet; and in this respect he deplored the ot competition that was being carried on in God's work. He was determined that if he ould not fill his pews by preaching Jesus in lain Saxon he would not resort to any new nethods. The church membership was still naintained. There were about 2,040 in bonâ ide church fellowship. During the twentyne years over 4000 had been received into the hurch, hundreds and hundreds of whom were ow in different parts of the country. That was a migratory neighbourhood. During the ast year 219 members had been added to the oll, while 210 had removed to other parts. Speaking of what he called his "outside" gencies, Mr. Brown remarked that they were ll in a flourishing condition.

Congratulatory addresses were afterwards given by Mr. Richard Pinney (secretary of the hurch), Mr. Frank White (who is an old ollege "chum" of Mr. Brown's), Rev. Rolfe Fisher, Congregational Church, Burdett-road; Rev. W. M. Smith, Presbyterian Church, Bowoad; and Rev. William Thomas, Grove-road Baptist Church.

. SURREY CHAPEL.—The annual meeting was held on the 2nd instant, when reports of work done were presented, which showed that the portion of this old building still used for religious purposes forms a veritable hive of spiritual industry. The rection of the new chapel is about to be comnenced at a cost of £11,000, of which £7000 is lready guaranteed. Rev. B. Senior still ministers to the congregation.

THE WESTERN PACIFIC.—The British Government has for the last three or four years been attempting to procure an international agreement with regard to the traffic in arms and alcohol in the Western Pacific. From the Blue-book just issued it appears that the attempt has failed, and that the failure is largely owing to the refusal of the United States to become a party to a convention prohibiting its traders from carrying on the work of civilisation in those regions. There can only be one opinion as to the nefariousness of this traffic, which is rapidly demoralising the natives of nearly every group of islands in the long chain which extends from Fiji to the eastern shores of New Guinea.—The Times.

GERMANY AND RUSSIA.

At the central noon prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday last week, Dr. Ziemann gave an account of recent work in Germany. On Friday, Dr. Baedeker gave a report of an extended evangelistic tour in the Russian Empire, covering a period of eight months. Dr. Ziemann referred, in the course of his remarks, to Herr von Schluembach, whom God has so greatly honoured in Germany, and who is now completely prostrated. The present pronounced Christian stand taken by the Crown Prince of Germany was traced by the speaker to the influence of the mighty spiritual work in Berlin inaugurated by this brother now so mysteriously laid aside. The Berlin Y.M.C.A. had also received a mighty stimulus which was still exerting power. Dr. Ziemann knew of no association that was reaching out to evangelise all classes of men to the same extent as the association founded by Herr von Schluembach in the city of Berlin.

Dr. Ziemann proceeded to give some interesting incidents in connection with the work in different cities he had lately visited, chiefly referring to Frankfort and Cologne. In the former town he gathered a little company of Christians, in conferences on the Mildmay pattern. Seventy believers came, and many of the public also attended, the subject under consideration being: "The Gospel, the power of God unto salvation." A commanding officer of hussars rose in the meeting and testified to his personal experience of this power. He has since resigned his commission and brilliant prospects, and has entered a college at Bâle for a year's study of Biblical subjects, after which he proposes to devote himself to evangelistic work in his native country.

To Cologne Dr. Ziemann was invited by the Protestant clergyman, who in former years had not thought a visit desirable. At first the congregations were small, although gathered in a very large and costly hall, for which the husband of an earnest Christian worker paid £14 each night, "to please her." The secular papers derided the meetings, and especially the idea that even a Doctor could teach the Protestant religion. This turned the tide; the people eagerly crowded in to hear his testimony, and the nightly audience consisted of 3000 people till the close. Many personal incidents showed that the preaching of the Gospel was not in vain.

On Friday Dr. Baedeker spoke of the debt of gratitude he felt for fellowship in prayer during the last eight months. His experiences had been made up of light and shade. He had been very near the prison more than once, but God had kept him outside, except when he availed himself of opportunities of visiting the prisoners. His first visit was to Finland. Here he found a young baroness who has devoted her life to the evangelisation of Finnish prisoners. On one occasion when lying very sick and at the point of death she quickly rallied, when her father, a former governor of part of Finland, promised to build for her a Home for discharged prisoners. Not only in this prison, but in others did the governors themselves confess to personal blessing through the testimony of the Gospel. Over the north of Europe, go where he would, Dr. Baedeker found a cloud of blessing discharging itself. He spent eight days at Whitsuntide in Stockholm, intending to rest, but opportunities offered which he could not refuse; and the Lord gave rich blessing amongst high and low.

In Russia there are great difficulties in the way of evangelisation. The Russian minister of public worship conscientiously believes it is right to shut all the people up to the Greek Church, and he uses all the priests and the police to this end. In answer to believing prayer, Dr. Baedeker said he had been preserved from hindrance. If the front door were closed some of the back doors were open. Russia is a wonderful country! Things you could not do in England you can readily compass there. Travelling by train and steamer he had been able freely to distribute Gospels and Scriptures, thanks to Mrs. Robertson's Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. Groups of people furnished with copies in their own tongue will sit and read together the same passage in many different languages. The Russian railway carriages—he always travelled third class, to get amongst the people—will hold 100 passengers. You can read and talk to them all at once. They greatly treasure the books they receive, and literally thirst for the preaching of the Gospel.

In the prisons—unlike other countries—the inmates have nothing whatever to do! and some of them are sentenced for life. Three men whom he well knew were in one of these prisons—suddenly deprived of their liberty and separated from their wives and children—for four years on the charge of fostering a Baptist propaganda. How they did rejoice to see and recognise his face. They have been greatly used and blessed by God amongst their fellow-prisoners.

There is a large field for Gospel work amongst the Tartars, the finest race of men and women the Doctor had ever seen. They are nominally Mahommedans, but their minds are a blank, ready to receive the truth. One band of Christians into which Dr. Baedeker found entrance had separated themselves from the Armenian Church to which they formerly belonged, and which is more dead than the Greek Church. They had been praying for a revival, and abundantly God answered them. When converted, these people go right and left and tell out the good news to all around.

On the Volga there are numerous German colonies. The Lutheran pastors have large fields for work, but evangelisation is unknown. The old rule of the Lutheran Church is observed; one pastor does all the work for a colony of ten thousand! Dr. Baedeker went down the Volga to Orenburg, on to Tiflis, back to Astrakhan and Baku. The latter is a most wicked place—sin unmasked and unashamed; it was very difficult at first to get any footing, the people being so absorbed in pushing for money. Eventually a few Armenians were found, and work was commenced and richly blessed, and is still continuing.

In closing a narrative full of interest and incident, Dr. Baedeker earnestly besought continued prayer for Russia, her prisoners, and her exiles. The people are so receptive: giving them the Gospel is like handing bread to a hungry man; and, remember, a converted Russian is always an evangelist. If sent to Siberia, they take the Gospel with them.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW held their New Year gathering on the 3rd inst. at the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, when Dr. Sinclair Paterson gave an interesting and helpful New Year's address, taking as motto texts Romans i. 16, 17. Miss Child spoke of the special work of the "crew," whose aim is to be soul winners. Many of the crew gave praise to God for the help and grace granted through the past twelve months. An earnest spirit of prayer pervaded the meeting and all present felt it a season to be remembered throughout the year, as a time when they re-dedicated themselves to Christ's service.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.—On the first day of the Week of Prayer at Mildmay it is the custom of Rev. J. Wilkinson to give some statistics with reference to the work of this Mission. He said that they had now two doctors, two deaconesses, a night-school for Jewish children, with 157 on the books, a Home at Highgate, and another at Newington-green for little Jewish orphan children, who were taught to love Jesus Christ. The receipts had amounted to £4766 17s. 2d., and the expenditure to £4566 9s. 9d. The New Testament movement was started two years ago, and had proved very successful. They had succeeded in obtaining permission to distribute the New Testament in Russia, and the missionaries had found that not only throughout that Empire, but also in Austria proper, Hungary, Bohemia, and Galicia a large number of Jews were willing to receive the Gospel. Dr. Dixon read the statistics of the Medical Mission during the past year, which showed that in 1887 the total number of attendances had been 13,832.

BREAKFAST TO THE DESTITUTE.

The usual New Year's breakfast given to about 800 destitute persons, took place on Sunday morning, at the Gray's-yard Ragged Church and School, James-street, Oxford-street. Every part of the building was filled. Of the 800 only about 140 were women, who were entertained by themselves. In the principal hall Lord Kinnaird presided. Amongst those who had received a ticket, were a large number of very intelligent-looking men who had evidently seen better days, and there were some with suspicious-looking "crops," very suggestive of the idea that it had not been long since they were being maintained at the expense of the State.

The addresses given were admirable in tone and spirit. Sympathy and hope were the leading topics. Nothing was said which could wound the most sensitive of those who attended, but earnest and loving appeals were made to them to look forward with hope. Mr. John Morley, of Clapton, again sent for distribution 1000 portions of Scripture, neatly bound. Mr. R. C. Morgan, after remarking that it was a painful thing to see so many of their fellow-men in the position of those who then sat before him, said he would remind them, however, that there was never a cloud without a silver lining, and never a cloud which, however dark it might be on the earthly side, was not bright on the heavenly side. The Bible, he said, was a book which told them continually of dark clouds with silver linings, and the great truth he asked them to take away with them was that each one of them belonged to the living God. Mr. George Hanbury impressed upon all present the "faithful saying" that "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." Rev. John Wilkinson wished to tell of the Communism and Radicalism of the Bible, which was very different to the worldly idea of those terms. In the 113th Psalm it was written: "He raiseth the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill, that He may set him with princes, even with the princes of his people." That was God's Communism and Radicalism, but He levelled from the bottom to the top, and not from the top to the bottom. At Pentecost, they read, that none considered that aught he possessed was his own, and they had all things in common; but in the Communism of the present day none considered that aught that his neighbour possessed was his own. The speaker concluded with an earnest exhortation to all to accept salvation. Addresses followed from Mr. Stephen Bourne, Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. George Rouse, and Captain Helby, R.N., the governor of Pentonville Prison. The addresses were interspersed with singing. Miss Mary Davies again kindly attended, and sang "Our Blest Redeemer," and "The Ninety and Nine." The richness of her voice, and the devotional tenderness of expression with which this favourite singer rendered these pieces, was a rare treat to the ragged and destitute men, who listened with rapt attention. Five rooms were filled with those who had tickets for the morning's meal, but a large number of persons assembled outside, to whom tickets were given for tea in the afternoon.—Daily Chronicle.

THE DENABY MAIN DISASTER.—Dear Sir,—The disastrous fire which occurred early in the morning of Christmas-day, at Denaby Main Colliery, has thrown nearly 1500 men and boys out of work, many of whom have not yet recovered from the sad effects of the late trade dispute. On Friday and Saturday I gave, through a committee chosen by the men themselves, relief-tickets to 499 families, containing 2162 persons. Other families will be helped by the committee to the extent of our ability. But I fear there will be a great amount of suffering during the next five or six weeks. If any of your readers will help the committee to relieve the distress of the poor families, their aid will be gratefully received by those in need.

Mexborough. Congregational Minister.

AN ANTI-SWEATING EXPERIMENT.

In a letter to The Daily News, Mr. W. J. Walker, of 88, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., describes the proceedings of "The Workers' Protection Society," carried on in connection with the mission hall lately opened in Kerbey-street, Poplar:—

"We began work on Dec. 19, in the Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, with some fourteen women, the result being that the wages earned by each were double what they would have been had they gone through the hands of the sweater as formerly. It is true that at the best they cannot earn much; but it is surely something gained if we have enabled a poor, downtrodden race of workers to have fair play granted to them, in that they have had the full amount earned by them paid to them without any deduction. Before starting this movement I visited many of the most wretched homes in Poplar, and found the story the same in almost every case. The women were wearing out bodies and souls in blank despair, with starving children sitting round them in the dark and dismal rooms of their squalid homes. Bound to the sweater by the circumstances of their own poverty, they took from him what he chose to give. The prices paid for what is termed finishing shirts by hand were 2½d. and 3d. per dozen, and for the machine work 6d., 7d., and 8d. per dozen. With the kindly co-operation of a humane-minded manufacturer we are paying 5d. per dozen and upwards for 'finishing,' and 1s. 1d. per dozen upwards for 'machining,' the same class of shirts; and as soon as the workers we have gathered together prove that they can undertake a superior class of article we hope still further to improve the condition of affairs.

"We have commenced in a humble, quiet way with only fourteen workers, but the day is not far distant when Mr. Chadburn's kindly sympathetic heart will be rejoiced and encouraged by the contemplation of ten times that number gathered within the walls of his mission hall, whose brightened lives will amply compensate us for any labour expended in organising the scheme. We shall not stop until our Workers' Protection Society has branches in every centre of industry throughout this great Metropolis. We only pay the women what they earn, and benevolence simply steps in to the extent of providing them with the means of conveying the work to the women and from them, when finished, to the manufacturer. By-and-by we mean to strive at making the operations self-supporting; but in the meantime, for an outlay of some thirty shillings per week, we are making hope take the place of despair in the homes of the toilers of Mr. Besant's 'joyless city.' Our 'Rules for Workers' will show the business-like basis upon which our scheme is started."

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.—Between five and six hundred of the poorest children of Holloway recently received a substantial meal through the kindness of friends at Drayton-park Wesleyan Chapel. A number of unemployed and others were treated to a free tea at the Mission Hall, Barclay-road, Walham-green on Friday. Two free meals have lately been given at Bloomsbury Hall, Soho, to 280 aged men and women, and to 420 poor children respectively. The cost of the former was mainly defrayed by a young ladies' school at Tottenham. At the close of all these meals the Gospel was preached to the guests.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—In connection with the South Norwood branch a Gospel tent mission was held during last summer for sixteen weeks, conducted by agents of the Evangelisation Society, city missionaries, and other speakers. As the result, over fifty souls were blessed, and very many of God's people revived. Out of the Mission has been formed a Gospel band of working men and women, superintended by the city missionary, who holds meetings in different parts of the district. The necessity is much felt for a mission-hall, in which such services may be held all the year round, and steps are being taken to accomplish this end, but the building will not be commenced until all needed funds are in hand.

CITY YOUNG MEN.

Mr. and Mrs. George Williams held thei annual reception on Thursday, January 5. No withstanding the immense number of gues who thronged the rooms, the prelimina refreshments were served with unusual comfor and at eight o'clock the Lecture Hall was fille with a bright array of happy, expectant face The host and hostess gave and received a very hearty welcome; as did also the Hon. J. V. Farwell, of Chicago, who was present.

Mr. Williams, after wishing the young men a very happy and prosperous New Year, said he did not believe in long-faced Christianity. If the Gospel did not make a man happy, it was because he had not understood it. He enlarged on three topics: Christ in you; Christ with you, and Christ for you. After a few hearty and warmly received words from Mr. Farwell, Mr. H. Grattan Guinness—who had greatly brightened the singing during the evening by the accompaniment of his cornet—rose to give a brief Gospel testimony. He took for his theme the thought of "happiness," in connection with the oft-repeated wish "a happy New Year." At the close of his address, which secured unbroken attention from the hundreds of young men, a large number of hands were held up for prayer, and, as the meeting broke up, an unprecedented number of names and addresses were handed to the secretary of those who wished to start out on the New Year with the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour.

SAILORS IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

The meetings on New Year's Eve and New Year's Day at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Institution opposite the London Docks were largely attended by seamen and were greatly blessed. The Sailors' Annual Festival was held in the same place on Monday, Jan. 2. After tea, in the reading-rooms, a hearty sailors' prayer-meeting was held in the chapel, and this was followed by an evangelistic service in which Colonel Macgregor, Mr. Robert Paton, Rev. G. J. Hill, and many other friends took part. The chapel was crowded—chiefly with British seamen.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the service was when Christian seamen were invited to give testimony. Several rose at once, so eager were they to tell what great things the Lord had done for them. One fine fellow told how, several years ago, he was leading a godless and intemperate life, but through the visits of this Society's missionary to his ship he was led to give up the drink and then to accept Christ. When Christ found him he was a man before the mast; but since then he had prayed and worked, and now he had obtained a master's certificate from the Board of Trade. Some spoke of having been converted whilst at sea, or in the Strangers' Rest and Welcome Home, and all united in urging their brother seamen to start the new year with Christ as their Captain.

These New Year's meetings have resulted in forty-five seamen signing the temperance pledge, and several conversions, besides which numbers were deeply impressed, and will be, it is hoped, led to the Saviour.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—Mr. George Clarke, R.N. Association Secretary, will be pleased to attend and address drawing room and other meetings on behalf of this Society. He says:—"My whole life has been spent with sailors, my forefathers being ship-captains, myself commanding a vessel to the Crimea in 1854-55. Returning home, I entered the Navy (retiring last year). Subsequently I helped my chief mate into this Society; he has been a missionary at Malta for twenty-six years. I feel sure I am engaged in a good work in advocating the claims of the sailors. Altogether I have spoken to many thousands, and on 114 platforms, during 1887." His address is 4, Devonshire-road, Greenwich, S.E.

LONDON WAIFS AT TEA.

r. Barnardo claims now to have "the largest ily in the world." The latest bulletin puts e number of the young people under his telage at 2240. Yet he is not satisfied. ere he actually goes and invites a couple of ousand boys and girls to a tea party, with e deliberate intent of adding a hundred of om or more to his household at one fell oop. At the first blush that seems a somehat reckless proceeding, indicative of a greedy d grasping disposition. Why should he want add child to child? Has he not already got ore than his share? Ah, well; these questions ay be soon answered; and best, perhaps, by nother question: Is he not doing what the reat mass of his fellow-Christians are leaving ndone? In truth, it seems to us a most lorious and divine discontent that has seized im; would that every one of us had somehing of this unquenchable ambition—not, ndeed, to boast of having the largest family in he world, but to snatch the greatest number of hese human jewels out of the mire of London's in and misery, and place them as polished ems in the Redeemer's crown.

We can say but little that is new by way of escribing the truly remarkable assemblage rawn to the Edinburgh Castle last week, as r. Barnardo assures us, from nearly all the appy hunting grounds of London's Bedaween. ven the pen of a Dickens might fail to coney to the reader a distinct and accurate impression of this heaving, restless mass of young umanity. A close inspection reveals the fact hat the types are varied enough. Most of hem are young, very young in years, but prematurely old, it is to be feared, in their experimental knowledge of this wicked world and its ways. Our good host says, in his memorandum skilfully prepared for the press:—

> Only a few of these lads know what is meant by a family life. Practically every boy present sleeps every night either in a common lodging-house, in a furnished room, or where he can out of doors, or in the partial shelter obtainable about the riverside, at wharves and docks, on the Embankment shelters, under old baskets, barrels, crates, barrows, or carts at markets, &c. Very many of them have been found sleeping during the cold nights of the last week in public water-closets. The revelations which this year, as on many previous occasions, have greeted our agents on their nightly rounds amongst the lowest haunts of the destitute poor in search of the guests of this evening, have done much to deepen conviction as to the frightful evils and moral dangers which surround the children who live an adventure life on the streets of London.

Of course there are some whose parents are both alive, and who live "at home," such as it is—not much of a home we may be certain, or they would not be here to-night, dirty and ragged and hungry. As to the influences that pervade the common "lodging-houses," or the "furnished rooms," referred to, we fervently hope, kind reader, you know nothing in your own persons. You may take it, on the word of those who have made it their business to find out, that it is something exceedingly bad and degrading; these places are not exactly half-way houses to the celestial city. It would certainly be an interesting and profitable quest, under other circumstances, to trace out the causes that have surrounded these children with such conditions. To-night the great thing is to recognise the facts, and to devise and apply remedial measures as far as may be. And that is what Dr. Barnardo worked up to through the quickly passing hours of the long evening. The great outstanding impression on the mind of the spectator is this: despite the life that these gamins of the street have been compelled to lead, they are not irretrievably lost to society, to heaven, and to God. There is abounding life, and, though it may be to some extent tainted at the source, there is yet ample time to guide it into channels of purity and usefulness. The heart that is moved with compassion at such a sight cannot but be heavy and sore at the thought that not more than one out of every ten of those waifs can to-night have their feet set on the upward ladder. What is to become of the rest God only knows.

Much experience has taught Dr. Barnardo wisdom in dealing with his irrepressible audience. Nobody can manage them like himself; even he requires now and then to have recourse to the solid argument of the bag of silver sixpences that await the well-behaved. The tea and victuals are a great civilising factor; their distribution takes time, but it is not time wasted. This year the Doctor took a step in advance, by appointing the sprucely dressed youths from the Labour House to wait on the guests. Here was an object lesson, as to the fruits of settled industry and good living, that could scarcely be missed by the dullest witted of the crowd. Another novelty, and the great success of the evening, was the goodly presence, added to the clever performance, of the half-dozen boys who wore the tartan and played the bagpipes. As they marched to and fro on the platform, in true Highland fashion, piping out their tuneful Scotch melodies, there must, surely, have been implanted in the youthful breasts of the rapt listeners some laudable ambition. On other occasions we have expressed sympathy with any who are fain to preach to such an audience. Unless the sermon is covered up in parable or story, the experiment is almost hopeless. Wisely doing this, however, Mr. Wookey and Mr. Baker held the attention of the congregation to an encouraging degree. "A friend from the country" essayed to sing to his impartial critics with very indifferent success. Dr. Barnardo, of course, gained an excellent hearing, while he told of some who, in past years, were as low down as any of them, but who, with God's blessing on the help offered by his institutions, were now on the high road to prosperity and happiness. He omitted most of his customary catechism as to the occupations and family circumstances of the lads, passing on to the crucial moment of the evening when all who were really anxious to leave the street life and become inmates of the Homes were invited to come apart. This task of weeding out the most needy and the most likely is one that requires infinite patience and skill, but these are not wanting. We chanced to be sitting near a boy of a pleasant and wistful countenance, but very ragged, and without any covering to his feet except dirt. In answer to questions, he said his mother was dead, his father was "locked up," and he slept in some garret with his clothes on. When the Doctor's representative came to that part of the building, and put the question to any who wanted help, the lad sprung forward with an alacrity that told how thankful he was for the chance. If there were many such cases the evening's harvest must have been a truly blessed one.

OBITUARY.

MR. HENRY DRUMMOND, STIRLING.

We deeply regret to record the death, on Sunday week, of this well-known citizen of Stirling, father of Prof. Henry Drummond, of Glasgow. For some time past he had been in failing health. He was a brother of the well-known Mr. Peter Drummond, the founder of the famous tract enterprise. Though not so prominent as his brother in the religious world, he took an active part in Free Church effort, and in all other good works in the town.

MRS. HARDING.

Known and loved by a large circle, Emily Jane Harding, of Westerfield, fell asleep on December 28. She had been an earnest supporter of the temperance cause for some fifty years, and, later, preventive and reformatory work, and the abolition of State regulation of vice. Her chief life work was the visitation of Union Workhouses, meeting most Sabbath mornings the vagrants in the neighbouring workhouse. She was a beloved minister in the Society of Friends. She had been failing in health for many months, and for the last few lay peacefully waiting the summons, which was welcomed with a sweet smile, and her purified spirit departed to be "for ever with the Lord."

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

The monthly workers' meeting of Friday last was largely attended, and of a very interesting character. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and, after prayer by Rev. E. F. Baldwin, Mr. Bergmann related a very touching incident of a Jew who is now in prison for confessing Christ.

Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. sec., then gave a short statement of the work of the past month, showing that, in addition to the ordinary daily services for sailors, and the special work on Sundays, there had been a tea for inmates of the lodging-houses, a "Roast Beef and Plum Pudding Supper," tea and Christmas tree for sailors, and also a tea and Christmas tree for the poor lads of the Highway. There had also been the nightly classes for the neglected boys of the district. This latter work is carried on in a house, taken in faith, by Mr. Isaac, on his own responsibility, and we feel sure that this effort to save the boys and girls of this dark—very dark—neighbourhood, from lives of profligacy and vice, only needs mentioning to commend itself to the prayerful sympathy of our readers. Prayer, and workers, and funds are urgently needed.

Rev. F. B. Meyer then gave a powerful address on rolling ourselves, our ways, and our works on God.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Geo. Andrews, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a fortnight's mission service in the Y.M.C.A. Mission Hall, Wallingford. Several have professed conversion.

Mr. J. C. Rainey has concluded an eight days' Gospel mission at Buckhurst-hill, Essex, following up a mission which he conducted there in October last, when many souls were gathered in. Mr. Rainey goes to Rainham, Essex, for a week's services, commencing on Sunday next. From January 22 to 29 he will be at New Barnet, and from February 5 to 12 at High Barnet, N. Prayer is requested for blessing on these meetings.

Miss Bax and Miss Smith have been lately labouring at Forton and Bedhampton, with much blessing. At the former place, during a fortnight, some fifty adults passed through the inquiry room, and, at a service for children, about thirty little ones were found seeking Jesus. At the latter place, which was a week's mission, a number of adults and children professed to find peace in Jesus. On January 8, the ladies commence a mission at Hastings, for which prayer is desired.

Hounslow. Mr. Wm. Packer, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a three weeks' mission at the Gospel Hall, Hounslow. Large audiences listened night after night to the glad tidings of the grace of God, resulting in blessing to many. A number have been truly brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus; others confirmed and edified, and their desire deepened for the salvation of souls. At the closing meeting on the 26th many bore testimony to blessing received.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—We are not aware that any community in the United Kingdom has supported the Bible Society in the hearty and unanimous method adopted by the town of Brisbane, Eastern Australia. All the congregations there agreed to observe "Bible Sunday," and had a list of the services, with the subjects of the sermons published in the newspapers. The annual meeting of the local auxiliary was held on the following day.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.—We heartily welcome the new monthly magazine, In His Name, whose special mission it is to advocate the claims of our Ragged Schools. We congratulate the committee of the Ragged School Union upon this addition to their work, though we can scarcely congratulate them on the title chosen. The requirements for the physical, moral, and spiritual training of 50,000 of the very poorest of London children, call for a very river of sympathy and help. We believe the varied information thus supplied will have a beneficial effect, both upon those already at work, and who may be still in the market-place waiting to be engaged. The latter should not fail to communicate with Mr. Kirk, Exeter Hall, W.C.

Letters to the Editor.

AN OPEN DOOR.

Sir,—May I ask you to make known in your paper the need existing at Biarritz, South France, for Christian workers. Tracts, illustrated papers, &c., are gladly accepted, and there are opportunities for good, only needing willing hearts full of Christ's love.—I am, yours faithfully, M.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

Dear Sir,—I desire to thank the readers of The Christian for their sympathy and prayers on my behalf while laid aside through severe affliction for the past three months.

I am much better, and able to resume my pastoral work for the Lord on the Hills, though still prevented from much evangelistic work. I trust to be completely restored in due time in answer to the prayers of the Lord's people.

I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,
George Brealey.
Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

SUNDAY POSTAL LABOUR.

Sir,—It is undoubtedly a mistake on the part of the Post Office authorities to refer this question to corporations; for thereby the opinion or desire of a very small portion of the community at large will be obtained. If the authorities will take the matter into their own hands, and put an entire stop to the Sunday labour throughout the kingdom, the people will adapt themselves to the circumstances, after a little grumbling, which, as a matter of course, must be done.

I have practised extensively in the law for more than a quarter of a century in one of the principal cities in the kingdom, having had important matters entrusted to me, and yet I never experienced the least inconvenience in consequence of not having had letters delivered to me on Sundays.

In regard to my home life, I have had a standing order at the Post Office for about twenty years that letters must not be delivered at my house on Sundays, Christmas days, or Good Fridays; and yet not the least inconvenience has occurred to me, or to any friends who have been staying with me. I am considerably over sixty years of age, and can, therefore, speak from experience.

Yours faithfully, Truth.

THE SOLITARY IN FAMILIES.

Sir,—There is one form of raising the condition of the very poor which does not appear to have entered largely into the schemes of the benevolent: that of adopting young outcast or orphan children. Of course this requires to be done with judgment, in selecting children who cannot be claimed again; these, however, can be found in abundance. One can hardly imagine a higher work than to reclaim children from a life which will probably land them into pauperism, if not crime, unless some kindly hand be stretched out to succour.

The various orphanages have shown what success may be obtained in raising children from the lowest strata of society. Might not many a little one be privately rescued in the same manner? How many a stripped or solitary home would be cheered by the patter of little feet, and the merry voices of children. I admit that such a duty should be undertaken under a solemn sense of its responsibility, and with a firm resolve not to be easily discouraged; for, at first, patience, firmness, and love would be required in training a child which had for some years been living under degrading influences. But that this can be done has been proved by the writer.

The younger a child is when taken, the less trouble there will be in training. It is surprising and delightful to see the rapid improvement which a change to good living produces in a child, and to see the wan, wistful face change into a plump and healthy one. Some of the wealthy, with large houses and grounds, may be inclined to start small nurseries or homes upon their premises, where children could be trained to useful work, and to become respectable members of society. It is impossible to calculate the good that would be done by transforming into a good and useful citizen one child who might otherwise drift into the criminal class, or at least into the ranks of the great army of incapables, which forms such a sad feature of our present social condition.—Yours truly,

(Mrs.) Emma E. Beck.

QUEEN AND POPE.

Sir,—A number of clergymen propose making a formal protest, to the Queen and Lord Salisbury, against the mission of the Duke of Norfolk to the Pope of Rome. May I, through your columns, earnestly ask—(a) for the voluntary help of my brother clergy as honorary secretaries in different parts of England; and, (b) for signatures (in full with official designation), to be forwarded as early as possible to yours truly Wm. Adamson.
The Vicarage, Old Ford, London, E.

AMERICAN JESUITS AT WORK.

Sir,—I am sorry to learn by a letter received from my friend, Mr. H. L. Hastings, of America, that "The suppression of religious speech on all public grounds of Boston (U.S.A.), by Irish Roman Catholicism, is now rampant in our municipal government.......It is," says Mr. Hastings, "an infamous page for Boston's history, that we now record; the grip of the Jesuit is upon the throat of American liberty, and Americans are only asleep ......One of our noblest missionaries is in gaol for one year simply for speaking on the open grounds."

We should be glad if our friends and the friends of missionaries would sound the alarm, and do their utmost to let the Boston rum-sellers and the representatives of Popery and tyranny know that it is a dangerous business to send a noble missionary to gaol for twelve months for preaching the Gospel.—Yours truly, J. H. Mitchell.

A WARNING.

Dear Sir,—I am constantly getting indignant complaints from different parts of the country about boys who are hawking tin-goods, &c., for sale, and representing that they come from here; who rob their customers and insult and wilfully damage the property of those who will not deal with them.

The latest dodge is to say that if they do not earn so much, Mr. Fegan will not keep them. I have had several remonstrances lately about this, and it is calculated to do all accredited Christian work amongst poor boys such grave injury that I ask your kind assistance to make my disclaimer known, and to let The Christian readers understand that my boys do not go out to earn money or hawk for sale any articles whatever.—I remain, dear Sir, yours faithfully, J. W. C. Fegan.
The Boys' Home, Southwark, S.E.

[Dr. Barnardo, too, has had publicly to repudiate any connection with these boys.]

MISCHIEF OF POLITICAL CLUBS.

Dear Sir,—I was very glad to read your remarks on that part of Lord Salisbury's speech at Derby having reference to clubs. I can, from personal knowledge, fully bear out the statements you quote from a country paper, in regard to the temptations placed in the way of young men who frequent such places. I know cases where almost ruin has resulted, and in others where habits of drinking, card and billiard playing have been formed, which probably would have been prevented had there been no club to go to.

In the town in which I live there are a couple of these places—one for Conservatives and one for Liberals. I was asked to support the latter, being myself a Liberal; but well knowing the result that had accrued owing to the sale of drink at the Conservative Club, I of course declined. However, it was formed, and the boast of two gentlemen who had largely to do with its establishment was (one of whom was a teetotaller, I am sorry to say) that it would be the means of shutting up several public-houses, owing to being able to sell pure drink at lower prices. However, though it has been opened some two years, no such result has taken place; on the contrary, numbers of young men have been apprenticed, as it were, to drinking, smoking, and card playing, and they equally support the public-house with the club.

It is to be hoped something will be done in reference to licensing these places, and placing them on the level with other drink-shops, which practically they are. I do not wonder at the publicans, who, as the law stands, are legitimate tradespeople, finding fault with places under no police supervision while they are so narrowly watched. I am surprised, too, to find in our Liberal Club, and among frequenters of it, deacons, elders, and local preachers who on temperance platforms denounce the traffic, while, if it is connected with politics, they wink at the evil that results. What can we expect of young members of congregations with such leaders? I enclose my card, and am, yours truly,

A Constant Reader.

THE ENGLISH CONFESSIONAL.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to submit the following reasons to any of your readers who may see no harm in the proposal of the "High Church Clergyman" to have "licensed confessors."

(1) There is only one Head of the Church, and He is in heaven "for us," having given all directions for confessions in his inspired Word.

(2) In retiring to his glory He never delegated any man or order of men to hear the confessions of their fellow-men.

(3) He has reserved to Himself exclusively this solemn prerogative and responsibility.

(4) The reason appears to be that no one has the right to hear confessions who has not the authority to pronounce plenary absolution.

(5) And as this is a priestly act, and our Lord created no earthly priesthood, neither the Apostles, nor any subsequent ministry, has what is called "the power of the keys," in the sense of hearing confessions and pronouncing absolution.

(6) That to assume it is to be guilty of presumptuous arrogance of the most daring kind, invading the sacred office of the High Priesthood of Jesus.

(7) Even when there was a divinely ordained sacerdotal priesthood on earth, they never presumed, without a divine warrant, to hear the confessions of the penitent, nor to pronounce absolution.

(8) Such a man-made institution is fraught with immense peril, and fosters pride, arrogance, and tyranny of the most diabolical kind.

(9) It cannot be less than a positive insult to our blessed Redeemer in his work within the vail.

I am, yours truly, William Frith.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN ITALY.

"In the hamlet of Farfa, in the Sabine country, some thirty miles north of Rome, a widow lady has an orphanage and school for Italian children. The orphanage was founded by her in Rome in 1883, and was carried on there for two years with the hearty sympathy of the police and other officials. In 1885 it was transferred to Farfa, and has ever since been the object of constant misrepresentation and petty persecution by the priests residing in the neighbouring village of Fara, and also by those of the local officials whom the priests have been able to influence. Portions of the Bible were burnt by the priests in the piazza in front of the village church, and the local authorities were induced to order the closing of all the institutions by the end of the year. The hamlet of Farfa was purchased from the Government some years ago by an English gentleman, its present owner, who is the son of the widow lady, and the institutions are altogether private property. Previously to the school being opened, no sort of instruction was given in the place, the nearest school being at Fara, which is distant about an hour's walk. The occupation of this neglected spot by this English lady was in no rivalry to any institution in the place, for none existed. The priest who is leading the present violent opposition states he has been sent on purpose by the Pope."

We are glad to have received a letter of subsequent date from Mrs. Morgan, the widow lady in question, in which she says:—

"You will be pleased to hear that we have till now (Jan. 4) been left in peace, after the order to close our schools and orphanage in five days. On Sunday we heard they were fully determined to come on the following day and carry out their threat. On Sunday a rumour reached us that the authorities at Fara had found out their proceedings were not legal. I think some warning had reached them. I know much prayer had gone up that this violent opposition might result in increased blessing on the little work carried on here and more liberty.

"A great struggle is going on in Italy, and those who watch the efforts put forth by the Papacy are glad that Signor Crispi has had the courage to dismiss the 'Sindico' of Rome for congratulating, in his official capacity, the enemy of the Government."

lotes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 15.—EZEKIEL XX.

1.—And it came to pass in the seventh year, c.—"This date applies to the four chapters, x.—xxiii., which are bound together by their ontents, and by the threefold repetition of the xpression 'Wilt thou judge?' (xx. 4, xxii. 2, xiii. 36)."—Keil.

3.—Are ye come to inquire of Me?—The ubject of inquiry was, no doubt, as to the hope deliverance. See Jer. xxi. 2.

4.—Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt ou judge them?—"We should rather say, Wilt thou not judge them?' i.e., pronounce ntence upon them."—S.C. The remainder the chapter is occupied with the exposure of rael's guilt from their earliest days in Egypt, nd constitutes the judgment or sentence which he prophet is told to pronounce.

8.—But they rebelled against Me.—This lolatry in Egypt is not mentioned in Exodus, ut may be inferred from their readiness at Sinai o worship the golden calf. It seems alluded to n Joshua xxiv. 14.

9.—But I wrought for my name's sake.—This evelation of the secret of Israel's preservation, n spite of their frequent rebellions, is afterwards epeated three times (14, 22, 44), and forms the efrain of the chapter. The word for "wrought" s the ordinary verb "to do," and might be endered, "I acted for my name's sake.'" See Ps. xxv. 11.

25.—Wherefore I gave them also statutes that vere not good.—Keil explains this by referring o Acts vii. 42, "God turned, and gave them up o worship the host of heaven."

29.—The name thereof is called Bamah.—"Bamah" is the Hebrew word for "high place," where idolatrous worship was carried on. There is a play upon the word, for "Ba" means "go," and "Mah" means "what." So that the very name suggested the folly of going there: "Go—for what?"

35.—The wilderness of the people.—Better in R.V., "peoples." Israel scattered among the peoples is to find them a wilderness.

MONDAY, JANUARY 16.—EZEKIEL XXI.

To this chapter properly belong the last five verses of the former one. They are found here in the Hebrew text, in the Greek LXX., and in the Latin Vulgate. "The forest of the south" is the land of Israel, viewed from Chebar, where Ezekiel prophesied, which was in the north of Babylonia.

2.—Set thy face toward Jerusalem.—This is, as it were, the explanation of the previous prophecy. "Comparing these two verses with xx. 45, 46, we observe that words and order of words are identical, except that for the three words translated "south" there are substituted (1) Jerusalem; (2) the holy places—i.e., the Temple; (3) the land of Israel."—S.C.

3.—Will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.—These here take the place of "every green tree and every dry tree" (xx. 47). Comp. our Lord's use of this metaphor (Luke xxiii. 31). The conflagration means war. "This cutting off of the righteous applies to the outer side of the judgment, inasmuch as both good and bad fall in war, but the distinction between the two (ix. 4) still exists."—Keil.

10.—It contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree.—"The 'rod' is the sceptre of dominion assigned to Judah (Gen. xlix. 10). The destroying sword of Babylon despises the sceptre of Judah; it despises every tree."—S.C. The words "my son" are an allusion to Gen. xlix. 9, where the words occur: "Judah is a lion's whelp: from the prey, my son, thou art gone up."

13.—Even the rod.—This is the same word as in the last verse, and should be rendered "sceptre."

25.—Thou, profane wicked prince of Israel.—R.V. renders "profane," "deadly wounded," as being the literal meaning of the word. It seems a figurative expression applied to Zedekiah for the death-blow which the monarchy received in him. Comp. Rev. xiii. 3.

27.—Until He come whose right it is.—A distinct Messianic promise, to be fulfilled at the Second Coming of Christ.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 17.—EZEKIEL XXII.

"A catalogue of sins which have brought ruin upon Jerusalem, many of which disgraced the heathen inhabitants of Canaan, whom the Israelites were to cast out (Lev. xviii. 27). The commission of like sins would insure like judgment."—S.C.

6.—Every one were in thee to their power.—Better in R.V., "Every one according to his power have been in thee to shed blood." "All the princes looked to might, not right, and each, in proportion to his strength, was guilty of violence and bloodshed."—S.C.

16.—And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself.—R.V. renders this, with most modern commentators, "And thou shalt be profaned in thyself," i.e., "Thou shalt by thy own fault forfeit the privileges of a holy nation."—S.C.

22.—As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace.—"Judgment is regarded not in the light of purification, but in that of destruction."

24.—Nor rained upon in the day of indignation.—"A land that has no rain in the day of indignation is a land that in the outburst of divine judgment finds no grace."—Ibid.

30.—I sought for a man that should...stand in the gap.—comp. Ps. cvi. 23, where "Moses stood before him in the gap."—P. B. Ver. But I found none.—See Rev. v. 3, and the distress of the prophet, happily removed by the appearance of the Lion of the tribe of Judah.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18.—EZEKIEL XXIII.

"The allegory of Aholah and Aholibah. The chapter closely resembles chap. xvi. Idolatry is represented by the same figure; but here there are two sisters instead of one woman. Aholah (Israel) is, however, chiefly introduced in order to heighten Aholibah's (Juduh's) guilt. See Jer. iii. 6—11, on which the allegory may have been founded."—S.C.

4.—Aholah the elder, and Aholibah her sister.—"Aholah means 'her own tent or tabernacle'; Aholibah, 'my tent or tabernacle is in her.' Names chosen to express that after the division Israel set up her own tabernacle (1 Kings xii. 32), while with Judah the Temple of God still remained."—S.C.

9.—The Assyrians, upon whom she doted.—"This was the great sin of Israel that in their political oppression they sought help in man, even in their oppressors, instead of turning with heart confidence to their God, the only One to whom it is no degradation to surrender oneself unconditionally."—Hengstenberg.

11.—She was more corrupt.—"The idolatries of Manasseh's reign exceeded all that had gone before. Either in Israel or in Judah (2 Kings xxi. 1—16; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 1—10).

16.—Sent messengers unto them in Chaldea.—The embassy of the King of Babylon to Hezekiah (2 Kings xx. 12) was an indication of cordial relations between Judah and Babylon, and, through Hezekiah's pride of heart in displaying his treasures, brought down upon Judah the first announcement of the Babylonish captivity (Is. xxxix. 3—7).

45.—The righteous men.—"The Chaldeans. They are called righteous according to their mission as ministers of the Divine vengeance."

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19.—EZEKIEL XXIV.

"The prophecies in this chapter were delivered two years and five months after those of the previous section. The day mentioned here was the very day on which Nebuchadnezzar completed his arrangements for the siege and closed in the city" (2 Kings xxv. 1; Jer. lii. 4).—S.C.

8.—I have set her blood upon the top of a rock.—This denotes an exposure of her bloodguiltiness so as to call down vengeance.

16.—I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes.—"The death of Ezekiel's wife took place in the evening of the same day that he delivered the foregoing prophecy. This event was to signify to the people that the Lord would take from them all that was most dear to them—Temple, home, friends, and possessions. The behaviour of the prophet was to show his fellow-exiles that the times that were coming would leave no room for the quiet lamentation for the dead according to the usual forms of mourning."—S.C.

27.—In that day shall thy mouth be opened.—"There was a time during which God had declared that He would close the lips of his prophet (iii. 26). That day had now come. He had four years been employed in foretelling the approaching calamities. Now the first blow had been given, and until the city had been actually taken the voice of prophecy should cease, so far as Israel was concerned. Hence the intervening series (xxv.—xxxii.) relates to neighbouring and foreign nations. Then (xxxiii.) the prophet's voice is again heard addressing his countrymen in exile. This accounts for the parenthetic character of the next eight chapters."—S.C.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20.—EZEKIEL XXV.

"The four nations most closely connected with one another, by geographical position and by consequent intercourse, are grouped together in this chapter, each being addressed in a few brief sentences, ending, 'Ye shall know that I am the Lord.'"—S.C. These four nations form part of a group of seven, which are addressed in this section of Ezekiel's prophecy (xxv.—xxxii.) during the period of his silence to Israel. Keil gives them thus: Ammon; Moab; Edom; the Philistines (xxv.); Tyre; Sidon (xxvi.—xxviii.); and Egypt (xxix.—xxxii); and says: 'These prophecies are divided into thirteen words of God by the introductory formula, "The word of Jehovah came unto me."' The utterances against Ammon, Moab, Edom, and the Philistines being all comprehended in one, whereas there are four against Tyre and seven against Egypt. In the seven nations addressed, and in the seven words against Egypt, we cannot fail to see a symbolical significance."

3.—Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary.—While God Himself will destroy his sanctuary in Israel on account of their sin, He will not allow the enemies of Israel to taunt them with it, without bringing down punishment thereby on themselves.

14.—By the hand of my people Israel.—"Pointing to the conquest of Idumæa by John Hyrcanus."—S.C. See Josephus Ant. xiii. 9, 1.

16.—I will cut off the Cherethims.—"The inhabitants of the southern portion of Philistia."—S.C. The whole of Philistia was laid waste by the Chaldeans. See Jer. xlvii.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21.—EZEKIEL XXVI.

2.—She is broken that was the gates of the people.—The hope of Tyre is that "the entrance and streaming in of the nations previously directed toward Jerusalem would now turn to her. As the position occupied by Jerusalem in relation to the world apparently interfered with the mercantile interests of Tyre, it would excite a malignant pleasure at the fall of the city of God. So irreconcileably opposed are the worship of God and that of Mammon."—Kiel.

7.—I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadnezzar.—"We know from Josephus that the siege of Tyre lasted thirteen years, beginning B.C. 585, about three years after the capture of Jerusalem."—S.C.

14.—Thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon.—"Modern travellers describe the present state of Tyre as one of utter desolation."—S.C.

21.—Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord God.—"No great city which has played so important a part for centuries has left fewer traces than Tyre. Ezekiel was a true prophet when he said, 'Though thou be sought for,' &c. A traveller who was not informed of its existence might pass along the whole coast without being aware that he was close to an ancient city. Nearly all that remains is the work of the Crusaders. Tyre is now the ruin of a town built with ruins."—Renan.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, January 22.

Matt. xv. 21—31 (also Mark vii. 24—30).

Golden text: Jas. v. 13.

Jesus and the Afflicted.

The sufferer brought to Jesus in prayer only.—(Teachers of this lesson should be specially careful to master all its details in their natural order.)

Our Lord starts from Capernaum for the borders of Tyre and Sidon (Tyre was thirty-five miles N.W. of Capernaum, and Sidon twenty miles N. of Tyre). They enter a house, seeking quiet and rest, "but He could not be hid." The news of his coming spreads fast, and soon reaches this afflicted mother. Picture her in her new-born hope and purpose—her haste to go to Him, and her excitement and eagerness as she waits outside his door.

Observe three Tests of her Faith.

Silence.—When she cried, "Have mercy upon me," &c., "He answered her not a word." This alone would have discouraged most people, but she continued "crying after" Jesus, till the disciples were greatly annoyed. Still, He is silent. We have reason, too, to suspect, from the eagerness with which the disciples "besought Him, saying, Send her away," that they had already done their best to discourage her. She kept on in spite of black looks and urgent dissuasions, as well as of the Lord's continued silence.

Strong Objection.—If Christ's silence was hard to bear, his speech was far worse. In effect his answer was, "I have no commission to you Gentiles," and this seemed to mean, "I have no blessing for you." She had no argument to urge in reply, for our Lord's mission during his earthly life was to the Jews only. Though He would refuse no one who came to Him, He did not go to the Gentiles—for this the times were not ripe. So this woman had neither argument nor promise to urge. But though repulsed, silenced, and almost in despair, she holds on. Falling at his feet, she moans out her prayer: "Lord, help me."

Strong appeal.—Even this pitiful pleading, seemingly her last effort, fails. In reply, our Lord appeals boldly to her sense of right: "Would it be right to take the children's bread?" &c. Can she withstand this? She certainly does; she even triumphs over it. We are here reminded of Isa. xl. 31: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," for when she cried, "Lord, help me," she was at her wits' end. But in prayer she grew strong, and so was able to turn this last assault to more advantage. "Thou callest me a dog: I thank thee, for now I have liberty to plead for the dog's portion—the crumbs."

There is Peculiar Encouragement in this Story.

Because it tells of successful intercession.—She came for another's good, not her own. This teaches that we are as free to pray for others as for ourselves.

Because it was a most extreme case.—She was a heathen by birth and education—a member of the ancient Canaanite nation. She came to Jesus before the day had dawned when the Gospel was to be preached "to every creature," and so came without invitation and without promise. If she succeeded, who need despair?

Because it shows that delay and apparent refusal need not discourage.—How cold and persistent his refusal seemed; yet how great his joy in granting her request.

Because it shows what real trust in Jesus can do.—She got all she wanted—a glorious miracle of mercy. She won high commendation. She made the Lord very glad, while she set an example which has been a blessing to millions.

Observe the Mother's Self-forgetting Love.—She lives in her child; its health is hers; its sickness hers. So she cries, "Have mercy on"—not "my daughter"—but "me." It is not "Lord, help her!"—but "Lord, help me." The teacher may use this in speaking to children of godly parents who long so deeply for their salvation, and who can say with Paul, "We live if ye stand fast in the Lord." Nothing could rejoice this woman so much as her daughter's deliverance: so nothing will rejoice these godly parents so much as the Christlike life of their children will do.

Sufferers brought to Jesus in Person (verses 30 and 31). Note—

The variety of sufferers healed.—"Lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others." The kind of suffering matters little. The great thing was to cast the sufferers "down at Jesus' feet."

The people's gratitude and worship.—They saw in all this God's goodness and glory. "They glorified the God of Israel."

Illustration.—Dr. Moffat used to tell this story of his first sermon to the heathen:—"It happened one evening, soon after I began my journey up the country, that I found my way to the homestead of a Dutch Boer, of whom I begged a night's lodging. It was nightfall, and the family must soon go to rest. But first, would the stranger address some words of Christian counsel to them; might they hear what he has to say? Gladly I assented, and the big barn was resorted to. Looking round on my congregation, I saw my host and hostess with their family of three boys and two girls. There were crowds of black forms hovering near at hand; for this surly Boer had some hundred Hottentots in his service, but never a one was there in the barn. I waited, hoping they might be coming. But no; no one came. Still I waited, as expecting something. 'What ails you? Why don't you begin?' said the farmer. 'May not your servants come, too?' I answered. 'Servants!' shouted the master; 'do you mean the Hottentots, man? Are you mad to think of preaching to Hottentots? Go to the mountains and preach to the baboons; or, if you like, I'll fetch my dogs, and you may preach to them!' This was too much for my feelings, and tears began to trickle down my cheeks, for my heart was too full to hold. After a prayer, I opened my New Testament, and read, 'Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs that fall from their masters' table.' A second time the words were read, and then my host cried out, 'Stop! you must have your own way. I'll get you all the Hottentots, and they shall hear you.' He was as good as his word. The barn was soon filled. I thus preached my first sermon to the heathen."

CHRISTIANITY AND SOCIALISM.—In the first of a series of papers in The Christian World, on this subject, Mr. Coampion answers "some popular misconceptions."

REGENT'S PARK COLLEGE PREACHING STATION SOCIETY.—This Society was founded in May, 1872, by the students of the College, with the object of supplying village and other chapels that are unable to support a settled pastor. The special aim is to build up weak churches and to place them in a position to maintain a pastor, and thus yearly fresh fields of labour are needed. During the past year work has been carried on in eleven places, one new station—Brandon, in Suffolk—having been added this year. The reports from the preaching stations are very encouraging.

POLICE CAUTION.—The police are directing attention to the proceedings of a woman having several aliases, described as about fifty years of age, rather tall, pale, with black wavy hair, generally dressed in black, trimmed with beads, and sometimes wearing a long brown ulster. This woman goes about in answer to advertisements for servants. In some instances she asserts she requires the place for herself, and in others she calls on behalf of her daughter. After gaining the confidence of ladies she alleges that she has travelled from somewhere in the country (frequently from Sevenoaks), and pretends she has no money to pay her fare home. In numbers of cases she has obtained money by these false pretences. The woman is an old offender, but for several years she has succeeded in eluding the police, who are anxious to capture her, and with this object request, if she calls in a similar manner in future, she may be detained, and the police immediately informed.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

John Gratrix, the last of the seven men of Preston, has passed away.

Temperance pledges are taken in the casual ward, Marylebone Workhouse.

Lady Henry Somerset and Lady Elizabeth Biddulph are both active temperance workers.

There seems to be a general movement in Scotland in favour of the earlier closing of drink-shops.

The temperance workers in Enfield distribute 18,000 copies of The Enfield Monthly Visitor yearly.

A Queen's Jubilee Temperance Hall, erected by the local Total Abstinence Society, has just been opened at Wallingford.

The Dublin police authorities notified the publicans that the usual Christmas "sweeps" for geese, &c., would not be allowed.

A deputation from the United Kingdom Alliance will visit some of the chief towns in Scotland during the week beginning January 23.

At Leeds there has been formed an influential association to secure the more effectual carrying out of the Licensing Acts in the town.

An influential meeting on the drink traffic with native races was held. recently, at Hoxton Hall, Mr. W. I. Palmer, of Reading, in the chair.

A conference of the Women's Union (C E.T.S.) was held, recently, at the residence of the Earl and Countess of Meath, London, the Bishop of Bedford presiding.

An "Industrial Inebriate Farm" has been started by a gentleman in Kent. He hopes that cheerful, healthy employment under religious influences will prove curative.

In connection with the National Temperance League's temperance lectures in day-schools, Mr. F. Cheshire lecturer, 10,000 essays on temperance were written by the children last year.

From accounts of Rev. Charles Garrett's mission, which appeared in The Methodist Recorder on January 5 and December 29, we can understand why he speaks so pathetically on the evils wrought by drink.

At Dumfries, by plebiscite, the inhabitants have pronounced in favour of closing public-houses at ten o'clock. It is hoped that both in Dumfries and in the contiguous borough of Maxwelltown the proposal will be adopted.

In an article in The Medical Temperance Journal, on "Alcohol: its Substitutes and Alternatives," Dr. Ridge argues that the known evil effects of alcohol should lead medical men to seek a substitute in every case where possible.

The British Workmen Public-house Company, a movement due to Rev. Charles Garrett, has just issued £10,000 worth of extension shares at a premium without advertisement. The private applications would have covered nearly £30,000.

FOREIGN.

By 7 to 1 the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that State Prohibition is constitutional.

The Church Temperance Society (U.S.A.) has now branches in thirty dioceses and the support of fifty-five bishops.

A Committee is said to be about to proceed to British Columbia to choose a site for a temperance settlement.

All conventions of religious denominations held in Nebraska during the past year have declared against license.

The Orillia branch of the C.E.T.S., Canada, gives much attention to temperance literature, a department too often ignored.

Professor Stewart, of Liberia, estimates that for every missionary who goes to Africa, 70,000 gallons of liquor are sent to that country.

The Eastern insurance companies have given notice to the brewers of Dubuque, Iowa, that they can no longer take risks upon their property.

The brewers' organs in the United States are very indignant at the recent decision of the Supreme Court which declares the brewing of malt liquors a nuisance, and cuts off all hope of compensation in prohibition States.

A law similar to that in force in Ontario, Canada, which does not allow a man who is engaged in the liquor traffic to hold any office under government, would almost wipe out the New York delegation in the Legislature at Albany.

The white ribbon is slowly but surely encircling the world. A temperance society has been formed in the girls' mission school, Saniskor, Turkey, the white ribbon is donned by its members, and all have enrolled their names upon the World's W.C.T.U. petition.

An important feature of the Swiss Alcohol Act, recently passed, giving the Government control over all alcoholic drinks sold in that country is that 10 per cent. of the net revenue which the cantons will gain from the alcohol tax is to be spent in unfolding to the people the effects of alcohol.

The first annual Conference of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Victoria, Australia, has been held. There are nineteen branches, with a membership of six hundred in all. A deputation was sent to the Minister of Education, urging the abolition of grocers' licenses.

S. A. Haines, of Netherwood, New York, for thirty years a commercial traveller, has originated a temperance organisation which he has named the "King's Temperance Army." The only requisites for membership are a pledge not to drink intoxicants, and each member is expected to get ten others. The especial object is to help his fellow commercial travellers.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Liverpool has been forbidden to preach more than once on Sunday.

The Venerable Archdeacon Matthew was consecrated Bishop of Lahore at Westminster Abbey on Friday last.

Rev. A. W. Robinson, vicar of Bilton, Harrowgate, is leaving Yorkshire to take up mission work in the East of London.

Rev. H. Guildford Sprigg, late vicar of Christ Church, Battersea, has been appointed a diocesan missioner in the diocese of Canterbury.

We regret to learn that Prebendary Billing, of Spitalfields, is again in ill health, and that his condition is giving some anxiety to his friends.

Rev. E. A. Fitch, of the C.M.S. Mission at Chagga, East Africa, is on increasingly friendly terms with King Mandera, but there is as yet no opening for direct spiritual work there.

Rev. O. Sharpe, vicar of the Martyrs' Memorial Church, Smithfield, in order to assist the unemployed, has collected funds and set a hundred men to work renovating the church.

Rev. Alfred Earle, Canon of Exeter, has been appointed new Bishop-Suffragan for London, with the title of Bishop of Guildford. He will be presented to the rectory of St. Michael's, Cornhill.

Dr. Ryle will hold a gathering, on January 26, of the priests he has ordained since he became Bishop of Liverpool, "for the purposes of devotion, mutual edification, and brotherly intercourse."

On Sunday last Bishop Caldwell, of Madras, completed his fiftieth year of residence in India. The Rock says there must be many native Christians who can look up to him as a spiritual father.

By the will of Miss Mary Fothergill, late of Hensol Castle, Glamorgan, £300 each have been bequeathed to the Church Missionary Society, the Church Pastoral Aid Society, and the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Archdeacon Moule, of the Church Missionary Society, China, has addressed some congratulatory verses to Rev. W. Muirhead, of the London Missionary Society, Shanghai, on the conclusion of forty years' work there.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Alex. Mackennal, D.D., chairman of the Congregational Union, will be the preacher at the City Temple on Sunday next.

Dr. Dale left Melbourne on December 15. He is expected to arrive at Plymouth on February 1, and will be met by a deputation from his church at Birmingham.

At an interesting Communion Service held on Sunday, January 1, at Beaconsfield, Rev. W. H. Summers received into the Church twelve persons; ten of them were from the pastor's Bible-class, and five were members of one family.

A Congregational minister, writing to The Christian World, says the "one man ministry" of the denomination is doomed. Common sense is against it, as well as all the tendencies of the time. He predicts a sort of partnership, or union, between all the independent Churches in the same community.

METHODIST.

Six Chinese converts were baptized in a Victorian Wesleyan Chapel, in November, by Rev. J. Moy Ling.

Letters from the Bible Christian missionaries in China contain cheering intelligence concerning the progress of their work in that country.

Many remarkable cases of conversion have occurred as the result of special services in Nelson-street Primitive Methodist chapel, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

There are about 260 girls in the three Wesleyan schools at Tumkur, Mysore, India, a new Brahman school having been opened during the year.

A movement has been started by a number of ladies in Hull to raise the whole of the cost of a missionary steam launch for the use of the Primitive Methodist missionaries in West Africa.

Letters from Japan state that there has recently been a gracious revival in the schools in connection with the American Methodist Episcopal Mission at Aoyama, with over seventy conversions, and the work is still going on.

The Jubbulpore Wesleyans have preached the Gospel at the great Bheraghat "Mela," to which thousands of Hindoos resort, to bathe in the sacred Narbadda. They were confronted by some natives who had transacted into the vernacular an infidel book of Colonel Ingersoll's.

Very encouraging reports have been received of the success of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missions among the Khassia hills, India. The mission was started in 1840, and since then 112 preaching stations have been established. There are 1100 communicants, and 1158 candidates for membership. In the day schools there are 3467 scholars, and 5034 in the Sunday-schools.

Rev. Thomas Champness has a small pamphlet in the press, entitled "A Letter to John Wesley's Children," being an appeal to Methodism on the question of the conversion of the home and foreign heathen. Mr. Champness, says The Methodist Times, plainly challenges the Methodist people to address themselves vigorously to the work of evangelisation, by employing a greatly increased number of lay agents both at home and abroad.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

On Wednesday evening, January 4, an extremely interesting "Welcome Home" was given to Joseph Storrs Fry in Bristol.

At a series of meetings held in Columbus, Ohio, 250 professed conversion, and a mission church of 100 members was founded.

Ohio has lost one of her worthiest sons, and Friends at large have to deplore the departure of the venerable John Butler, of Damascus, O. In the Unitarian controversy of sixty years ago, he stood nobly and ably for the defence of spiritual Christianity.

Charles Brady, of Barnsley, another of the delegates to the Richmond Conference, has been giving his impressions of American Friends to a deeply interested meeting in Leominster. The greatness of the country, and different circumstances of the people, have impressed him much, and account for their different practices in adapting the same principles more widely.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Times recently had a leading article on the annual report of the Army.

Last week's War Cry contains an interesting account of "The War in other Lands."

Work has been commenced in Epworth, the village where John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, was born.

A third room has been taken in which to hold meetings in Copenhagen, where there is ample scope for Gospel work.

A new Rescue Home has been opened at Middlesborough. There are now twelve of these Homes in different parts of the country.

In South Africa work is carried on at fifty-two stations, by 150 officers. At Port Elizabeth there is a Home for fallen women, and prisoners on leaving gaol are helped to commence life afresh.

Major Lawley, of Cardiff, asks for Welsh-speaking volunteers for the work in North Wales, where twenty new stations could be opened at once if there were officers to carry them on.

At the Great Western Hall on Christmas day Mrs. General Booth was on the platform about to deliver an address, when she was suddenly taken ill. A doctor was immediately fetched, and it was with great difficulty that she was got home. She is now much better, but unable to do any public speaking.

BAPTIST.

A Baptist Foreign Missionary Society is to be formed in Queensland.

On New Year's Day Pastor Charles Spurgeon received thirty-two new members into fellowship at the church at Greenwich.

There recently came to London a good man in the person of Rev. William Thomas, from Cinderford, who is now pastor of the Grove-road Chapel, Victoria Park.

Mr. Bentley, of the Congo Mission, has completed a dictionary and grammar, which will prove of great service in connection with the work of evangelisation in that region.

On Sunday, November 20, Dr. W. Carey baptized five men and six women at the Baptist Mission Church, Simla, India. Fifty-four believers were added to this church during the past year.

The committee of the Baptist Missionary Society have arranged to purchase, for £10,000, the premises in Rome at present partly occupied by Rev. J. Wall. Towards this Mrs. Kemp, Rochdale, has offered £2000.

Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D., is about to resign the pastorate of the Mansfield-road Chapel, Nottingham, owing to ill-health. For thirteen years he has been unable to preach more than once on Sunday. His ministry will terminate at midsummer.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, has accepted the invitation of the church at Regent's Park Chapel to become its pastor, and will commence his ministry there on the first Sunday in February. The only cause for Mr. Meyer leaving his most successful work at Melbourne Hall is his wife's continued ill-health, which has resulted from her residence in Leicester. We understand that it has been agreed between the church and Mr. Meyer that the characteristic features of the work in Leicester, which have been attended with so much success, shall be introduced into the conduct of the services and general work at Regent's Park Chapel.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Donald Fraser reports a successful year in connection with the church at Marylebone.

Some ladies connected with Dr. Monro Gibson's Church in St. John's Wood, hold a sewing class for girls in Portland Town.

The new church for the Presbyterian congregation at Bournemouth was opened on Friday last. It will seat seven hundred persons.

The Women's Missionary Association is proving a most helpful and efficient auxiliary to the China Mission of the English Presbyterian Church.

Miss L. Graham, who goes at her own expense to China, has qualified herself for medical mission work, by acquiring experience as a nurse in a London hospital.

The late Mr. R. Bruce, of Quebec, who recently died at the age of ninety, has bequeathed 120,000 dols. to establish bursaries and scholarships in the Presbyterian Colleges of Canada.

We regret to learn of the continued indisposition of Professor Leone Levi, who is an active elder in the church at Regent-square (Dr. Dykes'), and an indefatigable Sunday-school teacher amongst the neglected Italian children of Hatton-garden and the neighbourhood.

Collections in aid of the Jewish Mission of the English Presbyterian Church will be made in all the congregations of the church on Sunday next.

It is proposed to call, as colleague to Dr. Saphir Rev. T. Gregory, M.A. (Oxon), Kilmalcolm. Mr. Gregory is brother of Rev. A. Gregory, of Wooler, who is going out to China.

Dr. Oswald Dykes has accepted the invitation to the Moderator's chair of the next Synod of the English Presbyterian Church. Dr. Dykes is now taking a short rest at Como, Italy. It is said that he has received an invitation to visit the Presbyterian churches of Australia.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A successful series of evangelistic services has just been held in the Methodist Church, Carrickfergus.

About forty ministers have signified their intention of taking part in the series of evangelistic services to be held in Belfast Presbyterian Churches the beginning of next month.

It is stated that the bequests for religious purposes, amounting to £25,000, made by the late Mr. Denis Crofton, of Dublin, may be set aside on the ground of testamentary incapacity.

The Week of Prayer in connection with the Evangelical Alliance was observed this year in several places throughout Ireland; the meetings were generally well attended, and very interesting.

The report just presented to the annual meeting of the Belfast Mariners' Benevolent Society shows that that institution is in a very prosperous state, and has been of great service to the seafaring community.

Captain Kearney White, of Dublin, has received letters from Lord Plunkett, Archbishop of Dublin, Canon Sayers, of Ballinderry, Rev. John Spence, of Belfast, and others, bearing testimony to the usefulness and efficiency of the Irish Scripture Readers' Society.

An interesting letter appears in the current issue of The Irish Christian Advocate, from Mr. J. Townsend Trench, in which he suggests that a few portable pulpits should be placed during the summer in some of the open spaces of Belfast, and that suitable ministers and evangelists should from these specially address the non-churchgoers of Belfast, of whom he says there are forty thousand in the town.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

FRIENDS' MISSION, CONSTANTINOPLE.—Miss Esther Cohen writes from Stamboul that the work there is making good progress, and God's Word is working among the people. The Medical Mission is a source of great blessing.

JERUSALEM.—The Turkish Government applies very strictly the law which forbids all Jews not born there to reside in Jerusalem. All Jewish pilgrims, on applying at the walls for permission to enter, are obliged to furnish a guarantee that they will depart within thirty days.—Evangéliste.

WILLIAMS, lately State Secretary of the Y.M.C.A.'s of Minnesota, has been appointed by the International Committee of Y.M.C.A.'s in the United States, as its secretary in the railroad department, in place of Edwin D. AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.—Rev. W. H. Hechler, chaplain of the British Embassy at Vienna, delivered a private lecture last week by special request at the Duke of Cumberland's villa at Penzing, in presence of the Queen of Denmark, the Queen of Hanover, the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland, and several guests. The subject of the lecture was Bible history, with special reference to the proofs of Scriptural truth furnished by discoveries in Assyria and elsewhere, a subject which the reverend lecturer has much studied.

WORK IN MOSLEM LANDS.—Rev. Dr. Bruce, C.M.S. missionary in Persia, writes to The Record:—"I am now in my thirtieth year of mission work for Mohammedans, and in my nineteenth in Moslem lands. So far am I from thinking it a forlorn hope, that I am willing to spend as many more years, if spared. We want four men at least for the work in Baghdad, Julfa, and Bushire. I am very anxious to return to Persia in September next, but how can I go back without helpers? We have no opposition from Moslem priests or people in Persia worth mentioning. The latter, in nine cases out of ten, gladly receive our colporteurs and evangelists, and welcome their visits. During all my mission life among Mohammedans every persecution and opposition to our work from which we have suffered has been set on foot not by Moslems but by nominal Christians."

HAWICK, N.B.—The usual all-day Christian Conference was held in the Exchange Buildings, on Monday, January 2, when there was the largest attendance and deepest interest that we have ever seen. Mr. H. Groves, of Kendal, spoke with great vigour on Psalm xxiii., and a number of strangers took part, including Mr. J. N. Macrae from India, who gave an interesting account of mission work in that great country. J. H. H.

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH appeals for help to carry on the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise. Infidelity is swiftly spreading, not only in this country, but in other lands, and the importance of the work being done by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh cannot be over-estimated. There is a great and increasing demand for grants of anti-infidel tracts, but the work is hampered for want of funds.

"It is impossible to speak too highly of this volume, which is the result of immense labour and consecrated talent. To the Bible student, the Sunday-school teacher, or local preacher, its aid is indispensable, for it is the most able condensation of larger and numerous works, which places it within the reach of all who aspire to become mighty in the Scriptures."
The Christian Age.

"For those who aspire to have a thorough knowledge of the Bible, this volume will be an invaluable help."—The Sword and Trowel.

"In a compact form, the work contains more valuable and varied information as to the Word of God and its connective teaching, than we have seen in any volume of a like size. We would earnestly urge every lover of the Word to procure and carefully read the book."
Word and Work.

"[illegible] suggestive, and wise work on the study of the Books of the Bible; how best to get at their teaching, and how best to turn their teaching to practical account. Preachers and teachers will find it a treasury of thought, beautiful expositions, and fruitful suggestions. It is nicely got up, and is suitable for a prize or a present. The author has rare analytical skill, a profound knowledge of the book, and a graceful literary style."—[illegible]

"This book, written by a well-known Biblical student and scholar, will be found of very great help to all who wish to know the Word better. The books of Scripture are chronologically arranged. There are brief but lucid introductions to each book, and much interesting information. The book is cheap, and worthy of being in the hands of every Bible-reader."—Presbyterian Messenger.

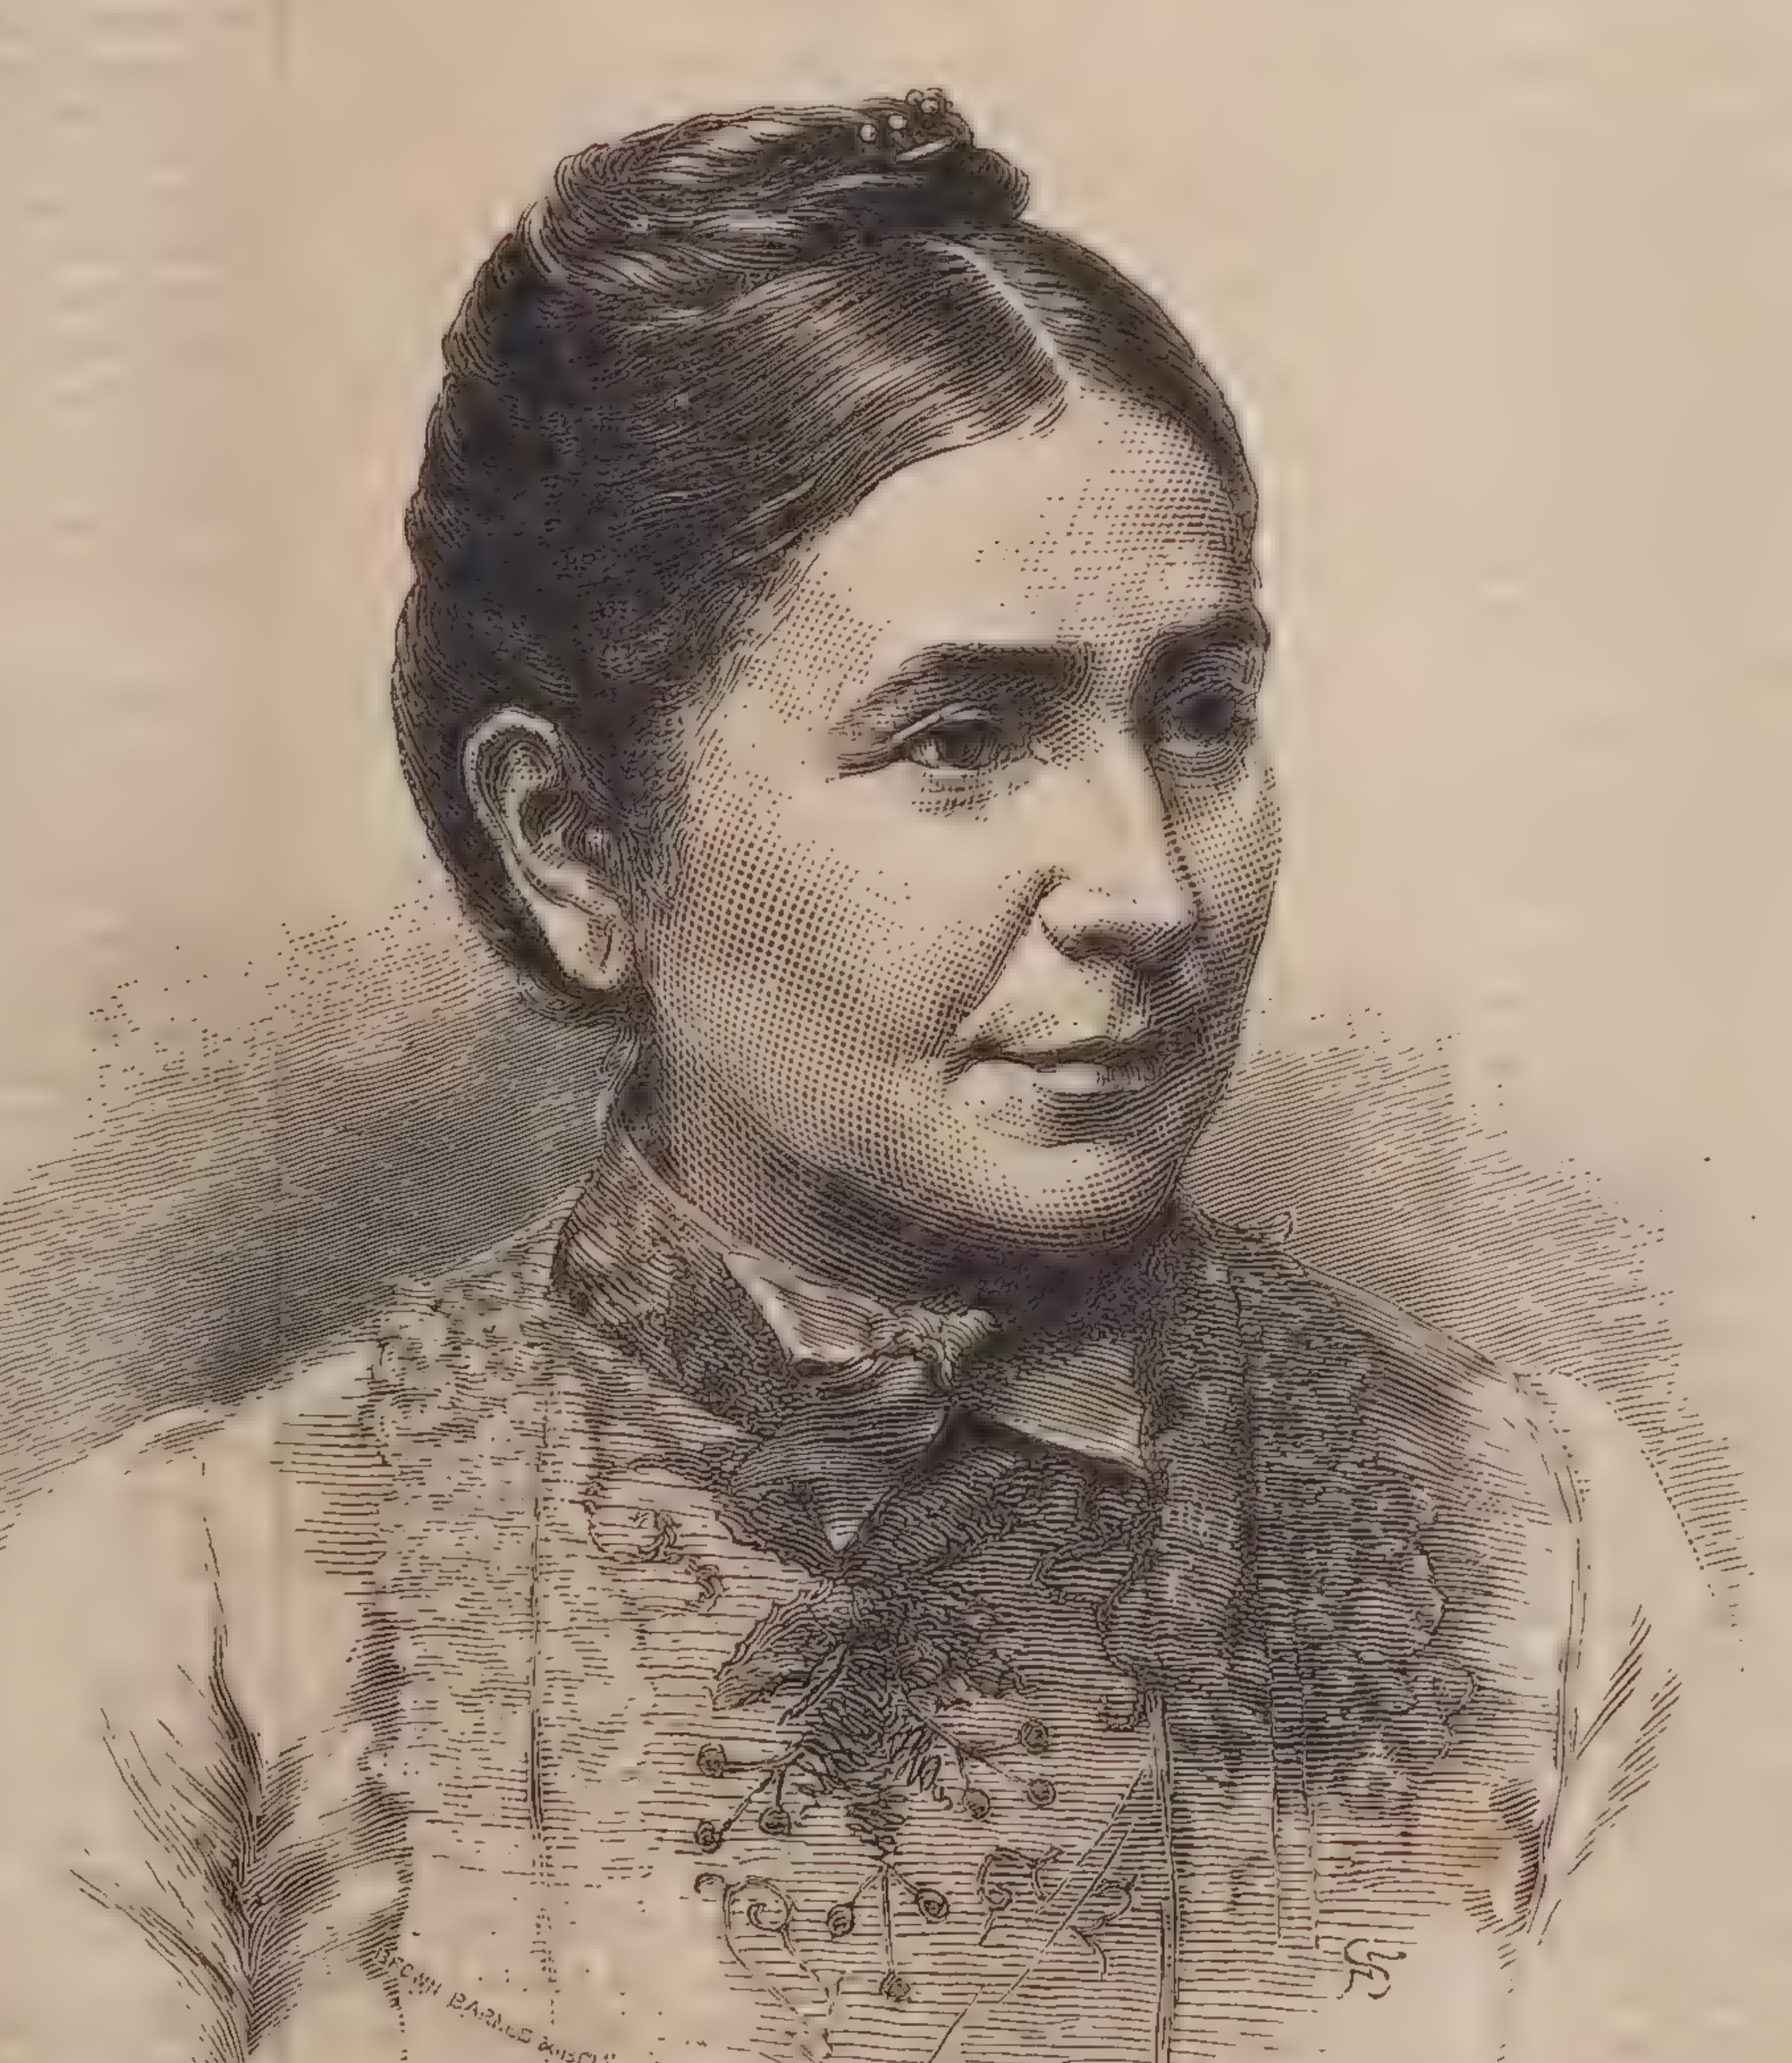
MRS. T. H. TIBBLES

(Inshta Theamba,—"Bright Eyes.")

THE people of Great Britain have been somewhat perplexed, since the arrival of the subject of this sketch, with regard to her name. It is Inshta Theamba, and the translation of it is "Bright Eyes." The difficulty which English-speaking people find in pronouncing the Indian words has led them in the United States as well as here to use the translation exclusively, and she is known all over the States as "Bright Eyes."

She is a North American Indian, daughter of Inshta Muzze, "Iron Eye," the head chief of the Omaha Tribe. At the time of her birth the Omahas were a wild tribe of Indians, scarcely advanced beyond the Stone age. And it has been a wonder to all who have become acquainted with her, especially to those who believe that man must advance by slow stages of progress, to see this Indian girl all at once appear in the highest circles of society in the States, speaking to audiences of the highest culture, in a way to command the attention of the closest thinkers. It demonstrates beyond contradiction the truth of Paul's saying, that all men are of one blood, and that the untutored savage, placed under the influences of Christianity and surrounded by the environment of civilisation, may become the equal of races who have an inheritance of a thousand years of culture behind them.



(From a Photograph by Messrs. Brown, Barnes, & Bell.

The Omaha tribe inhabited a large tract of country in the north-eastern part of what is now the State of Nebraska. When the first missionary arrived among them, he was kindly received. Her father, the head chief, was the first man in the tribe to unite with the church, and from that day to this he has used all his energies to secure an education for his children. He sent Bright Eyes to the little mission school, where she first learned English and acquired the merest rudiments of an English education. While at this mission, a Government agent of the Indians suppressed the school, and the children were dispersed, and sent back to their tents and lodges.

A lady who had become acquainted with her, thinking it would be a pleasant thing to have a little Indian girl for a correspondent, asked her to write to her. Letters passed between the two for some months, when Bright Eyes in one of her letters expressed her ardent desire for an education that she might be able to teach and help her people. The lady showed this letter to Miss Read, of Elizabeth, in New Jersey, the principal of a fashionable ladies' boarding school. Miss Read offered to take the little Indian girl and educate her, and notice was sent to her father. He immediately accepted the generous offer. Bright Eyes went, and at the end of two years she took the first prize in English composition, in a competition where the daughters of some of the wealthiest and best-educated people in the United States were her competitors.

The two years after her first return to her tribe she often refers to as the saddest of her life. Here was a young girl, the only educated person in the whole tribe, without friends, penniless and unsupported. What could she do for her people? The tribe in the meantime had been moved to a reservation. The Omahas could no longer follow their original occupation of hunting. They knew nothing of agriculture, they had no implements or tools of any sort to cultivate the land with, and the greatest destitution reigned everywhere among them. Her own family were often suffering from hunger, and there seemed to be no hope for the future. In the treaties made with the tribe, the Government had bound itself to their education, and two miserable day schools were in operation, the teachers being ward politicians, without any qualifications for their places. She resolved to apply for one of these day schools. The authorities in Washington paid no attention to her letters.

At last she wrote them saying that the Government professed to desire the education and Christianising of the Indians, but their whole dealings seemed to indicate their desire utterly to exterminate them, and if no attention was paid to her letters she would make an appeal for sympathy in the public journals. The letter was a caustic epistle, and brought an immediate reply from the authorities at Washington. The Commissioner said he could not appoint her unless she could furnish certificates of a good character. (The thing had never been required of any other employé in the Indian service.) Certificates were immediately furnished by the missionaries who had lived upon her reservation, and from the principal and teachers in the school in New Jersey. A position was given her in one of these day schools, but the salary was reduced from £8 to £5 per month.

Under the Government regulations, as an employée in the Indian service, she was entitled to a house to live in. She took all her younger brothers and sisters into this house, and the first regulation she made was that not a word of the Indian language should be spoken in this house except to old people. —realising that their only hope in their contest with the whites was to acquire the English language. Her youngest sister, who recently took the highest honours at an Eastern college, and was presented with a fifty-dollar gold medal by one of the leading members of Congress, never spoke a word for some weeks in any language while in the house; but, after once trying to speak the English, she rapidly advanced.

Besides her duties as teacher of the day school, she organised a Sunday-school, and out of her meagre salary saved enough money to buy a few singing books and a small cabinet organ. The children of the tribe flocked to the Sunday-school, many more than could crowd into the small schoolroom. "Bright Eyes" was superintendent, teacher, chorister, stoker, and all other things combined.

While thus engaged, a great wrong was perpetrated by the Government upon a kindred tribe, and Mr. Tibbles brought suits in the United States courts to secure their rights. "Bright Eyes" was sent for, to act as interpreter in the High Court of Omaha. There she met Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, Bishop Clarkson, of the Episcopal Church, and other men of national fame. All these united in urgently requesting her to go to the eastern cities, and make known the wants of her people. This, it seemed to her, was an impossible thing to do. She is naturally very timid and retiring. It took weeks of constant pressure brought by many of the leading ministers of the United States to induce her to agree to go. The first time she attempted to address an audience she broke down. The ladies of the audience gathered round her, and tried in every way to encourage her. She has never attempted since then to address an audience without her manuscript.

Upon going to Boston, her lectures attracted the attention of all the acutest writers and thinkers of that modern Athens of America. One of the most noted of them remarked that the truest things which had been said since the days of Aristotle, and the widest and most applicable of generalisations of modern times, were made by this Indian girl. When the poet Longfellow met her, he declared in public that this was Minnehaha. When these addresses were printed in the public journals and magazines the universal criticism was that it was impossible that an Indian girl could write such things. A committee of the leading citizens of Boston, the Governor of Massachusetts being the Chairman, appointed a sub-committee, of which Rev. Joseph Cook was a member, to request "Bright Eyes" to write a new lecture in their presence. This she did, Rev. Joseph Cook taking up the sheets one by one as she wrote them, and he made a public statement of the fact afterwards.

The question was too wide a one for one tribe. The principles she advocated affected the whole Indian race, and an agitation arose, which is still going on in the United States, to give to the Indians civil rights and the protection of law. For eight years the contention has gone on, until it may be said the public opinion of the sixty millions of the United States has been changed by the efforts of this Indian girl. But this contest was a political contest. It had to be fought out in Congress and in the courts. This has driven her away from what she regarded as a more vital question. She has constantly claimed that civil rights and civil laws and civilisation, while absolutely necessary, would only end in the extermination of these aboriginal people, unless there was along with it the teaching of the Gospel of Christ.

Wherever she has spoken in the last few years in the United States there has been no hall or church large enough to hold the people, but she is always compelled to speak, by the necessities of the case, upon the rights of the Indians to their soil, the right of protection by law, or kindred subjects. The consequence is that the little Indian church in her tribe, of which she is a member, has never yet had a building in which to worship God. The mission school can only accommodate thirty or forty Indian girls, and their brothers grow up in ignorance and savagery. Her desire is to build a chapel and schoolroom on her own reservation. Anyone desiring to aid her in this may communicate with Mr. T. R. Marshall, 134, Princes-street, Edinburgh; or Mr. J. W. Davis, 32, Sears-building, Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

PILGRIM LIFE.

The "Faith Mission" in Scotland was started in order to reach many of the small towns and villages hitherto little touched by existing evangelistic agencies. In a recently issued report a very cheering account is given of the scope and outcome of the first year's work. Three sisters and six brothers form the Mission band. During the twelve months ending October, thirty places were visited, the time spent in each place varying from ten days to six weeks. In some places there was much hardness and scarcely any interest in spiritual things; in others, ministers held aloof or openly expressed disapproval. In one place a Free Church minister preached against female preaching. At another place when the mission was in full swing the workers were turned out of the hall they had hired, and which was connected with one of the churches.

Nevertheless, the work prospered. The labours of two sisters were greatly blessed in some villages. At Tillicoultry a blessed work of God was apparent at the end of the first week, and the mission was prolonged for a month. At Kincardine a marked revival broke out. The closing meetings, in Peeblesshire, were rich in blessing. At Innerleithen and Walkerburn the halls were crowded nightly, and many testified to newness of life. The Faith Mission Prayer Union has branches in fifteen places, and a membership numbering about eight hundred. The report may be had of Mr. J. G. Govan, South-park, Hillhead, Glasgow.

ANGLICAN SISTERHOODS.

Sir,—Most of your readers will remember something of the case of Allcard v. Skinner, which was so prominently before the public in the Law Courts last year. The action was brought by a lady who had quitted a London Sisterhood to enforce restitution of certain property which, while a member, she had transferred to the "Lady Superior."

The "Law Reports" of last year (Chancery Division, vol. 36, page 146) give a report of this case which is worthy the perusal of persons who are unacquainted with the character of Anglican Sisterhoods. I have copied from the report, and append an extract from the Rules of the Sisterhood relating to "Receiving Reproof" and "Obedience." These rules, it is stated, were formulated by the spiritual director of the Sisterhood— a clergyman of our "Church of England."—Yours truly,

A Country Solicitor.

OF RECEIVING REPROOF.

The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water, but as there is no room for strife between the creature and the Creator, so likewise between thee and thy Superior, who standeth to thee in the place of God... Now, therefore, understand how thou oughtest to receive reproof from thy Superior, whether it be just or unjust. I say not whether unto thee it appeareth just or unjust, for how can the guilty sit in judgment on the judge, and the moment thou beginnest to question the justice of thy Superior's reproof thou beginnest to sin.

First, then, when thou art reproved, remember that the voice of thy Superior is the voice of God. Listen on thy knees in perfect silence and defend not thyself. Keep silence till thou art bidden to speak, and then let thy words be reverent and few.

OF OBEDIENCE.

What, then, is obedience as it must be lived in by you? First, it consists in regarding the voice of your Superior as the voice of God....The letter of your Rule, and the living voice of your Superior are nothing else but helps and guides to the end that ye may the more perfectly do the will of God. Therefore, as in obeying your Superior ye seek to obey God, so in the command of your Superior ye must necessarily hear the voice of God....And let those whose it is to obey consider not the person whom they obey, but in her ever behold Christ the Lord for whose sake they obey her. Let this obedience be willing, loving, absolute, prompt, unhesitating, and trustful. Let them never think it of little moment to obey in any matter, whether great or small, nor ever desire any reason for an act of obedience....

[The Romanising party in the Church of England are simply traitors to the Reformation; to the Church to which they professedly belong; to the eternal interests of the souls over whom they have accepted pastoral care; to Christ whom they profess to serve; and to God whom they profess to worship.—Ed.]

DRAWING-ROOM BIBLE-MEETINGS.—An earnest-minded Christian gentleman, Mr. F. Parker, 7, Westbourne-park, Bayswater, W., is very desirous of promoting this agency as a means of bringing saving truth to bear on those in the higher social ranks of society. He has written a small pamphlet on the subject—"A Layman's Cry;" it seems to us most Scriptural in its teaching, and catholic in spirit. He will be glad to send a copy to any friend interested in such a movement, on receipt of a stamped addressed envelope.

THE CLOUDESLEY INSTITUTE and Home, 34, Barnsbury-street, Liverpool-road, Islington, N., is a bright, cheerful, homely place, where young women can spend a pleasant evening, either in recreation or instruction. There are two hundred members on the books, inclusive of the Sunday classes. Numbers have personally testified to the advantages afforded by the place, and many of the mothers have taken occasion to thank the managers for their kindness to and interest in their daughters. The workers will be glad if friends will kindly make the Institute known to young women. Visitors who may wish to see the Institute will be welcomed on any Monday or Thursday evening.

THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS

MEN often grumble about their circumstances. "I should have been a better and greater man had it not been for these circumstances of mine." But these circumstances are from God; and, if we will, they shall help instead of restraining us. Indeed, if we do not begin to be good or great within these circumstances, we shall never be good or great. There was once a man who got two talents from his master—not great wealth, certainly; but he used them diligently and doubled them, and his master said to him, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things." A fellow-servant of his got only one talent, and he grumbled and made no use of it, and at last it was taken from him, and he got no further chance of trading and acquiring wealth.

There may be circumstances hemming you in still, against which you have been repining for years. Take it as a token of mercy, that you have a chance of achieving something better and greater than you have yet achieved. If you are to "work out your own salvation," it must be within these circumstances; and the fact that they are yet about you is a token that "salvation" is yet possible. The way to get beyond narrow limits is not to beat against them impatiently, in the hope of bursting them, but to press them out with fulness of achievement.

You may be interested in Christian work. The Gospel is in your heart, and you wish it to get into the hearts of others. But you feel hampered, with so few opportunities of doing good, and so little apparent fruit. Are you to murmur and fret impatiently, "I must have more to do, and greater fruit, or I must cease working altogether"? Think of Jesus. [illegible] He grew up to manhood He learned to [illegible] the work that lay before Him. As He mixed with the people He saw the need of it. His soul yearned over men, perishing souls, who needed just the Gospel He came to proclaim, and the work He came to do; yet for years He suffered Himself to be hemmed in, because his hour, fixed by the Father, had not come. So your limitations are from God. This may be all the work He has for you here: it may be only in the next life He will give you the "many things." Or it may be He is emptying the vessel He will afterwards fill, fashioning the instrument He will afterwards use; it may be that more opportunities and greater power and fruitfulness shall follow fulness of achievement within your present limits. In either case, whether this little work you are doing for Him be all the work He has for you, or whether, as you work on, He will somehow break down the hedges and give you fields on the other side, be subject to God and his limitations; not [illegible] with one talent, for only to those who are faithful in few things will He give many things, either in this life or in the next.

Does this doctrine encourage slothfulness? Are not limitations given us to try our courage? This seems to be the opinion of many in our day, who appear unwilling to labour in quiet work for God—work in a [illegible] [illegible], and within narrow limits. But no, it does not encourage slothfulness. It is possible to be content with little and yet be ready for much. True submission goes along with a mind open to the teaching of God and a heart devoted to his service; and he who possesses it has really surrendered himself to God, and is willing to do the work He pleases, be the work great or small. One of whom this is true will not be deceived. He will not be content with narrower limits than God has set, nor murmur if they are narrower than he would wish.

ON THEATRES.

BY REV. J. F. T. HALLOWES.

A STRENUOUS effort is being made by the modern theatre to justify itself as an amusement which need not offend any but the morbidly conscientious. While its morals are certainly not advancing, it is pleading its cause with growing fervour. It has not yet, indeed, been possible to abolish the Lord Chamberlain, who is charged to prevent these same morals as exhibited in various plays, from sinking beneath the very accommodating minimum allowed by the State; yet the theatre increasingly poses as an instructor of the people. When, for the time (if time could change it), it ought to be a teacher, it has "need that someone (such as a State official) should teach it the rudiments of the first principles" of morality.

In its present condition of self-congratulation the theatre is being not a little helped both by the preaching and practice of certain clerical advocates, and by the reception of the more prominent actors and actresses into the higher circles of society. Despite this, there are substantial reasons for renouncing theatres altogether, which ought to influence all, but should have special weight with Christians.

A most pregnant reason is found in the fact that many modern plays are distinctly immoral. Mr. Herman Merivale, a playwriter of some note, has admitted this. According to him, the stage badly wants cleansing. At the Church Congress held a few years ago in Leicester, he said, "Oh, reform it altogether, and at once, by sweeping fifth-rate versions of tenth-rate foreign immodesty from the face of the wholesome English stage." This he admits is difficult, because "the motto on the stage, as elsewhere, is, 'Make money, come what may.'" Still these versions appear, and the theatre never is reformed. Pollok's prophetic lines are being more and more justified by the evolution of the drama year after year:—

> The theatre was from the very first
> The favourite haunt of sin.
> Some very good and wise and worthy men,
> Maintained it might be turned to good account;
> And so, perhaps, it might—but never was.
> From first to last it was an evil place.

Like the sensational novel, the drama reflects and dissects the vices of the age. Both are frequently largely indebted for the unwholesome interest they excite to plots which turn on breaches of the Seventh Commandment. It cannot be denied that some very popular modern plays exhibit immorality in conjunction with very attractive surroundings. Vice is glittering, fascinating, witty, and amiable, and, even if judgment is meted out to it at last, which is by no means always the case, its long-drawn triumphs are more dangerous as an example than its [illegible] penalties are serviceable as a warning.

There are professing Christians who will freely admit all this; yet they will deny the conclusion that they should renounce attendance at dramatic performances. "They never patronise immoral plays," so they say. "If at the theatre they frequent one was to be acted at a certain hour, they would leave before it came on the stage, or they would not attend till it was concluded." But in no such fashion can they elude their responsibilities. They are really giving their moral and financial support to the whole institution which ministers to their pleasure. They disapprove of certain plays, but the money goes equally to the support of what they censure as to that which they admire. Thus, in the sight of God, they become partakers of other men's sins, nor can they by any argument unburden themselves of a responsibility the very thought of which ought to be a sufficient argument to deter them from favouring an institution which, in some of its aspects at least, they are compelled to confess makes virtue more difficult and vice more easy.

Other arguments bearing on the evil influence of the theatrical amusements on those who see them and on those who supply them, I would bring forward on a future occasion.

ITALIAN PENINSULA MISSION.

SIG. AMBROSINI and I have now traversed the most mountainous part of our Gospel tour from the Alps to Calabria. We have visited numerous towns and villages that are totally destitute of evangelical testimony. One town we found to be so completely under the power of the Jesuits that with difficulty we were enabled even to distribute the Word of God and Gospel tracts. Such opposition, however, has been our exceptional experience, and we have seen much to cheer our hearts. Many interesting and encouraging cases cheered us on our way during the first week. Avoiding controversy as far as possible, and declaring the simple Gospel message, we got access to much people, and often succeeded in gathering them into little groups. We invited free conversation, which frequently rejoiced our hearts. To some who professed their desire to know and obey the truth we gave a Bible; to others a New Testament, or Scripture portion.

During the second week of our labours we were cordially invited by the local evangelists to visit a number of the churches and stations which are manifestly prospering. I [illegible] to bear my testimony to the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] to the Gospel. I had Gospel services on [illegible] evenings, the rooms were often crowded to overflowing.

We have been led to the old Roman town of Acqui as the headquarters of the [illegible] mission. It is the centre of a large population in which there is no evangelical agency at work. I am leaving an evangelist here, and purpose to continue my journey south, accompanied by my companion. I would ask on our behalf the prayers of Christian friends in Great Britain.

CHILDREN'S COTTAGE HOME, KINGSTOWN.—The eighth annual meeting of this Home for little Children was recently held in Kingstown, near Dublin, when the new Home was formally opened by the president, the Earl of Meath. It provides accommodation for fifty children; thirty of the cots have already been subscribed for or promised. These have mostly been given by children. The number of children in the Home throughout the past year averaged thirty-two, the total annual expenditure for each child being [illegible]. Since the Home was established in 1879 it has been the means of benefiting [illegible] young children. Addresses were given at the meeting by the Earl of Meath, the Archbishop of Dublin, Mr. T. P. Cairnes, Mr. Townsend Trench, Professor Barrett, and others. The hon. secretary of the Home is Miss R. M. Barrett, 4, De Vesci-terrace, Kingstown, co. Dublin.

THE STATE OF SOUTH LONDON.

It is not possible to pass over, in unconcern, the very serious and important paper in relation to the religious condition of South London which, in its first issue for the year, filled thirteen pages of The Record, and which is the result of months of inquiry. It is well, at the outset, to call to mind the stress which was laid by the Saviour and his Apostles on the conversion of cities. It was in towns that most of the Lord's mighty works were done, and his language was—"I must preach in other cities also: for therefore am I sent." He thus identifies his Father's interest in cities with his own. The Apostles laboured in the same spirit. According to the Acts of the Apostles large towns occupied their special attention. It was probably in one-half the cities of the Roman Empire that Paul, by the guidance and grace of the Spirit, planted Christianity.

Neither should we forget that the religious condition of the Metropolis powerfully affects the whole country. London, by its morals, its opinions, and its literature, influences every town and village in the land. Its unbelief, or its indifference, in regard to the religion of Christ, are incalculable in their effects, and must be increasingly, so in these days of railways and of human intercourse. And this consideration must not be overlooked: There are not merely eight hundred thousand souls between Battersea and Greenwich (the area embraced in the inquiry of The Record), but the numbers are growing with "tremendous rapidity," and it is impossible to anticipate without serious apprehension what must be the condition of this vast population in years to come.

Objections are taken to the representations made on the ground that the investigation has been mainly confined to the results of one order of Church action. Although there is justice in this and other objections, the broad facts are nevertheless indisputable. "Christianity is not in possession in South London." The people are sunk in leaden indifference. "The vast mass of them do not care about religion, and feel no interest in the Gospel. Active unbelief is not so prevalent as it is often assumed to be, but blank callousness is almost universal. Trouble and want, and the everlasting struggle for the bare means of life, seem to harden the heart and deaden it to higher impressions." No man who knows the population can deny these things, and The Record has done good service by presenting them in their terrible bearings, and compelling attention to them. There are thousands of devoted Christian workers. Nothing seems to be wanting on their part. Their work, however, instead of being easier becomes more anxious. The indifference they meet with is their "ever-recurring complaint."

This portentous question urgently demands the attention, nay, the prolonged and most prayerful consideration, of the wisest and best men in the land; for it is one that affects every large community. It ought to be met with fearlessness, and courageous statement. There ought, however, to be no misgivings about our religion. The Gospel, when properly presented, and unhindered by its own advocates, is still the power of God unto salvation; and we have come to the time for grave inquiry whether the message which the Son of God brought to earth is preached, or rather whether certain prevalent surroundings and misrepresentations of the Gospel have not firmly lodged in the heart of the people an utterly perverted conception of it. In the region under notice there are 120 churches and mission chapels; 130 places of worship of Nonconformists, and of Roman Catholics, and it is justly asked—"Must there not be something wrong in a machinery so vast, so costly, so long sustained, and so prominent, which yet produces results startling in their sad meagreness, even to those who do not allow themselves to forget the warning concerning the 'narrow way'?"

We note two statements in the paper of The Record. "It is no uncommon thing in this part of South London [Camberwell] to hear people plead, as an excuse for not going to church, that they do not like the stereotyped form of service." We read of Deptford that "simpler services are being asked for by the clergy in this neighbourhood." We are not ignorant that the remedy for that of which the clergy and people complain presents difficulties. But ought they to be accounted insuperable? If this is maintained is not human organisation lifted into an ascendency that discredits our very religion? Meanwhile, until conscience becomes imperious in this matter, should there not be more resolved effort that forms shall not appear unintelligible, and that they should be made instinct with life? Is there not, moreover, liberty given in extempore prayer before and after the sermon for a clergyman to spread, in tender sympathy, the present sorrows, temptations, poverties, struggles, and fears, of his congregation before the Lord?

We further observe that in more than one case the clergyman of a church has "smoking concerts with the men." Measures, if not the same, yet of a like nature, are adopted by others. These secular church and chapel entertainments are new to this age. They are doubtless well-intentioned. The ministers mix socially with the people, and are entertained along with them. Our opinion is that the result is abortive, and that the new customs are incongruous and baleful. The 800,000 souls of South London and the multitudes elsewhere are going daily in a long procession into eternity. Many of them are going out of a world in which the Son of God died for man's salvation, and going unforgiven, Christless, and unsaved. The minister of religion is a messenger from God to tell the people of this, and if he multiplies amusements for them, or sits amid fumes of tobacco, listening to, yea, even singing songs with them, they will inevitably come to lose faith in the urgency and supreme importance of the message he professes to bear. Said a clergyman, "I have tried cricket matches, charades, and penny readings, but now I find nothing but the full and free grace of God can change the parish and make Christians." A vicar in Southwark took the hint; now in the evening his church is filled, and he has every Sunday morning a Bible-class of 200 costermongers.

Are we not called upon, by solemn searchings of heart, and deliberate counsel, to revise our modern methods? The workmen who say they "don't care twopence about Christianity," ought at least to feel that it carries a grave warning to them. They have almost come to think that they are being cajoled into religion. It is the true Gospel that is in demand—a Gospel with its John the Baptist trumpet appeals before the coming of the Lord, and its melting invitations to flee to the refuge set before men. Sad will it be if the matter ends with getting more money, and augmenting machinery. It is a reformation that is needed, that will strip off all that now hides the authority, claims, and real nature of the Gospel from myriads of our countrymen. The hour seems fast approaching when we shall be confronted with a state of social life appalling and most menacing, and when we shall demand Christian reality and primitive sacrifice in all who profess and teach it. The lengthy and important article in The Record ought to open our eyes to the imperativeness of this new reformation.

ASKING AND RECEIVING.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers will rejoice to know that marked prosperity is accompanying the work of missionaries in divers countries. From a scene of special blessing in China amongst believers, Mr. Stanley Smith, of the China Inland Mission, writes to a near relative, and I am privileged with the perusal of the letter, and allowed to furnish you with the following extract:—

MEETINGS OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

I think during these meetings the word "received" has been brought home to me with fresh power. I remember after a meeting in London, at which L. B. and Miss W. were present, they two went away together. Meeting Miss W. afterwards, L. B. said to her the impression on her mind made during the meeting, was expressed in these two verses:

All things are yours.
Drink abundantly.

Now right here (to use an expression of Mr. Moody's) it seems to me lies the secret of a full salvation, and a life that gives out rivers of living water. We must take, drink, eat, receive. There is many a slip 'twixt the cup and lip, and I believe this proverb has a very deep spiritual application. Many ask God for spiritual blessing, but few stretch forth the grateful hand of faith and receive. It is plainly the privilege of all. "We beheld Him full of grace," says John, "and of his fulness have all we received." Christ has ascended up on high, and received gifts for his Church—gifts which, if she would but receive them at his hand, would make her down here upon earth "Clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." But she sits in his presence as did the woman at the well, and her want of appropriation calls out his rebuke, "If thou knewest the gift of God thou wouldst have asked, and He would have given."

I daresay you have often dwelt on the verse, "Everyone that asketh receiveth," and you have sometimes, perhaps, had such thought as this cross your mind, "Well, I see that many 'ask,' but it seems to me there is 'a great gulf' between the asking and receiving." Of course there is not, for the Saviour's words admit of no two interpretations. Is not this the truth: So few ask?

If I were back again amongst those dear little schoolboys, when I was at ——, and I had in my possession so many valuables which I gave them to understand they had only to ask for to receive, and that they should come to me one by one and so do, you would notice that each one who asked me would not only ask but stretch forth his hand. Now I ask this question: Are we asking God with stretched forth hands? Does the stretched hand invariably accompany the petition?"

The letter also tells that his old comrade, Mr. Charles Studd, had so far regained strength after his fever that Mr. Stanley Smith was able to leave him in order to stretch out to fresh fields.

Now, on behalf of honoured missionaries, old and young, men and women, over the world, and on behalf of the many who will doubtless speedily be following them to the front, should we not only plead for them but accompany our pleading with the outstretched hands Mr. Stanley Smith speaks of, in full expectation of clasping the God-given answer for this present year 1888? How stimulating to those at the front it will be to know that such prayer is being made for them. Still Mr. Stanley Smith is not entreating our prayers for those in the mission field. But his letter reminds us that all things are ours in Christ, and entreats each of his readers to drink abundantly, and be filled with all the fulness of God in Christ. He implores us to come to our heavenly Father each for himself, with outstretched hands. Then shall we indeed have power to pray for others.

If this young brother's urgent entreaty be thus responded to, what a circle of fire may girdle the earth! What thousands of us living in Christian lands may be filled with the Holy Ghost, and started to pray, as did our brother Elijah [of like nature as ourselves] when the people cried, "The Lord He is the God"; and simultaneously our noble brethren in the front receiving the Pentecostal blessing shall in the alone power of the Holy Ghost "declare the wonderful works of God."—Faithfully yours,

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

THE GOSPEL FOR THE CHURCH.

BY REV. CHARLES J. NEW, HASTINGS.

(Address at Wandsworth, Jan. 5.)

THE words of the departing Lord to his disciples, "Abide in Me, and I in you," correspond exactly with the subject of our prayers to-day. It is not too much to say they are the supreme words of Christ to the Church—the distinct secret of all that God would have us to be, and do, and possess. If "Believe on Christ" be the Gospel for the world, "Abide in Christ" is the Gospel for the Church. Yet it may be that many who have come to the first point have not advanced to the second. If I might so speak, they are but half saved: saved fully, no doubt, from condemnation, but hardly saved at all from sin. We cannot think too much of "Christ for us"—as our atonement on Calvary, and for us as our Intercessor in heaven; but we may and do think far too little of "Christ in us." And yet we need each of these for perfected salvation. McCheyne said, "Christ for us is our righteousness before a holy God; Christ in us is our strength in an unholy world." On the evening of his last discourse, our Lord unfolded to his servants the doctrine of the Holy Ghost in New Covenant measure: the baptism of the Spirit, as the Apostles received it, henceforth available for every believer in Him. He unfolded to them the truth of the believer's spiritual incorporation into Himself—"baptized into Jesus Christ," as the Apostle says: a truth which, up to that moment, had been hidden in the Divine mind. Then it became the basis of the Apostolic Epistles; it runs like a vein of finest gold through them all. It is a new creation; we are complete, filled full, in Him. To the Romans the Apostle speaks of our being graft into Christ, and of our being the Body of which He is the Head. To the Corinthians he speaks of our being in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; again, to them, of our being the body of Christ, and members in particular. To the Ephesians he speaks of our being blessed with all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ. He prays that Christ may dwell in their hearts by faith; and to them again he speaks of the Church as the body of Christ. Writing to the Philippians he declares it is his one desire to be found in Him. To the Colossians he speaks of our being dead and of our life being hid with Christ in God; again, to them, of the Church as the body of Christ. And so all the way through, until nowhere is this truth more conspicuous than in the First Epistle of John, with its constantly repeated "Abide." Must we not trace all this teaching back to the words which our Lord spake on that last night?

There are other words used to show that we are in Christ. We are in Christ, for example, as the manslayer was safe in the city of refuge; in Christ, free from condemnation; again in such words as "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost." But neither of these is the main, essential, central idea of our Lord and the Apostles. The union of which they speak at such length and so often is the union of a common life. "I in you," He says, "and you in Me," as the vine and the branches are one, as the head and the body are one. We are not one with Christ merely in the sense of having Him as our representative, or in the sense of having Christ with us; but the union of which He speaks to us so often is that union in which we become part of Him, joined to the Lord, one spirit—"As Thou Father art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." Nor is this less true because we cannot understand how it is. It passes analysis. But when we begin to act it out we find that it is true.

We see that Christ's words, "Abide in Me, and I in you," become a call to concious vital union with Him—conscious we are in Christ as believers. "Know ye not that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobate," i.e., rejected. On the moment of our first faith in the Son of God we became graft into Him; graft into the olive tree, partaking of its root and fatness. Our Lord referred to a conscious, vital union, because you see He distinctly spoke of the union with Him which bears fruit. "Except ye abide in Me, ye cannot bear fruit." Only the conscious union is the fruitful union. No doubt many Christian people are not faithful, not because they are not in Him, but because they are not conscious they are in Him, i.e., the union is not realised. They do not draw from Him the available fruit-bearing power. We have to realise that we are nothing in ourselves; mere dead branches apart from Him. I am but a branch; I cannot maintain my position in the tree; I cannot maintain my life; I cannot, in the least degree, glorify the Divine Husbandman by fruit-bearing, save as I draw power from Him. Branchlike, I have to abide in Him, the Vine.

Further, the assurance of all his fulness is for us. He tells his disciples, in John xv., that his joy is theirs: "That my joy may remain in you." His love is theirs: "Love one another as I have loved you." His knowledge is theirs: "Whatsoever I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." His right is theirs: "Whatsoever ye ask in prayer in My name, He will do it for you." His persecution is theirs: "If they have hated Me they will also hate you." His work, too, is theirs: "My Spirit will bear witness of Me, and ye also shall bear witness." That is the substance of John xv.

But this figure of the vine now suggests to us how this call may be fulfilled. How can we thus abide in our Lord? Graft into Him already as believers, how can we become more closely joined to Him, more deeply rooted into Him; and thus obtain more abundantly of his fulness? That is the question. There are degrees of being thus joined to Christ. Union to Christ has to be grown into. Some Christian people have a much closer union with Him than others have, and consequently they bear more fruit. The reason is, they have struck the fibre of their spiritual being deeper into his being, and so they are more closely knit to Him; his fulness more freely flows into their hearts. This idea of growth into Christ is not infrequent in the New Testament.

How can we become thus, graft-like, more closely joined to Him, more firmly rooted into Him, and so have more of Him? The cords of meditation and prayer must bind us closely to Him. Formal prayer, the ill-used Bible, the half-deserted closet, are destructive of the hopes of nearness to Christ. Sin weakens our desire and our faith, and hinders us from receiving. If this be true of us, every wrong thing must, nay will, be put aside; or it will be a barrier between the spirit of Jesus and our spirit, so that, though the whole tide of Divine vitality beat against it, it cannot pass through to us. There must be a perpetual drawing upon the fulness of the Lord Jesus, for we are told that He dwells in our hearts by faith, i.e., by appropriation. He is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. It is according as we draw these from Him, or anything else we need from Him, that they pass into us; or, in other words, that Christ passes into us. As we draw upon his atonement, as we draw upon his mediation, as we draw upon his sufficient grace, as we draw upon his sustaining strength, as we draw upon his tender love, as we draw upon his perfect fidelity, all these things come into us; we possess Him.

From this there would surely come to us, there would be in us, all that God wills concerning us. Here we have some idea of his high and holy will concerning us; we see it far, far off in the person of his Son, for we are predestined to be conformed to the image of the Son. Is is, indeed, far off; we long for it, we strive for it, and again and again we despair of it. Christian brethren, we can give up the despair. The secret of coming to all that is just in these words: this is our Lord's one comprehensive requirement of us; this is our sole business as Christian men and women, all that God would have us be, possess, and do—"Abide in Me, and I in you."

It is often thought that, before Christ can come in, we must put the evil out. We have not got to put the evil out. What we have to do is to let our Lord in, and the evil will be put out by his incoming, just as the light puts out the darkness; and, as natural founts of that life, there would flow love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith. From that, too, would flow a heart at rest. When we know that all the fulness of the Lord Jesus Christ is for us, what need to trouble about the inadequacy of our poor resources. We need not be afraid of any burden, any work, any difficulty, suffering, or temptation, if only we understand that we are in Christ, and Christ is in us; and though we have no strength, all his strength is ours. Here is the secret of peace.

Last of all, there would be secured the power of Christ working through us. Can you think of anything more unutterably precious to us than the thought of being the channel through which the sweet will of the Lord Jesus may just flow forth? That is now our possibility—of God working in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. Paul gained it: "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Think of the words of Christ, which show that our Lord was so truly one with the Father that the Father gave Him his words and his works. That is exactly our possibility. Just as Christ was one with the Father so can we be one with Christ, and He can work through us as the Father worked through the Son. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word; that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." "Abide in Me, and I in you." There is the secret of power.

SAILORS IN NAPLES.—The work among sailors here is very encouraging. Since Mr. McCartney, the harbour missionary, went here on October 23, over 1000 sailors have visited the Bethel, and have listened to the Gospel message. Mr. McCartney would be glad to receive tracts or books, addressed to the Bethel.

FULHAM GOSPEL MISSION.—Rescue work was started a year ago, and is still carried on by voluntary lady workers. Many encouraging cases have been successfully dealt with, the only difficulty being that there is no Home in the neighbourhood. Something must be done in this direction. There are many mere children as well as fallen girls in Fulham who need to be rescued from a life of degradation and shame. Clothing or other help will be thankfully received by the treasurer, Mrs. Dell, 279, North End-road, Fulham, S.W.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

VI.—GUIDANCE.

Many children of God are so deeply exercised on the matter of guidance that it may be helpful to give a few suggestions as to knowing the way in which our Father would have us walk and the work He would have us do. The importance of the subject cannot be exaggerated; so much of our power and peace consists in knowing where God would have us be, and in being just there.

The manna only falls where the cloudy pillar broods; but it is certain to be found on the sands, which a few hours ago were glistening in the flashing light of the heavenly fire, and are now shadowed by the fleecy canopy of cloud. If we are precisely where our heavenly Father would have us to be, we are perfectly sure that He will provide food and raiment, and everything beside. When He sends his servants to Cherith, He will make even the ravens to bring them food.

How much of our Christian work has been abortive, because we have persisted in initiating it for ourselves instead of ascertaining what God was doing, and where He required our presence. We dream bright dreams of success. We try and command it. We call to our aid all kinds of expedients, questionable or otherwise. And at last we turn back, disheartened and ashamed, like children who are torn and scratched by the brambles, and soiled by the quagmire. None of this had come about, if only we had been, from the first, under God's unerring guidance. He might test us, but He could not allow us to mistake.

Naturally, the child of God, longing to know his Father's will, turns to the sacred Book, and refreshes his confidence by noticing how in all ages God has guided those who dared to trust Him up to the very hilt; but who, at the time, must have been as perplexed as we are often now. We know how Abraham left kindred and country, and started, with no other guide than God, across the trackless desert, to a land which he knew not. We know how for forty years the Israelites were led through the peninsula of Sinai, with its labyrinths of red sandstone, and its wastes of sand. We know how Joshua, in entering the Land of Promise, was able to cope with the difficulties of an unknown region, and to overcome great and warlike nations, because he looked to the Captain of the Lord's host, who ever leads to victory. We know how, in the early Church, the Apostles were enabled to thread their way through the most difficult questions, and to solve the most perplexing problems; laying down principles which will guide the Church to the end of time; and this because it was revealed to them as to what they should do and say, by the Holy Spirit.

The promises for guidance are unmistakable. Psa. xxxii. 8: "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go." This is God's distinct assurance to those whose transgressions are forgiven, and whose sins are covered, and who are more quick to notice the least symptom of his will, than horse or mule to feel the bit.

Prov. iii. 6: "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct (or make plain) thy paths." A sure word, on which we may rest; if only we fulfil the previous conditions, of trusting with all our heart, and of not leaning to our own understanding.

Isa. lviii. 11: "The Lord shall guide thee continually." It is impossible to think that He could guide us at all, if He did not guide us always. For the greatest events of life, like the huge rocking-stones in the West of England, revolve on the smallest points. A pebble may alter the flow of a stream. The growth of a grain of mustard seed may determine the rainfall of a continent. Thus we are bidden to look for a Guidance which shall embrace the whole of life in all its myriad necessities.

John viii. 12: "I am the light of the world; he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." The reference here seems to be to the wilderness wanderings; and the Master promises to be to all faithful souls, in their pilgrimage to the City of God, all that the cloudy pillar was to the children of Israel on their march to the Land of Promise.

These are but specimens. The vault of Scripture is inlaid with thousands such, that glisten in their measure, as the stars which guide the wanderer across the deep. Well may the prophet sum up the heritage of the servants of the Lord, by saying of the Holy City, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children."

And yet it may seem to some tried and timid hearts, as if everyone mentioned in the Word of God was helped, but they are left without help. They seem to have stood before perplexing problems, face to face with life's mysteries, eagerly longing to know what to do, but no angel has come to tell them, and no iron gate has opened to them in the prison-house of circumstances.

Some lay the blame on their own stupidity. Their minds are blunt and dull. They cannot catch God's meaning, which would be clear to others. They are so nervous of doing wrong, that they cannot learn clearly what is right. "Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? Who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the Lord's servant?" Yet, how do we treat our children? One child is so bright-witted and so keen that a little hint is enough to indicate the way; another was born dull; it cannot take in your meaning quickly. Do you only let the clever one know what you want? Will you not take the other upon your knee and make clear to it the directions which baffle it? Does not the distress of the tiny nursling, who longs to know that it may immediately obey, weave an almost stronger bond than that which binds you to the rest? Oh! weary, perplexed, and stupid children, believe in the great love of God and cast yourselves upon it, sure that He will come down to your ignorance, and suit Himself to your needs, and will take "the lambs in his arms, and carry them in his bosom, and gently lead those that are with young."

There are certain practical directions which we must attend to in order that we may be led into the mind of the Lord.

(1) Our motives must be pure.—"When thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light" (Luke xi. 34). You have been much in darkness lately, and perhaps this passage will point the reason. Your eye has not been single, There has been some obliquity of vision. A spiritual squint. And this has hindered you from discerning indications of God's will, which otherwise had been as clear as noonday.

We must be very careful in judging our motives: searching them as the detectives at the doors of the House of Commons search each stranger who enters. When, by the grace of God, we have been delivered from grosser forms of sin, we are still liable to the subtle working of self, in our holiest and loveliest hours. It poisons our motives. It breathes decay on our fairest fruit-bearing. It whispers seductive flatteries into our pleased ears. It turns the spirit from its holy purpose, as the masses of iron on ocean steamers deflect the needle of the compass from the pole.

So long as there is some thought of personal advantage, some idea of acquiring the praise and commendation of men, some aim at self-aggrandisement, it will be simply impossible to find out God's purpose concerning us. The door must be resolutely shut against all this, if we would hear the still small voice. All cross-lights must be excluded, if we would see the Urim and Thummim stone brighten with God's "Yes," or darken with his "No."

Ask the Holy Spirit to give you the single eye, and to inspire in your heart one aim alone; that which animated our Lord, and enabled Him to cry, as He reviewed his life, "I have glorified Thee on the earth." Let this be the watchword of our lives, "Glory to God in the highest." Then our "whole body shall be full of light, having no part dark, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give light."

(2) Our Will must be surrendered.—"My judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me" (John v. 30). This was the secret, which Jesus not only practised, but taught. In one form or another He was constantly insisting on a surrendered will, as the key to perfect knowledge, "If any man will do his will, he shall know."

There is all the difference between a will which is extinguished and one which is surrendered. God does not demand that our wills should be crushed out, like the sinews of a fakir's unused arm. He only asks that they should say "Yes" to Him. Pliant to Him as the willow twig to the practised hand.

Many a time, as the steamer has neared the quay, have I watched the little lad take his place beneath the poop, with eye and ear fixed on the captain, and waiting to shout each word he utters to the grimy engineers below; and often have I longed that my will should repeat as accurately, and as promptly, the words and will of God, that all the lower nature might obey.

It is for lack of this subordination that we so often miss the guidance we seek. There is a secret controversy between our will and God's. And we shall never be right till we have let Him take, and break, and make. Oh! do seek for that. If you cannot give, let Him take. If you are not willing, confess that you are willing to be made willing. Hand yourself over to Him to work in you to will and to do of his own good pleasure. We must be as plastic clay, ready to take any shape that the great Potter may choose, so shall we be able to detect his guidance.

(3) We must seek Information for our Mind.—This is certainly the next step. God has given us these wonderful faculties of brain power, and He will not ignore them. In the days of the Reformation, He did not destroy the Roman Catholic churches or pulpits; He did better, He preached in them. And in grace, He does not cancel the action of any of his marvellous bestowments, but He uses them for the communication of his purposes and thoughts.

It is of the greatest importance then that we should feed our minds with facts; with reliable information; with the results of human experience, and above all with the teachings of the Word of God. It is matter for the utmost admiration to notice how full the Bible is of biography and history: so that there is hardly a single crisis in our lives that may not be matched from these wondrous pages. There is no book like the Bible for casting a light on the dark landings of human life.

We have no need or right to run hither and thither to ask our friends what we ought to do; but there is no harm in our taking pains to gather all reliable information, on which the flame of holy thought, and consecrated purpose, may feed, and grow strong. It is for us ultimately to decide as God shall teach us, but his voice may come to us through the voice of sanctified common-sense, acting on the materials we have collected. Of course at times, God may bid us act against our reason; but these are very exceptional; and then our duty will be so clear that there can be no mistake. But for the most part God will speak in the results of deliberate consideration, weighing and balancing the pros and cons.

When Peter was shut up in prison, and could not possibly extricate himself, an angel was sent to do for him what he could not do for himself; but when they had passed through a street or two of the city, the angel left him to consider the matter for himself. Thus God treats us still. He will dictate a miraculous course by miraculous methods. But when the ordinary light of reason is adequate to the task, He will leave us to act as occasion may serve.

(4) WE MUST BE MUCH IN PRAYER FOR GUIDANCE.—The Psalms are full of earnest pleadings for clear direction: "Show me thy way, O Lord, lead me in a plain path, because of mine enemies." It is the law of our Father's house, that his children shall ask for what they want. "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not."

In a time of change and crisis, we need to be much in prayer, not only on our knees, but in that sweet form of inward prayer, in which the spirit is constantly offering itself up to God, asking to be shown his will; soliciting that it may be impressed upon its surface, as the heavenly bodies photograph themselves on prepared paper. Wrapt in prayer like this the trustful believer may tread the deck of the ocean steamer night after night, sure that He who points the stars their courses will not fail to direct the soul which has no other aim than to do his will.

One good form of prayer at such a juncture is to ask that doors may be shut, that the way may be closed, and that all enterprises which are not according to God's will may be arrested at their very beginning. Put the matter absolutely into God's hands from the outset, and He will not fail to shatter the project, and defeat the aim, which is not according to his holy will.

(5) WE MUST WAIT THE GRADUAL UNFOLDING OF GOD'S PLAN IN PROVIDENCE.—God's impressions within and his Word without are always corroborated by his Providence around, and we should quietly wait until these three focus into one point.

Sometimes it looks as if we are bound to act. Everyone says we must do something; and indeed things seem to have reached so desperate a pitch that we must. Behind are the Egyptians; right and left are inaccessible precipices; before is the sea. It is not easy at such times to stand still and see the salvation of God; but we must. When Saul compelled himself, and offered sacrifice, because he thought that Samuel was too late in coming, he made the great mistake of his life.

God may delay to come in the guise of his Providence. There was delay ere Sennacherib's host lay like withered leaves around the Holy City. There was delay ere Jesus came walking on the sea in the early dawn, or hastened to raise Lazarus. There was delay ere the angel sped to Peter's side on the night before his expected martyrdom. He stays long enough to test patience of faith, but not a moment behind the extreme hour of need. "The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and shall not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come; it will not tarry."

It is very remarkable how God guides us by circumstances. At one moment the way may seem utterly blocked, and then shortly afterwards some trivial incident occurs, which might not seem much to others, but which to the keen eye of faith speaks volumes. Sometimes these signs are repeated in different ways, in answer to prayer. They are not hap-hazard results of chance but the opening up of circumstances in the direction in which we should walk. And they begin to multiply, as we advance towards our goal, just as lights do as we near a populous town, when darting through the land by night express.

Sometimes men sigh for an angel to come to point them their way: that simply indicates that as yet the time has not come for them to move. If you do not know what you ought to do, stand still until you do. And when the time comes for action, circumstances, like glow-worms, will sparkle along your path; and you will become so sure that you are right, when God's three witnesses concur, that you could not be surer though an angel-hand beckoned you on.

The circumstances of our daily life are to us an infallible indication of God's will, when they concur with the inward promptings of the Spirit, and with the Word of God. So long as they are stationary, wait. When you must act, they will open, and a way will be made through oceans and rivers, wastes and rocks.

We often make a great mistake, thinking that God is not guiding us at all, because we cannot see far in front. But this is not his method. He only undertakes that the steps of a good man should be ordered by the Lord. Not next year, but to-morrow. Not the next mile, but the next yard. Not the whole pattern, but the next stitch in the canvas. If you expect more than this, you will be disappointed, and get back into the dark. But this will secure for you leading in the right way, as you will acknowledge when you review it from the hill-tops of glory.

We cannot ponder too deeply the lessons of the cloud given in the exquisite picture-lesson on Guidance (Num. ix. 15—23). Let us look high enough for guidance. Let us encourage our soul to wait only upon God, till it is given. Let us cultivate that meekness which He will guide in judgment. Let us seek to be of quick understanding, that we may be apt to see the least sign of his will. Let us stand with girded loins, and lighted lamps, that we may be prompt to obey. Blessed are those servants They shall be led by a right way to the golden city of the saints.

MR. FEGAN'S HOMES.

DEAR SIR,—I send you some particulars concerning the boys sent out from Mr. Fegan's Homes to this land. Our distributing Home in Toronto is now empty, and we have a large number of applications from respectable farmers for members of the next party. Thus far about 400 boys have been located, and these lads, after supplying themselves with necessary clothing, have sent in over 1000 dols. for deposit in the savings bank. Mr. Brace makes surprise visits to the farms for the purpose of having private conversations with the boys, and the reports he brings back are most satisfactory.

In dealing with the younger children God has marvellously opened up the way for us. We endeavour, as far as possible, to place brothers in the same family, or in families residing in the same neighbourhood, and the way in which Christian homes have been opened to us has often called forth notes of praise. Our two babies of this year's party were aged five and seven. We would not separate them, though requested several times so to do. At length there came along a Christian farmer and his wife. Having no children of their own, they wanted some to love and fill up the vacancy in their home. They took to our babies at once, and soon all was arranged.

No work done for the poor boys of the old land could possibly be such a blessing to them as that of helping them out to homes among the farmers of this thriving Dominion. Could our generous friends at home see the happy homesteads in which hundreds of little English boys are found to-day, they would, I feel certain, double their gifts to the institution.

Yours very truly, WM. GOODERHAM,
Toronto. Member of Canadian Council.

COLLIERS' RENTS.—A letter in a contemporary describing the mission work carried on here in connection with the London Congregational Union, says:—Letters have reached Rev. Andrew Mearns at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, from men and women now occupying good positions in society, who, not long since, were homeless wanderers. One is to-day in a good position as a commercial traveller in the South of England, and invariably pays a visit to his old friends when he has an opportunity of coming to London. Another, similarly engaged, is in a good social position, and bids fair to realise a competency. Every penny advanced to him was honourably repaid as soon as the tide set in his favour. Another is occupying a position of responsibility, not far from the Law Courts, and gratefully acknowledges his indebtedness to Mr. Mearns for the help extended to him, by means of which he has been able to reach his present position. Another is in a good position in connection with a large shipping company—a man who, but a few months ago, was utterly comeless and penniless.

THE STORY OF TORONTO.

IT was an eloquent and interesting story which Mayor Howland, of Toronto, had to tell at Steinway Hall, New York, on a recent evening, of the way in which the Canadian city has been emancipated from the rule of rum. Mr. Howland has been Mayor of Toronto for two consecutive terms, being elected both times by immense majorities, on the issues of temperance and Sabbath observance. One of his first acts as Mayor was to cause the following passage, written in large letters, to be placed in a conspicuous position on the walls of his office, "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." It was first written on canvas; it is now engraved on an arch of stone. The words express the ruling and guiding principle of Mayor Howland's administration. He himself is an active member of the Christian Church, a mission worker, and has associated with him in the government men of like character. He assumed office with the express understanding that the affairs of the city were to be administered in the interests of temperance, order, and a quiet Sabbath, and he has been faithful and true to his trust.

As the result of his wise, firm, and fearless course, Toronto enjoys the reputation to-day of being one of the most orderly, law-abiding, prosperous cities on the American continent. The number of drinking-places in the city has been reduced to one hundred and fifty, and of these only four are actual saloons, that is, places where the only business is selling liquor. The others have hotel licences, and are forced to provide accommodation for guests. All forms of Sunday work and traffic have been stopped, including the running of street-cars, the sale of cigars, confectionery, and newspapers. The Sunday laws have been enforced with such impartiality and with such obviously good results that they now have the cheerful support of all elements of the population, not excepting the Germans and other foreigners. The working classes of the city are particularly earnest in their support of the laws which secure them a Day of Rest. Not long ago a deputation of livery-stable keepers waited upon Mayor Howland and asked that they too might have the benefit of the rest day. The Mayor read a letter before the meeting at Steinway Hall which he had received from the chief of the Knights of Labour in Toronto, expressing gratitude at what had been done towards giving working men a peaceful and quiet Sabbath.

Saturday afternoon is a holiday in Toronto all the year round. The saloons are closed at seven o'clock on that evening and are not allowed to be open again until six o'clock Monday morning. Under a general law of the Province no man engaged in the liquor traffic in any form can hold any public position in the gift of the people. The Province has compulsory temperance education in all its public schools. The general government holds the power to issue licences. A Local Option Act has been carried in sixty-three counties and cities in Canada, and the result of it is that between the licence law and local option the amount of liquor used has been reduced to three-and-a-half gallons per head, as compared with thirteen gallons per head in the United States.

The story of Toronto, as told by Mayor Howland, is a story that might be told of many another city, if all the citizens who believe in law, order, and sobriety, would drop their minor differences and work together for high ends. The story is not too good to be true. It is possible to have Christian sentiment dominating in the government of our cities, to dethrone the saloon from its place of power in politics, if the same effort is put forth that was put forth in Toronto. The Canadian city stands to-day as a practical example of what may be accomplished when honourable, high-minded Christian men are given the reins of government.—New York Observer.

A BRIEF LIFE SERVICE FOR BRITISH SOLDIERS.

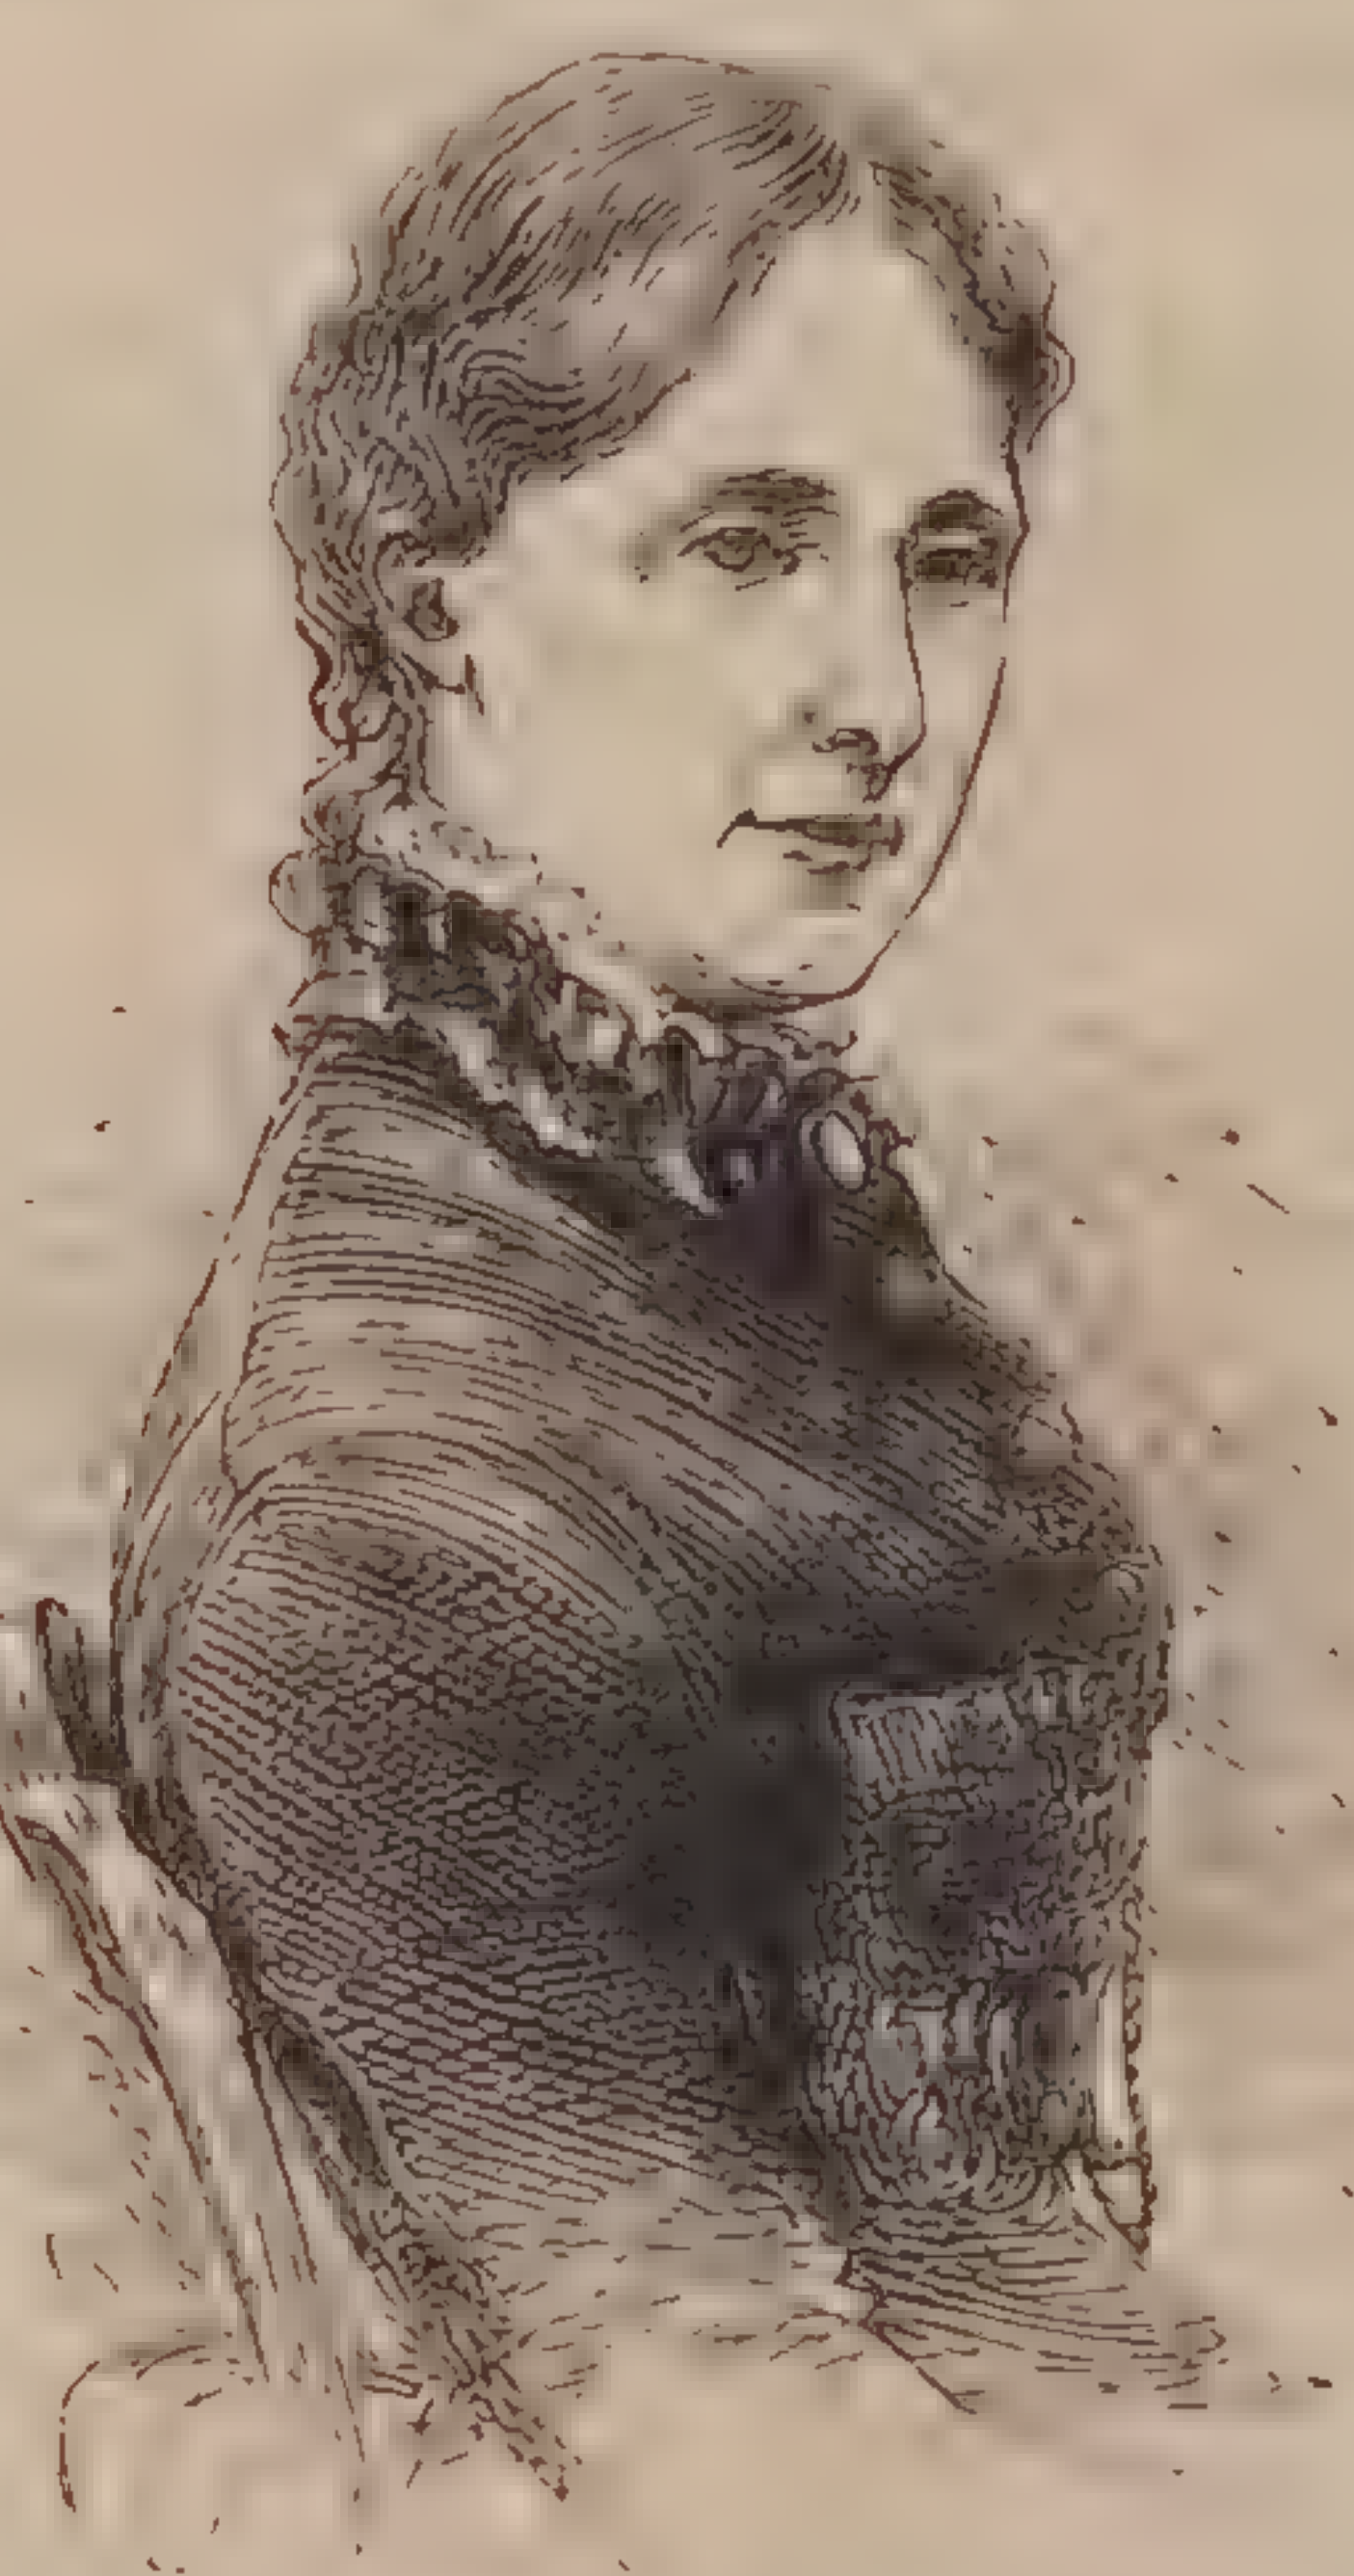
"I will never give up any man so long as Christ does not give him up," was the motto of a young and consecrated army chaplain's daughter, the thrilling and fascinating Memoir of whom has reached a second edition.* The life isdestined to stimulate many, and will be regarded as a beautiful proof of the wonderful spell which a self-forgetting love exerts over men insensible to other appeals.

Miss Wesley, according to Mr. Stevenson (author of "Memorials of the Wesley Family"), was in the direct lineal descent from ancestors whence proceeded the founders of Methodism. Of two brothers, one became the rector of Epworth; the other, the great grandsire of Rev. Samuel Wesley, who is now Army Chaplain at Hounslow, and who has made the churches his debtor by sending forth these memorials of his saintly and sainted daughter. [See Preface, and p. 171.]

Elizabeth A. Wesley was born in 1852 at Rugby, where her father was settled as a Methodist preacher. Those who in after life knew the loveliness of her personal appearance will not be surprised to learn that persons who saw her as a child, with "her fair complexion, open sunny countenance, rich auburn hair, and clear hazel eyes," stopped in the streets, exclaiming, —"what a lovely little girl." Her earliest emotions concerning soldiers were awakened by what she heard of the Crimean rigours of the winter of 1855-6, and by family prayers at that time for our British troops. Fathers inadequately estimate what precious seed may be lodged in the hearts of little ones, by intercessions at the domestic altar. In 1866, the girl of fourteen wrote home from school, telling her parents of her newly found joy in the Saviour, and of her prayer—"Oh, that I may be found faithful." Blessed are the boarding schools where efforts are made, as in this case, to secure affectionate Gospel preaching for pupils, and where the pointings of a young girl's nature are early directed to the love of Christ.

In 1873, when Miss Wesley was in her twenty-second year, her father was appointed by the Wesleyan Conference to Gravesend. This was a military station. The Musketry Depôt, Milton Barracks, was on the southern side of the town; relays of young recruits were constantly sent to learn rifle-practice in the long ranges of the Milton marshes; and Colonel Gordon's character and presence at the Fort-house on the Thames had diffused a weighty influence in favour of Christian efforts for men in the artillery and infantry service. Mr. Wesley was acting chaplain to the Methodist soldiers, and here it was that his daughter began her remarkable career. "I am convinced," was her language at that time, "that my special service will be among these soldiers who are so much left to themselves." Immediately the potent charm of her tact exerted itself. She would cross the street as she saw the red-coats on the other side, and, looking into their face with a smile of pure lovingness and confidence, would tell them that she was a friend of soldiers, and wanted them to help her in doing good to their comrades. From that time, and till the close of her consecrated life, such appeals from her, in hundreds of cases, were followed by responses, often choked by tears, to the effect that they would do as she desired for them, and come where they were invited. A room was hired for her use; fitted up as a Soldiers' Institute; made as bright as possible; and here, night after night, cheap refreshments were served, books provided, and attractive Christian services held. No night passed when the soldiers did not find their way to their new friend in order that she might read the Scriptures with them, and gladden them by her wondrously winning sympathy and encouragement. Many of them preferred the services at the Methodist Chapel hard by, but there she would, by a second meeting, manage to be among them, and there it was in the winter of 1874, that the power of the Spirit was remarkably present, so that backsliders were recovered, and young recruits put their surrendered hands into those of the Saviour, who kept them through many a temptation, and was with some of them through sanguinary campaigns.

The commissioned officers admired and helped this work among their men. A schoolroom in the barracks was placed at Miss Wesley's service, and a godly sergeant, along with converted soldiers, began to add their testimony to hers in recommending Christ. "I am perfectly astonished at the change in many of these men," said one of the officers. "Their very countenances are altered, their movements quickened, and the trouble we had with some is all over. If all Christian people acted as the Wesleys in Gravesend, we should, I think, have a converted army."



MISS E. A. WESLEY.

In the first year of the present decade Mr. Wesley was located at Winchester. Immediately a welcome was given by men who knew them of the 3rd-60th Rifles. "Did they not shake our hands?" writes Miss Wesley. "I am praying every day to be given up to Christ fully," was the spirit in which she undertook the new service before her. With her wonted charm of grace and dignity, and with the same absence of self-assertion, she entered on that service. A soldiers' social evening meeting was at once instituted. "The men must be made to feel at home," was her idea; yet no sociality excluded prayer. She asked no human notice; never could labours have been less ostentatious. Accompanied by a sister of the commanding officer, her solicitudes carried her into the cells of the immense barracks, the hospital, and the married quarters. For a fortnight she alone nursed a sick wife, at the same time taking care of two little children, and led the husband savingly to Christ; while among the men of the Army Reserves who came home from Egypt with broken health she was as an angel of mercy. "I am going," said a dying soldier. "Send for the lady who prayed for me yesterday." Two needful characteristics were hers. She well understood soldiers, and she well understood also the way of salvation. There was no healing of souls slightly. Case after case is given of men who had lived recklessly brought in contrition to the feet of Jesus; and then, when they had gone away to Ireland, Canada, India, and elsewhere, her letters, urging to steadfastness, followed them. Half her nights were often spent in looking up for the Spirit's help in writing these letters. Occasionally she would travel to Aldershot and other places to visit a wounded soldier or a sick wife. Meanwhile meetings for religious service were not neglected; and the Lord so used her that we are told "night after night there were blessed cases of conversion." Nor did she make the mistake which is so fatal to Christian usefulness. The little tract, "Converse with Christ," met her view as to the danger of substituting efforts on behalf of others for personal communion with the Lord.

From Winchester she went to live at Hounslow, on her father's appointment there. Here she found herself among cavalry as well as infantry corps; and, under the patronage of the commanding officer, at once plunged into her altered work among Hussars. Her power of speaking in religious addresses was now very marked. There was pathos, directness, and uncommon readiness of wit and wisdom in the use of incidents that had arisen. Still, however, there was no air of superiority, no asceticism; all was remarkably natural, with an unfailing vivacity. This sketch must not follow details of the work at Hounslow. Christ's compassion for the unsaved flowed through her freely. We find her ministering among soldiers' wives; working among the Militia, who were a thousand strong on Hounslow Heath, and beholding during a month's mission, with other helpers, marvellous triumphs of courage and evangelism; giving nine addresses to the 2nd-60th Rifles, before they left for Egypt; journeying to Tilbury to say parting words of guidance and encouragement to one soldier before he sailed for Canada; interesting herself in temperance work, so that hundreds were led to take the pledge; visiting Gravesend to rejoice with brave converts standing firm; travelling to Windsor to give a Gospel farewell to Grenadier Guards, about to depart to the Soudan; speaking at Chelsea to those whom she called "the faithful, brave blue jackets." Wherever she went in these incessant labours, her ardent affection, sweet face, cheery laugh, and womanly helpfulness, drew all hearts to her.

It is easy to criticise such unflagging energy. But, when the longing of the heart is finding its answer, the florist might as well be expected to grow indifferent when the rare flower was opening as the follower of Christ to pause when the reward of prayer and labour was being given. In 1885, the last year of her life, she went again to Winchester to meet a request to assist in a mission service for soldiers and civilians. The former welcomed her with tears, and Canon and Mrs. Josephine Butler gave her valuable help and sympathy. The whole garrison was stirred. Although Miss Wesley's time of departure to live among the angels was drawing near, her voice was still musical and penetrating, and the power of the Spirit was upon her. After she had spoken, soldiers in long lines—single file—were seen marching up the aisles of the chapel to the inquiry-room, while the building rang with the martial strains of men who had found their King. For the rest, the instructive memoir by her father must be read. The present writer, who belongs to another church, knew her, and something of her brief but marvellous life-work, concerning which, with blessing to himself, he has written.

A LETTER FROM INDIA.

The little English boys and girls who go to school in this cold weather wrapped up warmly in their thick coats and furs would be amused and interested if they could see the children of India running about in the warm sunshine, and needing, even at this time of the year, very little clothing.

In the North-west Provinces of India, near Allahabad, there is a Christian village belonging to the Church Missionary Society. The people who live here have given up their idols, and worship the true God, and the difference may easily be seen in their homes and in all their surroundings. Their houses are clean, though small, and the women are neatly dressed, and do not wear the ugly rings in their ears and noses, that are so common among the Hindoos.

There is a large school-house in the village, where the children are taught very much the same as in England. We visited the school one afternoon, just as lessons were over, and a class of girls were putting away their work. They looked very nice in their little pink frocks, with bare feet, and glossy black hair, smoothly plaited; and their bright brown faces and shining eyes told that they were happy and well cared for. They ran to get their sewing for us to see, and displayed it with evident satisfaction. Each piece of work was carefully wrapped in a pocket-handkerchief, and the clean calico and neat stitches did great credit to the little workers. One tiny girl, scarcely higher than the table, had hemmed a handkerchief beautifully. She had taken such pains with it that her teacher said it had taken her a month to get it done. They also showed us their copy books. Some were English ones, but some were written in the funny Hindustani characters, and begun from the last page of the book instead of the first.

Outside, in the street, an old man with very white hair, was seated on a low stool, with a little group of boys round him who listened very attentively as he gave them a lesson in Persian.

A little further up the street we saw the village shop, with open front so that the goods could be seen by the passer by, and there was no need for a shop-window to display them. We saw the church, and the dispensary; the 600 people who live in this village seem to have all that they require, and are a very happy little community. There is no public-house, and, I need scarcely add, no police-station.

We could not help contrasting the peaceful happiness of this village with the dirt and squalor of some of the streets of Allahabad which we had lately seen. The name Allahabad means "the City of God," but it is a city of idols. There are a great many heathen temples, and the children are taught that they must bow down before the ugly images made of stone and offer gifts to them. Some of the temples are large and grand buildings, but some are very small and would not hold more than a dozen men. The people have no Sabbath day of rest such as you have in England, but go on with their work, buying and selling, or working at their trades, just the same every day of the week. How dreary life must be without any happy Sundays to look forward to! They have many festivals during the year in honour of their gods, but these are times of riot rather than of rest.

One great fair is held every year at Allahabad, on the banks of the river Jumna, where it joins the Ganges. The people come from far and near, bringing with them jewels and money, the most valuable things they have, to throw into the river as offerings to their god. The worshippers have their heads shaved, and the hair may be seen lying in great heaps by the river side. Then they bathe in the river, and think that by so doing they will get their sins washed away. When the great fair is over they go back to their homes, believing that they have pleased their gods by the sacrifices they have offered, and that so they will be safe, and no harm will befall them, although many people are snatched away by cholera while attending this very feast.

In this way thousands of these poor people live year after year, and the little ones are taught to do as their parents have done. They do not know that it is only Jesus who can take away our sins, and keep us safe and good. Many of them have never heard the beautiful story that you love to listen to, of how the Saviour came into the world to live among men, and to die for them. We are praying that our heavenly Father, who loves the coloured children as well as the white ones, will send many more of his servants to India, to teach them the way to heaven.

"ONE TUN" RAGGED SCHOOLS.

In a voluminous record of this interesting work, recently issued by Mrs. Barker Harrison, we are reminded of the immense difficulties encountered when the movement was in its infancy. The retrospect shows also what great things have been wrought through its instrumentality.

An important feature of the work at the outset was the erection of a plain and substantial building to accommodate sixty families of the poorest class, the rents ranging from 1s. 9d. a week for one room to 4s. 3d. for three rooms. This scheme was greatly advanced by the hearty co-operation of the then Duke of Westminster, and the details, as given in the report, are well worth attentive consideration when so much is being said about the housing of the labouring classes.

The late Lord Shaftesbury was a warm friend of the Mission from its earliest days. When, on the twenty-fifth anniversary, he proposed to give a Bible to all the former scholars who had received the school prize for good conduct in their situations, it was found that one hundred and twenty-five young people, in the colonies and United States, as well as in England, were entitled to receive the volume. These were representative of a far greater number of wild, unkempt, and scarcely clad children, who by sympathy and careful training, and instruction in the Holy Scriptures, had been raised from the mire, and enabled to fill honourable positions in society. Sunday-school, Band of Hope, Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, and simple Gospel services, with other minor though influential agencies, were contributory to the glorious results. All these varied endeavours are in fruitful operation at the present time. Cases are mentioned of the wonderful change effected in the lives of once degraded men by the teaching given.

The address of Mrs. J. Barker Harrison, who has long taken such a kindly oversight of the work is 32, Eaton-terrace, Eaton-square, S.W.

A MINISTERING ANGEL.

She came to me when stricken low,
She spake to me, so soft and slow,
Of healing balm for every blow
From Gilead's mount.

Her words so hush'd, so quieted down
The inward surge, the outward frown;
Brought stillest love that I had known
For many a day.

Her voice was like the cooing dove,
Her theme was Jesu's tender love:
Such tender love, enough to move
The stones to praise.

But, ah! poor I could only sigh,
And in my weakness wish to fly
To his dear arms, and there to lie
For aye at rest.

She read from out the holy Psalms
Of havens quiet, in summer calms;
She knelt, and then she asked an alms
For stricken me.

She rose—she whispered Jesu's name,
Her soft, warm hand on mine was lain;
Methought I heard the angels' strain
Long afterward. H. T. S.

EAST LONDON SEWING CLASS FUND.

The depression of trade and the suffering caused by the overcrowded state of London make it most necessary that every effort should be made to help the very poor through the long winter months. In addition to the temporal relief, many a weary woman is soothed and rested by working for a few hours weekly in a quiet warm mission-room, where she hears in simple words of the love and compassion of a mighty Saviour. The reading of the Bible, the singing of hymns, and the prayers offered, all raise the women's hearts to higher, holier thoughts, even whilst they are earning money to help their families.

It is earnestly desired that help to this work may be sent in as soon as possible, to enable classes to be opened. The number of classes must depend on the amount of help received. They are opened during the worst winter months, and enable the women to earn the small sum of 1s. or 1s. 6d. a week; and this often decides the question whether bread or firing can be afforded.

Mr. George Holland writes from Whitechapel:—"The present winter, we are afraid, will be one of great trial and sorrow. The poor seem to be poorer; they have parted with many things to obtain bread. The hopping season was a failure, and persons who visited the hop-gardens, hoping to earn a little money, returned in most cases, penniless. Applicants are very numerous just now for admission to the Sewing Classes, which we shall be glad to re-open once more."

Another earnest worker writes:—"We have commenced the work of another winter under very depressing convictions that the destitution is certainly deeper and more widespread than heretofore. Some of the aged women have fairly broken down, and sought refuge in the union; but the younger portion (those in middle life) are brave still, and anxious to struggle on. These are chiefly widows and their children. The Sewing Class is the one hope to these poor women through the winter."

Mrs. van Erckelens is still working under the Ladies' Committee, and her long experience in the East of London makes her varied services most valuable. Every £1 subscribed gives help to one poor woman by letting her earn 1s. 6d. weekly through the most trying months of the winter, and every £15 provides for a class of fifty women for one month. Help may be sent to Lady Albinia Hobart-Hampden, 63, St. George's-road, S.W.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

WHOLE-DAY DEVOTIONAL MEETINGS.

By the arrangement of the Committee of the C.M.S., Wednesday last week was set apart for solemn supplication, confession, intercession, dedication, and praise in reference to the Society's work. Exeter Hall was the place of meeting, and, no doubt, had the weather been favourable, the Committee's invitation would have been more largely accepted. The fog was so dense that only those with a fair measure of physical strength could be expected to face it. Nevertheless, the large hall was in the morning well filled, and throughout the day the attendance was most encouraging. At the morning meeting,

Sir John Kennaway, President of the Society, in a brief opening address, said it had not been found possible to carry on the February Simultaneous Meetings every year, but they felt that this year they could not be without something of the kind, and this meeting was the expression of that desire. There were some dangers ahead which should not be overlooked; they were carrying the work into the heart of the enemy's country, and it was not to be supposed that the enemy would be indifferent to the success which was achieved. Their work was such that it drew them near to the Master, and in proportion as they did this, they might be sure that the great enemy of souls would seek to discourage them. They should be encouraged to take from God's armoury the weapons wherewith they might be able to subdue the adversary.

Archdeacon Richardson said: "Lift up your hearts" should be their cry that day, present as they all were before God. Everyone in communion with God, in the examination of self, and in the expectation of the Holy Spirit's grace and light, that self-knowledge may be accurate and sincere—such were to be the leading features of their position. They wanted to make some discoveries as to what they were, whose they were, and why they were in the faith, and the fellowship of their Lord. In proceeding, he took as the text of his address, "Coming Short of Salvation," and spoke of the need of godly sorrow for sin, of an assurance of peace, of the full cultivation of gifts and graces, and of unflinching courage in walk and testimony. In closing, he pressed two considerations to be kept in mind—that the power of the Spirit should rest upon them, and that the presence of the Holy Ghost must be felt within their hearts.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule, taking 2 Cor. viii. as the text of his address, said that the whole chapter was eminently to the purpose of their present gathering; for scattered over it there were points of suggestion, of searching, encouraging, teaching of a blessed kind for all lovers of missionary work, who desired to love it in the Spirit of God and to work for it in God's love. It was a blessed thing to see the C.M.S., through its friends, humbling itself, and sure he was that, if the founders of the Society had any knowledge of things below, it would be to them an augury of future blessing to see a meeting of this character. Proceeding to speak a few practical words, he said they were thankful that the Society continued faithful to-day to its foundation, a witness to the old Gospel, to an open Bible, to the atoning Cross, to the converting and regenerating Spirit. Sometimes there were some things in their C.M.S. meetings for which they might humble themselves. There was not always, as there should be, what may be called the highest spiritual tone, and he prayed that to-day might prove an opportunity for resolving that in all future meetings they would lovingly and resolutely promote that tone. He did not mean by that that the meetings should be devoid of solid, first-hand information; but the question he should like them to consider was whether their meetings henceforth should not always be those in which the presence of their Lord and Master is quite unmistakable as pervading the whole. One deep, longing desire of the C.M.S. at the present time was for workers for the field, and no sort of meeting was so likely to prove useful as that which he had tried to sketch. Information of the most interesting kind was not enough, and general appeals were not enough. The meeting which would prove most valuable was one which would bring home in a most definite, clear, and searching way to the heart of every hearer the claim upon him of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. Canon Hoare took the chair at the afternoon meeting, and asked them to bear in mind the difficulties before them in the mission field; for there were enormous difficulties. China, for example, might be said to require nothing short of a miracle to bring it to Christ, and the Mohammedan world presented quite as grave an obstacle. Some are pointing out that there is very little being done in the Mohammedan world; but can it be supposed that we have not known and felt that all along, and that we do not deeply and profoundly feel it to-day? In proceeding he opened the subject of "Our Spiritual Possibilities" set down for consideration. All the possibilities seemed to him to be summed up in one, which, if given, all the rest would follow—the special manifestation of the omnipresent power of the Holy Ghost.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe said that where God has given principles of guidance it was for his children to act according to his will. They had it in their power to act out the Divine purposes concerning themselves on the understanding that God has made his gifts conditional. The command of God is, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." If this was a command addressed to them, surely the one great question which should be asked was, What may we do to arise and shine? This subject of the glory of the Lord passes from end to end of God's Word in a most remarkable manner. When we speak of the manifestation of the glory of the Lord we understand that the beauty, the magnificence, the power, and the glory of the Lord are to be seen among men, and there are certain distinct promises in reference to this, such as, "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed." There are four most magnificent promises of the same kind, showing that it is no spasmodic idea, but one distinct purpose of God; and the Church is waiting for the fulfilment of that purpose. The promise was not only distinct, but the means equally so, and brought before us step by step in different stages. God is seen revealing his glory in the form of a person, and for the purpose that men may be able to take it in, and rise stage by stage to a clearer vision of it.

Rev. C. A. Fox said there was no limit on the Divine side to spiritual possibilities, for God the Holy Ghost can only be restrained by men themselves. The object of this meeting surely should be that they should now consecrate themselves afresh to the Master's service; that it should be a new and complete consecration by the power of the Holy Ghost, and that anything which has been held back should be given up to be used by Jesus for his glory, and for the glory of his cause, the Church. The first question to be answered was, Had they given to Him the true sacrifices of God—the broken spirit? for there is not any sacrifice which God will own if that is left out. It was his firm conviction that the Church of Christ had lost her power because of the want of this broken spirit in the Church and in her members.

The meeting in the evening was under the presidency of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, who reminded the gathering that the definite purpose of the entire series was to lead Christians to a more thorough consecration of themselves to missionary work.

Sir Arthur Blackwood, introduced the topic of the evening, "Our Spiritual Determinations." The true power they needed was Holy Ghost power, and if that graciously rested upon the hearts of Christian workers in this Metropolis and upon those in the foreign field, they would have the strength needful to enable them to carry out their best determinations, for his grace would be found sufficient for them. He impressed upon them that it was not a question of their determinations, but rather a question of the attitude of soul in which they were found. Rev. Evan H. Hopkins said that all their spiritual activities towards God assumed the antecedent manifestation of God's loving kindness towards them. What He has done for man, what He is doing and has promised to do, form the basis of all spiritual determination. It was most important to bear in mind that in respect of ownership Christ claims possession of the soul. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe having delivered an address, in the course of which he touched upon the importance of all making the Lord their strength for service, Mr. Eugene Stock offered prayer that the Divine blessing might largely rest on all the proceedings of the day.—Abridged from "The Record."

MR. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN.

A correspondent writes that these evangelists have completed a most successful ten days' evangelistic mission in the Presbyterian Church, Napier, New Zealand. At the farewell meeting a large congregation assembled, and listened to the soul-stirring addresses with sympathetic attention. An invitation was given to those who had trusted Christ during the mission, and those who wished to trust Him, and all others who had received blessing to remain; from two-thirds to three-fourths of the congregation remained in their seats.

A very prominent feature in Mr. and Mrs. Mountain's mission is the thought and attention bestowed upon the children and young people. Both evangelists are pre-eminently qualified for this work. They possess the power of attracting them in a very marked degree.

Mr. and Mrs. Mountain, after conducting missions at Gisbourne, Waverley, and Patea, visited Auckland and its district.

GENOA HARBOUR MISSION.

For fourteen years this Mission has been energetically at work among the sailors frequenting this important harbour, and also among the emigrants leaving the port. Its influence has been far-reaching. Some idea of the extent of the work may be gathered from the fact that Signor Delfino, the colporteur and Scripture-reader, in the twelve months of which the last report speaks, visited 40,000 emigrants, besides thousands of sailors, and all of them of various nationalities. With many of these conversations were held, and many listened gladly to the Gospel, besides buying a copy of the Scriptures. Occasionally there is proof, in some returning emigrant or sailor, of the way in which the good seed thus sown is springing up into life everlasting.

The acting agent of the Mission, Captain Clucas, reports that more than 6000 sailors have attended the various meetings held in the hall, and more than eight hundred have spent week evenings in the Bethel reading-room. An interesting diary is appended to the report, a noticeable feature in which is the frequent recurrence of the words "This has been a month of great encouragement in the work." Rev. Donald Miller, of the Scotch Church, Via Peschiera, Genoa, superintends the Mission.

JERSEY BRANCH OF THE SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY.—A public meeting was recently held here, presided over by Col. P. D. Marrett, and addressed by Mr. Stephen Burrowes, and Rev. D. Cameron, as representing the Sailors' Rest Aid Society. Favourable reports were given of the work of the Society in various ports, and also of the new branch in Jersey, where the Society have a missionary, under an influential local committee. It is contemplated to have a Sailors' Rest at St. Helier's, as the present mission-room is not in a convenient place. Tracts and books may be sent to E. Kent, 36, Aubin-place, Don-road, St. Helier's, Jersey.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

In our last issue we referred to the meeting in the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on Monday, January 2. On the following evening the annual tea-meeting for Jewish adults was held at Sion Chapel, Whitechapel-road, E., where more than three hundred Jews and Jewesses sat down to tea, before and after which grace was sung. How the guests enjoyed themselves! Many of them are in deep poverty. At the subsequent Gospel service an earnest address was given by Dr. Dixon. Rev. J. Wilkinson addressed them affectionately, calling on all to surrender to the Lord Jesus. Earnest words were also spoken by Messrs. Adler, Gray, and Baron.

On Wednesday evening Mr, Wilkinson entertained at tea more than three hundred Jewish lads and lasses, of whom more than a hundred have attended the Mission night-school; a very happy meeting followed. Mrs. Jang gave an earnest address, and Mrs. Atthill charmed the little ones, and their elders also with her sweet rendering of, "There is a green hill far away," and other pieces. At the close of the meeting prizes for good conduct, regularity, &c., were presented by Mr. S. Field, an old and tried friend of the Mission.

FROM THE CONGO.

The following is an extract from a letter by a missionary in the Congo Free State, dated November last:—

I have been ill, so ill that my wife and others thought I was dying. I had slight fever and dysentry, and was exceedingly week and ill for some days, and friends decided I should go home at once. On the day following that decision I was lifted from my bed into a hammock and carried to Underhill Station, and two days later came down the river. The change did me good, and I am now much stronger and able to think for myself, so I am going away back again. Not that I feel a strong man—I am weakly, and the doctor thinks prudence should prompt me to leave; but I am satisfied my place, pro tem., is at Palabala. It would give me great joy to visit my old home—to see my dear children and other friends, but I think my Lord will tell me plainly when He would have me leave. Whatever lies before me I know all is well. When the darkness seemed closing round me and earth and its claims seemed fading, I felt the Lord was near, and as in the past so will it be in the future.

The work goes on with a few tokens of blessing here and there. At Lukunga, and specially Banza Manteke, they have very good results. At Palabala, about a month ago, just before I grew ill, four young men came to me one day, inquiring the way heavenward, and several stood up in our public service, and said they wished to leave their old ways and follow Jesus. I pray they may stand fast and witness for Him. I examined them pretty carefully, and they one and all bore testimony to the Spirit's work in them, convincing them of sin.

BRAZIL.—Rev. E. Vanorden on Tuesday, January 3, addressed the French congregation in Mulhausen, Elsass, of which Revs. Arnal and Mathieu are the pastors. At present Mr. Vanorden is in Glasgow, interesting Christians in his work in Brazil.

CENTRAL TURKEY.—The serious distress, resulting from the famine, has roused the attention of the people to spiritual things. Mr. Montgomery writes that at Adana their Friday evening prayer-meetings have an attendance of one thousand, and that there are equally large audiences at the Wednesday evening lectures. A second service on the Sabbath has been organised, and they have larger audiences than ever before. In the surrounding villages also there is a greatly increased interest. While some may be drawn in by a desire for relief, the large majority do not expect any direct aid. The missionaries call for earnest prayer for a spiritual blessing in connection with this religious movement.

YOUNG WOMEN IN HYDE PARK.

In a little report, lately issued, of the "Park" Branch of the Y.W.C.A., some touching extracts are given from the diary of the Hyde Park visitor. She says:—

"I started one evening for Hyde Park, about 6.45, and soon reached the Marble Arch. Going from thence to Hyde Park Corner, I spoke to nearly twenty girls, the greater number of whom were strangers to London and seemed glad to speak to me. Coming back, near the Marble Arch, I saw a girl sitting on a seat looking very downcast and miserable. A little patient, quiet talking induced her to tell me what was the matter. She had been out of a situation six weeks, had paid her lodgings till that morning, when, having spent her last penny, she begged them to keep her only two days till she heard from a place she had been inquiring about, but they refused, and she was utterly homeless and alone. I took her to a Home and gave her some food; she is now in a situation, doing well.

"Another night I spoke to two girls as they were coming into the Park from the Bayswater-road. It was a damp, miserable night, and they looked wet and wretched. I took them to a Home. One had come from Tunbridge Wells six weeks before. She knew no one, and on asking a girl at the station where she could lodge, was taken to a bad house. She was only nineteen, and is now doing well. Her companion had been only a fortnight out of a place; she is also doing well.

"Another evening I saw a young girl sitting alone, and on speaking to her, found she had come from Bath nearly seven weeks before, and had not succeeded in getting a place, and was drifting slowly down the road to destruction. She afterwards came to me, and we are now trying to get her a situation as house and parlour maid, which she was before."

Many respectable girls in service as nurses have joined this branch of the Young Women's Christian Association through the invitations given in the Parks (for Regent's Park and Green Park come in for a share of the visitors' time). All will agree in the necessity of doing something to stop the tremendous number of young women and girls who are constantly being drawn into the vortex of sin. The hon. superintendent of the branch is Hon. Mrs. H. Tollemache, 23, Prince's-gardens, S.W.; and the Park Visitor is Miss Norris, 16a, Old Cavendish-street, Oxford Circus, W.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.—Mr. J. D. Charrington has given £1000 towards the liquidation of the debt on the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, of which Mr. Frederick N. Charrington is an honorary superintendent.

CHARITY DISPENSING SOCIETY.—A well-attended meeting for the establishment of the Charity Dispensing Society was recently held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. Mr. W. Darley (of the Sheerness Benevolent Society for the Relief of the Afflicted Poor) presided, and stated that it was very necessary to call into existence a society which should be worked by honorary almoners. The principles upon which the society to which he belonged had worked, and upon which the new one should work, was to distribute its funds without regard to sect or party, colour or country, and to obtain the co-operation of the ministers of all denominations. The action of the Charity Organisation Society toward the poor had rendered it necessary that the new society should be founded. Those who intended to support it and co-operate with its founders must make up their minds to work hard. The impositions practised upon the benevolent were such that it was absolutely necessary that the greatest care and watchfulness should be exercised so that the society and its friends might not be deceived by designing and low-class men and women. The following resolution was unanimously carried:—"That a society be established to undertake the distribution of all kinds of charity and charitable relief through the medium of honorary almoners representing every district in the Metropolis." Mr. Bowden Green was appointed secretary.

MISS HAVERGAL'S CONSECRATION HYMN.

Rev. E. F. Baldwin writes:—I recently met a devoted Christian nurse, who attended upon Miss F. R. Havergal in her last illness, and was with her when she "fell asleep in Jesus." The minute details she gave me of those days were most thrilling. Some other circumstances she narrated, which I had not seen so fully in print, interested me, and none more so than the story of the origin of those incomparable lines known as the Consecration Hymn, which have since sung their way into many thousands o human hearts. As the readers of The Christian well know, they begin—

Take my life, and let it be
Consecrated, Lord, to Thee;
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise.

The nurse of whom I speak was walking with Miss Havergal one day, in the spring of 1878 (about a year before her call home), around the garden at Leamington, where she then lived. She said, "I want to tell you of the gentle way by which the Lord led one to Himself whom I have long known. He had, for years, avoided all services. But in the first year of this leading he began to come to the church, sitting just inside the lobby. The next year he sat just inside the church. The third year he began seating those who came and took a comfortable seat himself. A short time after this I went by invitation to stay with his family. As I alighted from the carriage he met me at the door and said, 'Miss Havergal, I hope you have come to be a great blessing to us.' On his saying that, I went straight to my room and asked God to give me every soul in that house, and before I left my prayer was answered. Ten in number, they all became anxious about their souls, and found peace. The night this transpired I was so overjoyed I could not sleep. As I lay awake, the lines of the hymn—

Take my life, and let it be
Consecrated, Lord, to Thee,

passed through my mind, and I put them down in pencil. The next morning I was writing to Rev. ——, the head of the Irish Society, and I enclosed these pencilled lines. He had, strange to say, just been preparing an address on Consecration, which he delivered to several hundred people. In the middle of his discourse he read these lines aloud. After the service a gentleman came to him and asked if he might have them printed. He did so; and thus within three weeks after they had passed through my mind thousands of copies were circulating in England and Ireland."

POPISH CONVERTS.—The controversy which raged in the English and American journals in Paris with respect to Lord Lyons' alleged change of faith has at length subsided. The impression which it has left on the minds of most thinking people may, perhaps, be summarised thus:—Lord Lyons was all his life long, until he left Paris in July last, a staunch Protestant; for a few weeks before his death he occasionally accompanied his relatives, with whom he was visiting in London, to the services of the Church of Rome, whether merely out of compliance with their wishes or otherwise has not been proved; he never abjured Protestantism; and he was quite unconscious when the Bishop of Southwark "received" him into the Church of Rome. The rumour of the perversion of another illustrious person in Paris, M. de Freycinet, which gained currency a few weeks ago, and was generally believed, has, I am happy to say, been contradicted on the best authority. In this case the supposed "convert" is fortunately alive and able to speak for himself; and M. de Freycinet, who was accused of abjuring Protestantism with a view to the Presidential election, writes to the editor of one of the French journals, "The rumour is a ridiculous calumny, which you can positively contradict."—Record.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Canon Wilberforce, of Southampton.

A telegram recently received from China states that the Chinese Government is amply providing for the sufferers by the terrible floods in Honan.

It would appear that the tide of unrighteousness running from West to East is increasing in strength. It is announced that the French authorities have engaged a large number of Chinese in Hong Kong, including seventy opium boilers, to carry out the preparation of opium in Tonquin. Yet we dare not utter one word of protestation against this proposed increase of the demoralising agent; at our own door a still greater guilt is lying.

Mr. F. Peek is exceptionally fitted to write in the current Contemporary on the grave question—How can we help the poor without demoralising the industrious and encouraging improvidence? His experience in one line of inquiry led him to conclude that of those he saw, not two per cent. of the really destitute were persons of good character. He maintains that since, of the present unemployed, the vast majority are thriftless and worthless, there ought to be test work to separate the industrious from the undeserving.

The present undoubted distress, be the destitute people what they may, ought not to be met by a merely transient remedy. We must be frank with ourselves as Englishmen. We have multiplied facilities to drunkenness, and temptations to corrupting associations; and are now beginning, and only beginning, to reap the fruit of our own doing. Magistrates have licensed a dozen taverns in a space of a hundred square yards. We have built places of worship with no provision for the poor, except that of social degradation. We have had services of religion which made the poor say, "Churches and chapels are not for the like of us." A terrible Nemesis is sure to come; and the question of the hour is not so much how to relieve the present distress, as how to remove the causes of our grave social evils.

The Salvation Army have taken large premises in the West India Dock-road, Limehouse, where they propose to establish a very cheap food depôt, and to furnish a sleeping shelter for the homeless. No argument is needed to prove the crying need for such a beneficent work. Mr. T. A. Denny generously offers £100 towards the £600 needed for fitting and furnishing the premises, on condition that the whole amount is subscribed at once. We hope that the present terrible distress will lead to the immediate acceptance of Mr. Denny's proposal.

It is stated that the year 1887 was a noteworthy one on account of the large number of wealthy persons who died during the twelve months, and the total amount which has been bequeathed by them is an almost incredible one. Yet comparatively little has been left to charities and religious objects, most of that which has been so bequeathed having, it is said, been left by ladies. Six persons bequeathed five and a half millions, and when the number of huge fortunes which others left is taken into account, it becomes more and more painful to read of cases of death from starvation in the midst of all this wealth.

For there are deaths from starvation in our large cities, and in myriads of cases a depth of poverty which is little more than a lingering death. In Greenwich and Deptford it has been found that there are streets, from every house in which every available article that could be sold or pawned has gone for food. In two families, it was discovered that for several days eleven persons had been subsisting upon cabbage leaves and other refuse from the dust-heaps and gutters, and families were found who had not tasted food for two days.

There must be some radical defect in our Poor Law system, when people in this depth of suffering refuse, as they do, to go to the workhouses. At Deptford "the general response was that they would rather die than go to the union," and the same answer meets charitable visitors in all parts of the country. As the Baroness Burdett Coutts has said in her recent admirable letter to The Times on the subject of the death of the old man Ansdell, who died from want of nourishment, and who, with his old wife, would not go to the workhouse, "Perhaps it is contrary to all the principles of political economy" to wish that the Poor Law regulations were a little more elastic, but matters as they stand are disgraceful to our Christianity; and if it is a question between the New Testament and Political Economy, as undoubtedly it is, there should be no room in a Christian country for hesitation in relegating the principles of political economy to the lower and inferior position.

Canon Taylor is now sailing on another tack. In a letter to The Times, written from Cairo, he apparently argues that it is a work of supererogation to preach the Gospel to Mahommedans, inasmuch as they are already three-parts Christians. He says that one, Zatif Selim Bey, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Cairo, showed "a competent acquaintance with the teaching of St. Paul and St. John," and represented himself and his fellow Moslems as receiving for inspired all the writings of the Apostles. The Bey "accepts Primitive Christianity, but he thinks that in the time of Constantine the purer teaching of the Apostolic age became overlaid with certain superstitions which Moslems are unable to receive:" further, he knows of only three conversions to Christianity at Cairo, as against many to Islamism. All this, however, adds no strength to the Canon's anti-missionary arguments and statistics, which have been sufficiently refuted and exposed by Mr. Eugene Stock and others. It may be remarked, however, that the Moslem does not allow his alleged acquaintance with and acceptance of Apostolic teaching, to interfere with his vices or habits of life.

It was a happy thought of a medical missionary in India to write a prescription for his patient upon the blank page of a tract, or Scripture portion. Thus the Gospels for soul and body were carried away by his visitors. As an instance of the inventive power of a sanctified intellect, it is worthy of note, and it may be found worthy of imitation.

The sum of £20,000, required for the foundation of a Pension Fund for Nurses and Hospital Officials, has been contributed by the munificence of four London merchants, Messrs. Gibbs, Hambro, J. S. Morgan, and Rothschild.

All who have the cause of temperance at heart, and who realise the importance of pressing forward temperance legislation, should endeavour to make it a test question in electoral contests. "England sober" is far more important than "England rich," or "England supreme."

Again we have to record an abatement in Mr. Denham Smith's symptoms and sufferings, after alarming attacks of sickness at the commencement of last week. The inflammation of the throat and mouth also has subsided, and, with the returning power to take food, the prostration has again diminished.

The missionary meeting in Exeter Hall, announced in our last issue, will be held on Monday next, January 23, not, as stated, on January 26. The occasion is a farewell meeting to a band of missionaries from Harley House, departing for various foreign fields, and not specially in connection with the China Inland Mission.

A faithful servant of Christ, who has attained his majority, and who will be easily recognised as the pastor of a large flock gathered by himself out of the wilderness, writes us as follows, in a private letter:—

> There is a style of work popular now that I can have nothing to do with. Plain Bible teaching is at a discount. There must be "something to attract." As if the Gospel needed any help in the matter. I fear the result of all the amusements and recreations the Church of God is now providing for the people. God never called the Church to cater for the world's recreation, but to bear witness against it. What with Sunday afternoon oratorios, with full band and chorus, it is no wonder if work for God is getting demoralised. I fear you will say, "There is Brown at his old grumble again." Forgive me if I weary you; but, believe me, the matter weighs on my heart. The ark of God is being put on "a new cart." Modern methods are working an evil second only to modern thought.

We are far from charging him with grumbling; we think he is largely right.

The census of the mission-halls of London, taken on the last Sunday of November, and published in The British Weekly of Jan. 6, is valuable. The evening attendance, for the whole of the Metropolis, was 127,037. The undenominational halls reached the highest number, 37,809. This was more than the combined attendance in halls provided by the Church of England, and the Congregationalists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists.

Statistics show that during Christmas week 104,097 paupers were relieved in London, showing an increase of 5486 over the number for the corresponding week of 1886, and of 10,000 over the number for that week in 1885. The vagrants relieved on the last day of the year numbered over 1000. What can be done with this huge army of necessitous and starving men, women, and children, and what shall be done to prevent the numbers increasing day by day? These may be questions for the Imperial Parliament, but they are primarily subjects for the thoughtful study and for the prayer of the Christian men and women to whom all this suffering and sorrow are appalling.

It appears from a recent announcement of the Secretary of the Anglo-Jewish Association in London that fresh persecutions of the Jews are imminent in Russia, which may lead to much disturbance and consequent flight of great numbers of them, probably to England. Apart from the wider significance which would attach to such an event, there is a side phase of it which may demand our serious attention. In the face of the poverty-stricken condition of so many of our East-end toilers, and of the difficulty of finding labour for our own unemployed, the arrival on our shores of crowds of these poor people, prepared to work at the very lowest rates, would greatly complicate an already intricate question. Would it not be well if the heads of the Jewish community here and the parochial or other authorities took counsel together on this matter, so that the event may not find them unprepared?

The Paris Figaro has an interesting and instructive article on the subject of "Alcohol and Lunacy." The writer adduces statistics to show the prodigious and alarming increase of lunacy in France of late years. Fifty years ago the proportion of lunatics confined in asylums throughout the country was 3·4 for every 10,000 of the population; it has now reached 12·65. The writer ascribes this alarming state of things to the increased consumption of alcohol. Statistics show what other evil effects are brought about by this deplorable vice. The number of suicides, which was 1739 in the years 1826 to 1830, has now risen to 6259 during a similar period. The number of accidental deaths caused by intemperance, and of convictions for violent assaults, has risen in an almost equal degree. The article very wisely suggests as a remedy, or at least a mitigation of the evil, a thorough reform in the licensing laws, and a great reduction in the number of taverns, which abound at every turn; it concludes with the impressive warning:—

> If this evil continue to grow, it will be vain to multiply hospitals, friendly societies, savings banks, or other beneficent institutions, for all the efforts of public and all the miracles of private charity, the wisest forethought of economists and statesmen, all will inevitably succumb before this fatal scourge of alcohol.

The annual clerical meeting of evangelical clergymen in Islington was held under the disadvantage of the fog which prevailed last week. Nevertheless, it is computed that there were 400 of the clergy present, and that the meeting had not been better attended for fifty years. Doctrinal subjects were mainly discussed, which was, perhaps, to be expected just now. Mr. Spurgeon's name was received with loud and prolonged cheering. We are glad to observe that Bishop Perry contended that the "Holy Catholic Church" of the Apostle's Creed meant not the visible but invisible Church; that a firm protest was uttered against the present laxity of some of the clergy in relation to worldly amusements; and an admonition was sounded against keeping back questions as to the standard of Christian living, because the speaker's life might not be fully consistent therewith.

It is stated that, in the hope of doing something "to bridge over the gulf which separates class from class in London," a sum of two hundred pounds per annum has been guaranteed for five years to support a mission for the benefit of the men employed at the Great Eastern Railway at Stratford. The movement is in charge of a committee of Oxford undergraduates, and a house has been taken at Stratford, where the Trinity College men will stay while engaged in the work. It is not unlikely that in doing good in this way the University men will get good, and, in view of the prominence which questions affecting labour are taking, it is desirable that more of those who, probably, in the future will be leaders of thought, should thus practically make themselves acquainted with the condition and needs of the working classes.

Father McGlynn seems very satisfactorily to have survived his excommunication by the Pope, which was fulminated nearly six months ago. He continues to preach in America to crowded and enthusiastic audiences. The other day he replied to the Popish "Vicar-General" of New York, who had preached the supremacy of the Pope in politics as a branch of morals. Over three thousand persons listened to Father McGlynn with rapturous approval as he denounced this doctrine. There was tumultuous applause when he asserted that the modern world would never tolerate the theory of the Pope's supremacy in American politics. It would appear that the time has gone by when the Papal anathema was feared or respected, for even Roman Catholics join in the crowds who applaud him, and their newspapers give him uncompromising support.

Members of the Bible and Prayer Union, now studying Ezekiel, will find very suggestive help in a pamphlet by Miss E. S. Elliott (a relative of the author of Horæ Apocalypticæ), entitled, "The Prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, arranged for reading in chronological order, together with Notes on the Transfer to the Christian Church of the New Covenant, and on Ezekiel's Temple Vision," with Diagram and Map. (Morgan & Scott. 6d.).

The Nottingham Daily Express reports an able and opportune sermon, preached by Rev. E. Medley, B.A., a Baptist pastor of that town, on "Papal Pretensions." Referring to the Pope's Jubilee, and to the Queen's untimely present, he quoted from the sermon preached on New Year's Day by Cardinal Manning, who put it very plainly when he said, "It is your duty to think with the Church, to feel with the Church, to believe with the Church" (meaning of course the Romish Apostasy). It would be doing good service if other Nonconformist ministers should, like this Nottingham pastor, awaken and enlighten their people as to the present advance of Papal pretension.

The Presbyterian Review (Canada) asks, with reference to the attacks of the Romanists on the Salvation Army, "When will Protestants learn that the Church of Rome only tolerates Protestantism because she has not the power to crush it? Rome has not changed since the time of the Huguenots." One of the delusions encouraged by some organs of the religious Press in England is in contradiction of this self-evident fact. The best antidote to the growing Romanism, next to the Bible, is the story of the early Christians in the Catacombs of Rome. Professor De Launay's lectures and illustrative diagrams afford invaluable information in an interesting form, of which we hope advantage will be taken. He has just been at the Y.M.C.A., Bournemouth, through the invitation of a lady who had read our reports, and invited him over from Paris. He will be in England for some weeks, and may be addressed at this office.

The British Weekly has distinguished itself by an attack upon Miss Finkelstein, which has also somewhat imperilled cordial relations between the Sunday-School Union and some representatives of the Y.M.C.A. Good sense and right feeling have, however, we trust, obviated a breach. Miss Finkelstein herself behaved unwisely in the excitement of the attack, but what is said in heat of spirit under provocation is far more excusable than unprovoked assault on insufficient grounds. We think that Miss Finkelstein and the Sunday-School Union, which has defended her throughout, have the best of the argument, and we hope that the series of lectures arranged for will be all the more successful for these unwarranted criticisms. We understand that Miss Finkelstein has taken the first step in legal proceedings against The British Weekly. We trust, however, that the editor will duly apologise, and thus save his publishers the annoyance and loss arising from an appeal to the law.

Bishop Andrews, responding to the President's opening address at Washington, U.S., at the recent meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, said that "its distinctive principle was that each denomination should be loyal to its own forms of belief and worship, and in this loyalty was the highest Christian unity." This is well said, but we should prefer to say that loyalty to Christ, as his will is revealed in his Word, is the true bond of unity. Not by deserting Christ for the sake of standing together will the Church ever reach the unity for which its Lord prayed.

Several correspondents write to us traversing the statement which recently appeared in our columns, that only one in five of the girls educated in workhouse or pauper schools turns out well. The writers quote recent official statistics which show that the percentage of "very satisfactory" cases in the Metropolitan Unions for 1887 was 46 per cent., and "fairly satisfactory" 39 per cent. The statement we published was made on the authority of Mrs. Nassau Senior's Report to the Local Government Board, as quoted by Mr. F. Peek, in his volume, "Social Wreckage." We are glad, however, to believe that the state of matters has considerably improved since Mrs. Senior's report was made; and to this, the kindly action of the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants has largely contributed.

The deputation appointed by the Council of the Baptist Union to confer with Mr. Spurgeon had an interview with him last week, at his residence in Norwood. The deputation consisted of Rev. Dr. Culross (president of the Union), Dr. Clifford (vice-president), and Dr. Booth (secretary). Mr. Spurgeon, we believe, is still unable to see his way to withdraw his resignation of membership in the Union. He suggested that the Council should adopt a simple basis of Bible truths, such as are usually described as evangelical doctrines. He declined formally to specify any member or members of the Union whom he considers heretical. The deputation were to report the result to a special meeting of the Council of the Union on Wednesday afternoon, subsequent to our going to Press. The decision of the Council will be anxiously awaited by many.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—An American living in the Turkish capital, writes to a United States journal statin there are now four Mormon missionaries proselytising there. The Mormons do better to get recruits from th disciples of Mahomet than from the members of Christian churches.

ENGLAND at the FEET of the POPE.

SIR,—The world has been recently informed by the Roman and English Press of the arrival here of the Duke of Norfolk, where he has come to prostrate himself at the feet of the Pope. We are informed of his kneeling before the Pontiff (who was standing) and in that position reading an address. Now as a Catholic, the Duke has a perfect right so to degrade himself if he pleases, and if even he desired to lick the pavement where stands the chief priest of the most mischievous superstition the world has known, just as I have seen poor people licking the floor of the church of Soreto, I for one would not do anything to hinder him. But it is declared that he comes here not as a private individual, but as the special envoy of the Queen of England, and to many it seems that in him the English nation does homage to the Pretender to the Italian throne, and the usurper of the place of Christ.

The Popolo Romano furnished its readers with a mention of another interview accorded to his Grace, in which a present from Queen Victoria was handed to his Holiness. Here is the paragraph:—"Yesterday morning the Duke of Norfolk betook himself to the Vatican with his retinue, to offer to the Pope the present of the Queen of England. The gift consists of a large chalice of gold, with paten to match, for the use of the Pope in celebrating mass. The two objects are a copy of those existing in Windsor Castle. The paten has in its centre an address to the Pontiff, and both objects are executed in high relief."

Now this is humiliating, both from a political and a religious standpoint. If it were possible to consider the public acts of Royal personages as simply the acts of private individuals, the only evil done would be that of setting a pernicious example before those persons (a very large class) who are always ready to imitate dukes, princes, and queens, even in their follies and vices. But when the Prince of Wales fraternises with prize fighters, and the Queen sends a special envoy to the Vatican to present to the Pope such a questionable gift, the nation is more or less misrepresented and outraged by these acts.

If it were necessary for the Queen to send a gift to the Pope at all, one would have thought that a less objectionable one might easily have been suggested. A Bible, a handsomely bound copy of the History of Protestantism, or a fisherman's garment, such as would have been worn by the Apostle Peter, might have been considered offensive; but, surely, it was not necessary to go to the other extreme, and openly approve and sympathise with the central point of the Roman superstition! The mass gives the priesthood all its power. It is not merely the profanation of the Lord's Supper and the destruction of all communion, though that were bad enough, but it is the degradation of man before the most grovelling of all superstitions; and if we put the cup in the priest's hand, and admit his right and power to offer the sacrifice he pretends to offer, we are bound logically to submit to his teaching, and deliver ourselves up body and soul to his government. Considering the present condition of Church and State, it would have been sufficiently humiliating to see the Duke himself—the patron, if I am rightly informed, of a couple of dozen livings in the Church of England—prostrate before the Pope. But, in addition to that, we have the edifying spectacle of not only England's Queen, but the head of the National Church which some good people continue to regard as the "bulwark of Protestantism," putting the chalice and paten into the hands of the great enemy of truth and liberty, with complimentary words!

But why send a present at all, or a special envoy? If the Pope were still a temporal Sovereign there might be some fair political reasons for doing this: but now that he is only the head of a great ecclesiastical organisation, why should Her Majesty thus offend the Protestantism of her British people, and go some way towards insulting the friendly Italian nation, by thus complimenting the Pretender? The answer is found in one word—Ireland! It is said here that this step of Her Majesty is only preliminary to the re-establishment of regular diplomatic relations with the Vatican; and the Papal Court is in high hopes of being able to make political capital out of our unfortunate relations with the Irish people. The theory that in a constitutional monarchy like our own "the king can do no wrong" is a very good one, and we have to look to Her Majesty's advisers as the real actors in these matters. What, then, are we coming to? Is all that we hold most sacred to become the mere shuttlecock of politicians? Is the Government, from fear of Home Rule, about to try to govern Ireland with the aid of the Vatican? Is it to this that the glory of old England is fallen? Many good people have objected to Home Rule for Ireland because they said it meant Rome Rule. They have said: "Mr. Gladstone is a High Churchman, and, consciously or unconsciously, is playing into the hands of the Pope. We have no right to abandon the Protestants of Ulster to such a fate."

I express no opinion on the Irish question in this letter, but hope, at least, that the people of Ulster, together with the majority of the inhabitants of the three kingdoms, will protest vigorously and practically against this unfaithfulness to principles in high places, and will confide for the stability of the Empire rather in justice, and righteousness, and true freedom, than in any alliance with a power which is hateful in proportion as it is known, which is the negative of liberty, the masterpiece of Satan, and the greatest enemy of God and man on the earth.

We missionaries in Italy, while we are carrying on God's war against forces far more formidable than those arrayed against our brethren in other lands, and comfort ourselves with the reflection that our efforts are all the more necessary on that account, have, at least, the right to demand that our own Government shall not enter the field against us, and shall not for mere political expediency throw principles away and fraternise with and encourage the enemy.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—A correspondent writes:—Probably few of your readers have seen the hostile criticism to which Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd have been subjected the last week or two in The Era, the leading theatrical organ, and The Whitehall Review. The objection to the work naturally arises from the fact that these friends conduct a Christian mission, that its aims and objects have no uncertain sound, and that its records teem with interesting cases of blessing to the theatrical employés. The editors of the journals named called at the office of Macready House, and after gaining much information, somewhat discourteously refused to furnish their names. The objects of the Society were plainly declared to them, and being told that "God would care for his work" and that "He and a man make a majority" they indignantly left the Institute and proceeded to pen articles which, while aiming at damaging the cause, will only afford it greater publicity.

LAKE TANGANYIKA, CENTRAL AFRICA.—DEAR SIR,—Please give our hearty thanks to those friends who have caused THE CHRISTIAN to be sent to us; it has now arrived here regularly for some months, except once, when our mail was stolen by highwaymen in Usagara. Your readers will be pleased to learn that after some years of anxious work the Good News mission vessel is at last running upon this lake. We made a very successful trial voyage in her recently to Ujiji and back proving her efficiency and seagoing qualities, and sail again in a few days for the south end of the Lake, hoping there to meet Revs. D. P. Jones and R. Stewart Wright, who are now coming to join our Mission.—Yours sincerely,

EDWARD C. HORE,

YOUNG MEN AT EXETER HALL.

IF the young men of West Central London do not appreciate the remarkable opportunities afforded them at the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., we cannot say much for their discernment. Besides all the benefits of a well-appointed club, it seems to combine the special advantages of a high-class college, a lecture bureau, a drill hall, an employment agency, and we know not what besides. In short, it caters for the equipment of the whole man—physical, social, mental, spiritual. In his very interesting statement at the New Year's reception meeting last week, Mr. E. J. Kennedy, the general secretary, announced a lavish programme for the next three months, including sixty-seven educational classes, lectures on Christian evidences, on eminent men of letters, on travel (by the Earl of Aberdeen and Lord Brassey), and on Eastern life. Besides, there are the attractions of the enlarged gymnasium, a series of musical evening, and, most important of all, the Gospel meetings for the proclamation of the grace of God in Christ. We gathered that a good many of the young men present at this reception were recent arrivals in the Metropolis; we sincerely trust that many of them had the good sense to enrol themselves at once in the ranks of the Association.

The hosts of the evening were Lord and Lady Kinnaird. His lordship presided, and in a hearty speech commended the work of the Association, not only for the personal benefits it confers on the members, but for the opportunities it offers of doing good to others. In a recent visit to America he had discovered that membership in the Y.M.C.A. was an instant introduction to hosts of willing and helpful friends.

Some idea of the far-spreading nature of the last week's fog may be gathered from the fact that it detained Canon Wilberforce at Southampton, and prevented his appearance on the platform at Exeter Hall. At a moment's notice Mr. J. H. Raper, the well-known temperance advocate, took the Canon's place, and filled the blank splendidly. With all the skill of the practised orator he played on the emotions of the crowd of young fellows before him as a musician moves the stops of his instrument. His pleas for total abstinence were irresistible, and equally pathetic were his appeals to his brethren to give their hearts to Christ in the heyday of their youth. A clear and convincing address on what it is to trust God for salvation followed from Rev. A. G. Brown, and everyone must have felt that Exeter Hall had made a good start for another year.

WORKING WOMEN.—A new crèche, originated by a few of the residents of Kilburn and Hampstead, and situate at 36, Hemstall-road, West Hampstead, was opened last week by Lady Holland. Her ladyship referred to the low rate of wages which were paid to working women at the present time, and said such an institution as that must be an incalculable blessing to them, and a source of happiness to the kind people who had planned it.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a mission in Stirling, conducted by Mr. George Clarke, to Jan. 30.——For a mission at Worrell Hill, Forest of Dean, conducted by Mr. Opie Rodway.——For a three weeks' mission at Polruan, Fowey, Cornwall, conducted by Mr. F. S. Ball.——For evangelistic meetings at Collooney and various towns in County Sligo during January and February, by Mr. T. R. Galbraith.——For blessing on an eight days' mission in connection with the Ryde Young Women's Christian Association, by Miss Naish, of Weston-super-Mare, from Jan. 25 to 31.——For services by Mr. John Elliott, at Llantrissant, South Wales.——For five days' mission services at Yarnbrook, Wilts, conducted by Rev. T. A. Judd, to commence Jan. 23.——For mission services at Cross-street Presbyterian Church, Burton-on-Trent, by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, to Jan. 29.——For a mission in the Parish Church of Chirk, North Wales, by Rev. Walter Bradbury.

GLASGOW "MISSION SHELTER."

(Formerly "Prison Gate Mission.")

New Year's Day was a bright and happy spot in the lives of our women, the whole day being set apart for rest and enjoyment. A sumptuous dinner was provided by ladies, and the inmates of the Home were presented with various gifts. In the evening, after tea, a meeting was held and addressed by several members of the Mizpah Band, who gave their personal experiences in a most interesting and touching manner. Many of the younger women were quite broken down, and the workers had personal conversation with a large number.

A free breakfast has been opened this winter, in a room opposite the prison, for discharged female prisoners. Ladies go to meet them at 8 a.m. It is the saddest sight imaginable to see twenty to sixty wretched-looking women and girls liberated every morning—a few decently dressed, but most in rags or faded finery. An average of ten accept the invitation to breakfast, and out of these one or more of the most likely are taken to Homes. Our Mission Shelter has received so many as to tax to the utmost our resources both for beds and bedding. Some of the cases thus gathered in promise to be real rescues. Some twelve women have gone to situations during the past three months. Agnes A. Bryson.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

At Cheltenham the meetings held during the week of prayer were concluded by a very impressive united communion service at Salem Baptist Chapel, conducted by Rev. H. Wilkins. Several hundreds of friends from various churches, including the Church of England, met together to show forth their oneness in Christ. Ministers of nearly all sections of evangelical Nonconformity in the town took part in the service.

Long Clawson, Leicestershire. — In this village the Church of Christ is represented by the Church of England, Wesleyans, Primitives, and Baptists. The week of prayer brought us all together as in two former years. The meetings were held in each place of worship in succession. Several have testified since as to blessing received, and expressed a wish that such meetings could continue. God has greatly blessed me in this place, both in my own soul, and to the souls of many others, and I cannot but think these united prayer-meetings have in some measure led to it. The population is 750; at several of the meetings there must have been nearly 200 present.

Frederick Hart, Vicar.

Clacton-on-Sea.—This year the week of prayer was observed here for the first time. The meetings were well attended; a delightful spirit of unity prevailed. The Vicar opened, and the resident Wesleyan minister closed the services. Much earnest prayer was offered, and it was felt to be a time of real refreshing. M.

San Remo, Italy.—In a place like this, where strangers come for health from many lands, the week of prayer is especially welcome, as it brings Christians together, and causes them to know each other. Meetings were held each day, and, although the attendances were small, they steadily increased day by day. The English chaplain and ex-chaplain, Rev. N. Dimock and Rev. G. L. Fenton; the Scotch clergyman, Rev. Alexander Robertson, and others, took part in the proceedings. A feature of Friday's meeting was an address by Miss Philip, of the London Missionary Society, who has returned from China on sick leave. On Saturday an account was given by Mr. Edward Clark of the work of the Spezia Mission.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—The Committee are inviting about 250 representatives of the chief Young Men's Christian Associations in the Metropolis to a meeting in the Bible House, at 7 p.m., on Wednesday, February 8, to hear matters of interest connected with the Society's foreign work. On the application of Mr. Walter Besant, a grant of large-type Bibles has been made for use in the library of the People's Palace for East London. It comprises copies in English, Welsh, Dutch, French, German, Modern Greek, Hebrew, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Portuguese, Russ, Spanish, and Swedish.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

Our readers will be interested in the following figures and facts, which Dr. Barnardo has just supplied us with. He has now actually in the Homes 2336 orphan and otherwise destitute children, the largest number that has ever been under his care. During the twelve months which closed with December 31, there were admitted to the Homes no less than 1722 fresh cases. These came from almost every town, country, and district in the United Kingdom, while numbers of the boys and girls represented far away countries. Dr. Barnardo is now actively undertaking the care of cripple children, and of children blind from their birth. Every night six or eight destitute little ones go to sleep in the Homes who had not been there in the morning. The first party of stalwart young emigrants from the Labour House for Dr. Barnardo's new settlement in Manitoba is preparing to leave (D.V.) about the middle of March, and he hopes to place out in selected situations during the present year about 650 boys and girls who have passed through the severe tests applied in the Homes. During the past twelve months nearly 1200 boys and girls passed out of the Homes on their life's journey. Of these 414 were placed in situations in the colonies.

In the face of these facts we regret to learn that the work is at the present time hindered from lack of funds.

FACTORY GIRLS IN THE WEST.

The Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson-grove, which is the outcome of Miss Meredith Brown's mission to the West-end factory girls, was inaugurated on Saturday afternoon by a crowded meeting of friends and supporters, presided over by Mr. G. L. Dashwood.

After devotional exercises a deeply interesting statement was read by Miss Brown relating to the work, past, present, and future; the main portions of this statement we hope to give next week.

After some sympathetic words from Revs. Armstrong Hall and E. W. Moore, the chairman supported Miss Brown's appeal for helpers. There are thousands of people calling themselves Christians, he said, who do nothing for God. Let all who can come forward and become co-workers with Miss Brown for the elevation and salvation of these sadly neglected young sisters. Lord Radstock said it was estimated that there are 150,000 factory girls in the West-end of London. What need, therefore, there is for such work as that of Miss Brown. While there is great reason to thank God for what is now being done, he regarded it only as a starting-point of what he trusted would be a gigantic campaign against the wickedness and misery all around.

In the regretted and unavoidable absence of Lady Edith Ashley, Dowager Lady Dynevor declared the Institute open, remarking: "I trust it will always be used for the glory of God." Then Miss Brown's father—the venerable Principal of the Free Church College, Aberdeen — who travelled all the way from the Granite City for the express purpose of taking part in the proceedings, spoke a few sentences. He blessed God for the Institute. In Scotland, he said, they heard a great deal about the dreadful condition of London, but he did not hesitate to say that there is no city in the world to be compared with London as regards Christian and philanthropic effort.

In the evening about two hundred girls were entertained to tea in the Institute. It could be seen at a glance that on the part of some of the lasses special care had been exercised to appear neat and respectable, but many of them were miserably clad. All, however, were in the happiest mood, and enjoyed the excellent meal provided. The neat and brilliant appearance of the Institute was the subject of such appreciative comments as—"Ain't it pretty?" "Just imagine this for us." They listened with more than usual attention to the brief addresses delivered during the evening by various friends, Miss Brown especially riveting their attention by her recital of the history of the Institute. Very encouraging gatherings were also held on Sunday.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. W. Haslam has been giving daily Bible readings at Cannes, and commenced special Gospel services there on January 15.

Rev. E. P. Hammond, after leaving Denver, conducted Gospel services for a week in Albuquerque, New Mexico, whence he proceeded to San Diego, Cal. At both places a great blessing rested on the earnest labours of the evangelist.

Rev. Robert Balgarnie conducted a very successful mission last week at Eccleston-square Church, Belgrave-road. The mission lasted six days, and a considerable number of persons professed to have given their hearts to Christ.

Mr. Thomas Cauker (of Carlisle) has, during the past two months, conducted evangelistic services at various villages in Kent, and has met with encouraging results, especially at Marden, where eight days' services were held. A praise and testimony meeting was to be held on Wednesday evening after which Mr. Cauker goes to labour in Scotland.

Mr. George C. Needham had a happy experience in Philadelphia on New Year's Day. He preached three times in the commodious Beacon Presbyterian Church on that day. Not far from one hundred inquirers entered the inquiry-room, a large number of whom professed conversion. Mr. Needham has been holding Gospel services in Baltimore, Alexandria, Va., and Philadelphia. In the latter city he has appointments for several weeks. Mrs. Needham is holding Bible-reading services.

Atworth, Wilts.—This village has again been visited by Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, who has conducted a fortnight's mission. Some of the worst characters have attended every night. Some have professed faith in the Saviour, while many more seem to be "not far from the kingdom." Many who were saved during previous missions, conducted by preachers from the same Society, are standing firm, and some are preaching the Gospel themselves in the surrounding villages.

Dr. L. Munhall closed his mission in Cleveland, Ohio, on Sunday, Dec. 18. His farewell words, as reported in the local Leader, were marked by much pathos and power, and the immense audience were deeply impressed. The evangelist made a specially urgent plea for work among young men, of whom, he said, there are 40,000 in the city, only 2000 of whom are professed Christians. Dr. Munhall, accompanied by Professor and Mrs. Towner, will next labour in the Gospel at Balti more, and then at Buffalo.

Beckenham.—A ten days' mission, conducted by Mr. Spencer Walton for the Y.M.C.A., was concluded with a missionary conference on Thursday, January 12. The special feature of this mission has been the strengthening and building up of Christians, although there have also been many conversions, several associates of the Y.M.C.A. having come out on the Lord's side. On Friday, January 13 a bright and helpful meeting on behalf of the Railway Mission was held, at which addresses were given by Lady Sebright, Mr. Eliot Walton, and some of the railway-men. E. F. L.

Peterhead, N.B.—We have had a season of refreshing here in connection with Gospel services, conducted by Mr. J. W. Moodie, Mr. D. Carnegie, evangelist, Aberdeen, and Mr. John Thomson, Cockenzie. The word was preached with power; sinners were awakened and saved, and believers edified. At our annual New Year's Conference testimony was given by many as to blessing received. Rev. T. H. Tibbles and Mrs. Tibbles ("Bright Eyes") were with us for a few days, pleading the cause of the Red Indians, and telling of Christian work amongst these tribes of North America. W. S.

CHINA.—A telegram from Shanghai, dated Tuesday, January 10, says that news has been received there of a fanatical outbreak in the province of Fuh-Kien, in which some twenty Christian churches have been demolished, and some others burnt. A considerable number of native Christians have been massacred.

The Book World.

An Old Friend.

Stepping Heavenward. By Mrs. Prentiss. This book has done good service in days gone by, and has stimulated many a young woman to usefulness and piety. A very handsome illustrated edition in large type has just been brought out by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, price 5s., which will make a tasteful gift-book of sterling value.

A Preacher's Treasure.

One Thousand New Illustrations. By Rev. H. O. Mackey. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. One of the most effective means of gaining the popular ear in preaching is the use of illustrations, which serve as pegs on which to hang many an important lesson. Great difficulty is experienced in getting good incidents for this purpose, and we venture to say that this book, carefully compiled, and full of well-selected matter, will meet with a cordial reception for use in "pulpit, platform, and class."

A Pioneer Worker.

Memoir of Henry Townsend, forty years C.M.S. missionary in West Africa. By Mr. G. Townsend, of Exeter. Marshall Bros. An admirable account of the Yoruba Mission and its devoted founder. When Mr. Townsend began his labours the African Slave Trade was unassailed. Dahomey was a scourge to all surrounding races, and Crowther a slave in body and soul; the Niger a stronghold of heathenism. What God hath since wrought by missionaries and travellers in the Dark Continent is miraculous. But Yoruba is the Christian "Torres Vedras," and Townsend a missionary Wellington. As Mr. Eugene Stock says in his friendly preface, the only fault of the book is its brevity.

Mrs. Shipton's New Book.

"The Lord Was There." Incidents from my Journal. By Anna Shipton. 2s., 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. A delightful fragrance as of tried faith, an odour of deep, rich sanctity, pervades these pages. Experience, begotten of abiding communion with the living Jehovah; complete immolation of self in the wondrous love and will of God; and bright, beautiful records of service by the way, stimulate the reader's heart, and fill him with the desire to be used of God as He uses the writer of this little mosaic. The rich juice of the fruit of the true Vine is here—it is a book for Christians to read, to digest, and, above all, to be influenced by; it strikes the true key-note for all Christian service, the consecration of self before any work for God can be commenced, and then the utter dependence of the soul upon Him for the Word, the teaching, the service by the way and "in the way." This record of "Christ in me," by the power of his indwelling Spirit, will open to many the gates of the blessed life of unbroken communion with Jehovah Shammah.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Evans' Temperance Annual for 1888 (6d. 337, Strand, W.C.) contains a capital repertory of temperance readings, recitations, poems, tales, and wise saws. Just the thing for Bands of Hope.

A Dictionary of Cookery is now being issued in sixpenny monthly parts by Messrs. Cassell & Co. It is well arranged, the recipes not being extravagantly expensive, with abundant illustrations, and will claim a high place amongst such works.

Dot Your Prayers. By Emily P. Leakey. 6d. Shaw & Co. Under this strange title the author strongly urges definiteness in prayer, taking her thought from the distinctness which a "dotted i" and a "crossed t" give to a word, and the ambiguity and indistinctness which is caused by the absence of these trifling marks. It is a bright and thoughtful little treatise, containing also striking examples of definite answers to definite petitions.

☞ In our recent notice of Dr. Robinson's book on "The Pharaohs and the Bondage," published by Mr. Fisher Unwin, the price (which is 5s.) was erroneously stated as 1s.

Daily Truth. By H. Bickersteth Cook. Suttaby & Co. Two neat little text-books for morning and evening use. The print is clear, the size portable, the arrangement of verses intelligent and spiritual.

The National Temperance League's Annual contains an appreciative biographical sketch, with portrait, of the late Mr. James Barlow, of Bolton, by Rev. Charles Garrett, with a budget of other useful information invaluable to workers in the temperance cause. (1s. 6d. 337, Strand, W.C.)

The Private Note-book Opened. By F. M. Macrae. S. W. Partridge & Co. Notwithstanding the strange title, there are many very worthy pieces in this little volume of poems.

Waymarks for Pilgrims, Young and Old. By Rev. Jas. Inglis. 1s. Gall & Inglis. Gracious truths presented in unpretentious guise. Here are suggestions enough for a hundred sermons.

Courtship: for all who intend to get married, by Rev. Chas. Bullock (3d. "Home Words" Office), has some well-chosen words, addressed to a very large class. But we question if these books are really read by the interested parties at the right time.

"I've Got my Receipt." A true story. By E. S. Elliott. 2d. S. W. Partridge & Co. True to the life, full of tender pity, and brimming over with God's truth, this beautiful little book ought to go the round of mothers' meetings and Dorcas readings.

Christmas Cards, Scraps, Prints. — Mrs. Ross, Regent-square, Doncaster, heartily thanks all kind friends for the beautiful cards sent her last year, for poor children's scrap-books, and will thankfully receive more. The donors little know the pleasure they bestow.

Wood Cottage and The True Story of a Hymn are the later issues of the excellent series of "Interesting Life Stories for Old and Young," being issued by Mr. A. Holness, 14, Paternoster-row. In each of these we have for a penny a complete narrative written in a style which cannot fail to engage the attention of the reader, and in which the Gospel is clearly stated. Tract distributors and district visitors should take note of these.

The Life of Christ. By Professor Salmond, Aberdeen. 6d. T. & T. Clark. It is only fitting that a series of Bible Primers should commence with that Life of which the Bible is the case and commentary. A clear map is prefixed. The divisions and sections are clear. Information and comment are judiciously intermixed, and the "points for further inquiry" at close of each chapter are very suggestive. Cloth copies at 9d., are wonderfully cheap.

The Pastor's Diary and Clerical Record for 1888. Prepared by Dr. Louis H. Jordan, Pastor of Erskine Church, Montreal. 2s. J. Gemmell, Edinburgh. A neat little book, with some specialties of no small value. On the first pages are the International Sunday-school Lessons. At the close a few well-chosen texts for visitation of the sick. There is also a list of books useful to ministers. The Congregational Directory is on a plan that seems to have given great satisfaction. A pocket and an elastic band might be advantageously added.

More January Magazines.

The Christian Treasury. 6d. Marshall Bros. We commend this old friend to the notice of our readers. There is plenty of Gospel truth in every number.

The Quiver (6d. Cassell & Co.) supplies an abundance of bright, healthy, and interesting reading, and keeps its place as a high-class family magazine. The new serial story promises exceedingly well.

The Contemporary Pulpit (6d. Swan Sonnenschein) reports at length a service at Dr. Allon's Union Chapel, Islington. It has also a very interesting sermon to children, by Rev. James Vaughan, of Brighton.

The Housewife (6d. 20, St. Bride-street, E.C.) purports to be "a practical magazine concerning everything in and about the home," and it answers admirably to that description. Young housewives will find it most helpful.

The Christian Worker (1d. Partridge), published last year as a weekly, has returned to its original form of a monthly, and well represents the work of the Boys' and Girls' Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester, besides giving some excellent general literature.

The Expositor (1s. Hodder & Stoughton) contains a first-class etching of Professor A. B. Davidson, with a sketch of his character and work, by Professor Elmslie, written with all his accustomed skill. Professor Godet's paper on "The Pastoral Epistles" is admirable.

All the World (2d. Salvation Army, 101, Queen Victoria-street) contains a likeness of Mrs. Bramwell Booth, with a bright "literary portrait," which will be warmly welcomed by many. We are delighted, too, with Eileen Douglas's second paper on "Outer Circles of the Salvation Army."

In his personal "Retrospect" Mr. Hudson Taylor reaches a very important epoch in the current number of China's Millions (1d. Morgan & Scott)—the founding and launching of the Inland Mission. It is a record that ought to strengthen the faith and fire the zeal of every Christian worker.

Rest and Reaping (1d. Morgan & Scott) is conducted by Miss Mason, in connection with the Houses of Rest, but she widens its scope so as to embrace questions of widespread importance. In the number before us Mr. Pearce Clark expounds Mark ii. 18—22, and the story of the House of Rest is continued.

The Homilist (6d. Houlston & Sons). Many of our hard-working lay preachers and Bible-class teachers will find this monthly of great service in suggesting fresh thoughts and subjects of discourse. In this number the Editor, Dr. David Thomas, writes on "My Ideal Independent Church." It is certainly a timely subject, and is treated with great ability.

The Sunday Magazine and Good Words (6d. Isbister & Co.) each make a good start for another year. Dr. George Macdonald's new story in the former promises to furnish some helpful unfoldings of character, and Edward Garrett's "friendly talks" to husband and wife ought to have a large audience. So, indeed, should the delightful paper "On Children," by the Bishop of Rochester in Good Words; it seems to us full of sanctified sense. The same magazine has a curiously interesting study in natural history, by Professor Drummond.

Woman's Work (4d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) is a record of most valuable but unpretending work. There is also much in it to instruct and encourage.

Footsteps of Truth (3d. Shaw & Co.) has an excellent budget of teaching matter, and is well fitted to establish in the faith the earnest student.

Night and Day (4d. John F. Shaw & Co.) is as bright and telling as ever. The number contains a really thrilling little story entitled, "Saved from a Crime."

Illustrations (3d. Kent & Co.) in its new and enlarged form is a singularly attractive serial. The present issue has some fine specimens of Margaret Thomas's artistic skill.

The Free Church of Scotland Monthly (1d. Nelson & Sons) stimulates the zeal of the members of that body by its full record of Christian work at home and abroad, and by edifying articles, sketches, &c.

Our Darlings (3d. Shaw & Co.), in addition to its profusion of pictures and other standing attractions, has a story by Miss Holt, and a series of brief sketches of birds and beasts by Rev. J. G. Wood.

Mr. Spurgeon's reminiscences of "The Old Manse at Stambourne," in The Sword and the Trowel, are not only marked by a strongly personal interest, but are turned to account in connection with the "Down-Grade" controversy.

Regions Beyond (Partridge & Co.) is excellent in its new form as a threepenny monthly. Mr. Meyer's magazine, "Worship and Work," is now incorporated with it, and there are several contributions from his facile and stimulating pen. We hope it will gain hosts of fresh readers, so that the circle of its influence on behalf of world-wide missions may be greatly increased.

"PAGAN EDINBURGH."

I noticed in your issue of January 6 an extract from an article in The Christian Leader with the above heading. That article must have been written by a person not well acquainted with Edinburgh, or he would have known that the Drill Hall, where the prize-fighting exhibition took place, is not used for religious services, and that Professor Drummond preaches in another hall, though in the same street. So far from any widespread public interest being manifested in the man or his doings in Edinburgh, the whole thing fell flat. There were but few at the first performance, and a mere sprinkling at the second. One who had very good means of judging, stated to my informant that "a hundred pounds must have been dropped over that job."

I have good authority for stating that among the students at our University the prevailing feeling about the pugilist mentioned is either disapprobation or disgust. A very strong feeling of disapproval was manifested at the large Gospel temperance meeting in Carrubbers-close Mission when the subject was alluded to. We have sins enough of our own, but the ring is certainly not one of them.

Edinburgh. T. R. Marshall.

IRISH COASTGUARDS.—Will any earnest servants of God join with others in seeking to spread his kingdom among the coastguards of Ireland by corresponding with them at regular intervals, and supplying them with small packets of Gospel papers monthly? Many of these men are stationed in the most remote parts of the country, far distant from any place of worship. Friends desiring to help will kindly communicate (stating the number they can take) with Mr. William A. Garratt, Glenwar, Blackrock, co. Dublin.

THE BLACK HAND IN INDIA.

By ALFRED S. DYER.

The extraordinary character of the facts connected with the licensing of sin by the British Government in India has frequently been the cause of incredulity in regard to them among good people at home. Christian men and women have been loath to believe that such things could be done under British rule. Unprincipled persons, interested in the continued concealment from the British public of the hidden deeds of darkness in India, taking advantage of that not unnatural incredulity, have denied the public statement of facts in the most emphatic terms, assuming in some instances superior knowledge on account of an alleged previous residence in India.

I was present at a public meeting at Exeter Hall, London, some time since, and heard Rev. Hugh Price Hughes thus emphatically contradicted when he stated that licensed harlots in India were moved from place to place with British regiments on the march, under the sanction and direction of the authorities. The partisans of falsehood have had their time. By careful personal investigation and inquiry amid the scenes of the official enormities in question, I have collected evidence that is incontrovertible. In some cases I have seen the things which I shall describe. In others, my information has been gained from Christian missionaries and ministers, chaplains to the forces, Christian laymen who have held or now hold important public positions, Christian soldiers (officers and privates), influential and well-informed members of the native community, and others. To every fact I can add a name or names.

Yesterday I visited the barracks and camp at Lucknow. Temporarily encamped there under canvas was the 4th Rifle Brigade. A few days since it came from Chakrata. A few days hence it will proceed on its march to Dinapore. Adjoining the encampment of the 4th Rifle Brigade were thirteen tents, occupied by licensed prostitutes, who, by the direction of the commanding officer, had come with the brigade. One tent was occupied by the chukladarin, or overseer. My companion, Mr. E. Morgan, an influential Lucknow resident, entered with me into conversation with this woman. She was entreated to leave her sinful occupation, and was offered a home until she could earn a respectable livelihood. She declined. She talked with boldness of the lucrative commission which she received on all the hellish trade done by her subordinates, flourishing before our eyes as she spoke the jewellery and ornaments with which she was covered.

A short distance from these tents we visited the quarters of the licensees permanently attached to the barracks at Lucknow. The residences of these women were built specially for their occupation by the British authorities, out of public (Cantonment) funds. There are seventy-two substantial-looking dwellings (quite a contrast by their superior appearance to the ordinary houses of working-class natives), thirty-six on each side of the street. On entering the street we were, of course, immediately accosted by several of the women, each of whom held a Government licence to sin. My companion asked a young woman pitted with small-pox to show us her certificate. She produced an imposing-looking case resembling a portfolio, about foolscap size, on the inside of which, numbered twenty-three, was pasted her authority to violate the law of God. I was reminded of a conversation which I had a week previously with a native Christian preacher at Cawnpore. I had asked him what he thought of the establishing of this system of licensed impurity in the midst of the heathen millions of India. He said, our Queen-Empress Victoria is called "Defender of the Faith," and he thought it very inconsistent and strange and sad that such awful wickedness should be perpetrated in her name.

That is the feeling with which we walked away from the Government bazaar of licensed harlots at Lucknow. That the scenes I witnessed at Lucknow were not exceptional will be illustrated by the following facts. The commanding officer of a regiment—on the eve of being moved from a town and military station, about five hundred miles from Bombay, requisitioned some licensed prostitutes to accompany his regiment. In this regiment there was a considerable number of Christian men. Some of them went to the Chaplain and bitterly complained of, and protested against, the proposed action. The Chaplain went with their protests to the commanding officer, and asked him how he found it possible to reconcile his profession of a Christian, and his work as a lay preacher, with his course in ordering licensed harlots to accompany his regiment on the march. The officer excused himself by saying that he was obliged to do so. The clergyman who gave me this information from his personal knowledge of the incident did not say whether the Chaplain referred this man with an accommodating conscience—this betrayer of his Lord—to the answer of the Apostle Peter to the authorities on a notable occasion: "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts v. 29).

At one corner of the encampment of the licensed women attached to the Fourth Rifle Brigade at Lucknow, I noticed a flag flying. At every halting-place of a regiment on the march a similar flag is run up, to mark the quarters of the camp followers. A prominent member of a Baptist Church in one of the capital cities of India informed me that he had repeatedly seen such a flag planted right in the centre of the tents of the prostitutes, so that the soldiers might know where to resort to. He has also had personal knowledge of conveyances for these women on march having been provided, out of the profits of the regimental canteen—a co-partnership not much to be surprised at. Commanding officers are presidents of regimental canteens.

At Allahabad, during the recurring outbreaks of cholera, the troops are removed to some distance to what is known as the Cholera Camp. But at such solemn seasons, when the dread and silent messenger of death, with awful suddenness, is smiting on the right hand and on the left, the authorities are not turned aside from providing for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof. Licensed prostitutes accompany the soldiers even to the Cholera Camp. Nor are distance and expense considered as any bar in the carrying out of the horrible system. An officer, holding our Queen's commission at Kohat, on the borders of Afghanistan, ordered a supply of native women, certificated to sin, from one of the Plain stations of India, about 700 miles distant, specifying in the order that they were not to be more than twenty-two years of age, and were to be good looking.

The British officials engaged in working this machinery of hell appear to act with an utter absence of shame. We see here exemplified the truth of the Lord's words, "If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." In the recently issued annual report (for 1886) of the operation of this system in the North-West Provinces and Oudh, printed at the Government Press at Allahabad, it is stated in regard to Bareilly:—

> It is proposed to endeavour to induce a greater number of prostitutes to reside in cantonments, by making their residence there more attractive. To effect this, they would be permitted to live in their own houses, or in houses provided for them in whatever part of the bazaars they chose. Assistance would be given them from the cantonment funds, which are in a flourishing condition, to enable the women to furnish their houses, so as to make them convenient, both for themselves and their visitors.

Referring to the harlots licensed by British authority at Lucknow, the report states, "this number the medical officer considers to be too small." The medical officer at Fyzabad, in order to make licensed prostitution more attractive to the soldiers, suggests that the present establishment of these women should be replaced "by others who are younger and better looking." I might continue with similar quotations; but those already given are sufficient to condemn this hateful thing of darkness at the bar of the Christian public of Great Britain out of the mouth of its administrators, and to illustrate the awful blindness, shamelessness and depravity which overtakes men who make it the business of life to trample under foot the law of God.

At Deolali, where English soldier lads are taken direct on their arrival in India, my heart was deeply stirred as I stood on the border of the large camp, and beheld, planted within a stone's throw of the school of the Church Missionary Society, the official quarters of the licensed prostitutes. At the former the native children are taught the obligation of the Ten Commandments. At the latter they and their parents learn with what unblushing and blasphemous effrontery a so-called Christian Government violates the seventh.

At Jubbulpore, the building where the Government women ("Queen's ladies" they are commonly called in India) are examined, to ascertain their fitness for the market of lust, is situated in close proximity to a heathen shrine. A few yards away I visited a Wesleyan native school. As I gazed upon the bright-looking little children, so like in appearance to some I had left at home, except in the colour of their skin, how could I help feeling the burden of the conditions with which they are surrounded? They are growing up not merely in an atmosphere charged with the abominations of heathenism, but charged also with the added and atrocious abomination which has been forced upon India by the Government of the people who chiefly send and support the missionaries.

Here is a paradox indeed. How are the impurities of heathenism to be sternly rebuked by a preacher whose own Government has sunk to a deeper depth? The difficulties of the devoted men and women whom the churches of Great Britain and America send to India are sufficiently great without being added to in this manner. When standing up in the streets or bazaars to speak, it is not an uncommon thing for a missionary to be told by some of his audience to go and preach to his own countrymen.

There is no question as to the corrupting effect of licensed iniquity upon the troops. The authority which provides chaplains being the same which provides certificated harlots, the feeling is induced that this sin is excusable. The testimony I have received from soldiers furnishes abundant evidence on that point. Here is a sample. A private, who since his conversion two years ago has won the esteem and love of some of the most consecrated Christians in the town where his regiment is stationed, furnishes me with facts to prove that the infection of this sinful governmental inconsistency has spread even to many men who profess the name of Christ. He particularised "Christian" soldiers whom, on their return from church, he has seen resort to that house which God's Book describes as "the way to hell." One had been a professing Christian for twelve years. When he rebuked them, they defended their action declaring that it was permissible, and that no man could lead a pure life. They had learnt too well the lesson of their superiors in rank.

One of the most eminent missionaries of the American Methodist Episcopal Church in India, Dr. Thomas Stewart Johnson, who at Shahjehanpore was brought much into contact with soldiers, adds his testimony to another aspect of the lamentable influence of licensed vice upon them. For some time, he says, he was at a loss to understand why so many promising converts among these men fell away. Eventually his observation and intercourse with the troops convinced him that the result he so much deplored was largely due to the temptations of licensed sin. Christians at home cannot view with indifference either aspect of the result of the Government temptation to lust among the soldiers who are drawn from British homes, although the man who falls and acknowledges his sin is incomparably a more hopeful case than the Pharisee who pursues his unlawful desires under the garb of godliness.

If men, brought up in British homes, are led by the action of Government to regard the practice of impurity as consistent with the Christian profession, how much easier is it for those who have had fewer privileges to be led by the same action to fall into this awful delusion. Alas! there are many natives who regard the lusts of the flesh as sanctioned by the Gospel of Christ. I will give one case only. A native woman came to a missionary and wished to be baptized. In answer to his questions she said she fully believed on the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour. Her profession seemed so sincere, and her desire to be baptized so great, that he felt he could not refuse to comply with her request. A few days after the ceremony he discovered that she was a licensed prostitute. Her idea in desiring to become a Christian was that it would be advantageous to her in some ways while pursuing her unholy career. Who shall say that she was not as good a Christian in the sight of the discerner of the secrets of the hearts, as any of the authorities who had licensed her to sin, for God is no respecter of persons.

There are educated natives, of course, who are better qualified to make distinctions, but these detest the system of lisecensed vice, and are not pre-disposed towards Christianity by it. A native barrister in one town made celebrated by the events of the great Mutiny of 1857, who has rejected heathenism, but has not accepted Christ as the Divine Saviour, spoke to me in terms of strong indignation of the criminality of the British Government in encouraging and tempting its subjects to licentiousness by the system of licensed sin.

Thus, whether we regard the eternal interest of the native population, or of the British soldiers who are stationed in India, licensed impurity stands forth as a tremendous barrier to missionary success. Moreover, it corrupts the general administration of public affairs. Men cannot be constantly engaged in violating the Divine law, and in treating women as the mere instruments of lust, disregarding the high capacities of womanhood, without having their whole being depraved. Thus numberless wrongs and cruelties are callously perpetrated, of which the natives are the victims. In some places in India, at least, British government is carried on over a volcano. The natives may or may not again mutiny. But if the churches of Great Britain are true to their allegiance to Him who executeth "righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed," they will mutiny against the monstrous iniquity of licensed sin, and the evils which follow in its train.

NOTES FROM NOTTINGHAM.

THE monthly sermon at the Tabernacle to young men, by the Pastor, was preached on Sunday week. The immense building was crowded with a congregation mostly men. The subject of "Betting" was referred to, and the preacher suggested that a petition be signed and sent to those high in the realm, asking that they withdraw their patronage from the turf with its demoralising influence of betting—a protest that roused the audible assent of the crowded house.

The railway-men celebrated their first anniversary in their new room in Queen's-walk last week. Rev. H. E. Stone preached in the afternoon, when the place was crowded to excess. The railway-men are doing a splendid temperance and Gospel work here, and the companies would be wise in building them a large hall. All grades of railway-men were present at the meeting, from porters to superintendents.

About 400 men and friends assembled in the Albert Hall, on the afternoon of Sunday week, prizes for regular attendance being given by Alderman Gripper, J.P. This is in connection with the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoons," which partake of a kind of free and easy service of testimony, sacred music, &c.

JAPAN.—A glorious revival, says The Methodist Advocate, of Yokohama, is in progress in Tokio and Yokohama. Street preaching is carried on with grand success. Nearly all the students in the Tokio Ei Wa Gakko have either accepted Christ or are seeking Him.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

IN gratefully acknowledging the help received from some of our readers, Mr. Fenn writes:—

The past year was a year of blessing. Notwithstanding all the opposition of priests and friars, our meetings were well attended, our five schools were fuller than ever, and all the year we found a wide door and effectual opened for us by the Lord. Several souls were added to us from time to time, who had given proof of their conversion to God, and thus we have been cheered and strengthened in our efforts to bring sinners to Christ. During the year some of the Christians have carried on a little work in a village about twenty-five miles off involving no small labour and expense, but they have been abundantly repaid in the conversion of several precious souls. In this place and some others near, the people press to hear the word of God.

With such opportunities we long for more helpers. Who will come to the help of the Lord; to the help of the Lord against the mighty? In one district of Chamberi alone a dozen true-hearted servants of Christ might find as much work as they could do, and could do it with almost as much liberty as at home. —Yours ever in the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, ALBERT R. FENN.

DUTCH MISSION IN SUMATRA.

AT the annual meeting of the Rhenish Missionary Society, Count von Limburg-Stirum, a Dutch gentleman, gave an interesting report of a visit he had paid to the stations of the Society in the island of Sumatra. He had been travelling for four years in the Dutch East Indies, and at first allowed himself to be prejudiced against missionary work by what Europeans living there had told him concerning it; but, having met with a missionary, he went to see some of the stations, and at once his views were entirely altered. He says the results of the mission to the Battas are so striking that the worst enemy of missions must be compelled to rejoice in them.

The last report of the Society shows that a remarkable work is in progress in the island. Some of the chiefs recently chosen are Christians, and use their influence in favour of the Gospel. At some of the stations, too, the elders of the churches are doing their utmost to bring the people to the knowledge of the truth, and hundreds of persons are coming forward to be baptized. The people are so eager to hear the word that preaching has to be conducted in eight different places every Sunday, and it is expected that six new sub-stations will thus be formed.

PERSECUTED SALVATIONISTS.

THE Salvation Army is being badly treated on the borders of Lake Zürich, to read the story sends one back to something like the time of the Huguenots. No meetings had been held in the village of Stafa for a fortnight; a band of young men determined to allow no one to enter the hall. They patrolled round the building every day till late at night, so that the "officers" could not go out, nor the converts come in. They even forced the door of the private room, insulting and abusing the occupants, the police doing nothing to prevent this.

It was then decided to try what female "officers" could do. These were kindly received in a house at the other end of the village, so leaving the hall empty. At five o'clock on the Sunday morning, in the clear starlight, the newly-converted came creeping softly and furtively from all sides, and in this house, with carefully closed shutters, so that no light might appear outside, they had a good hour of prayer, praise, and renewed consecration. With hearts so joyous it was difficult to sing in a sufficiently subdued tone of voice—before daylight they parted very happy, strengthened, and sure of victory. The greater number of the converted are factory women and girls.—En Avant.

HOME.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., writes that the Japanese are "an unusually sober people."

In Gilbey's list of drink agents there are no fewer than eighty post-offices. Is this right?

Within the last ten years at Bristol, out of 49 public houses used by seamen, 22 have been closed.

The Excise Revenue for the past nine months of the current financial year show an increase of £590,000.

The Weymouth magistrates have been discussing if it be desirable to revive the stocks as a punishment for drunkards.

Temperance pledges are taken in the Marylebone casual ward, and only ten per cent. of those who sign ever return.

A writer in The Reformer states that a recent religious revival near Glasgow is said to be due to a temperance address in the open-air during the summer.

In The Methodist Temperance Magazine lately it was pointed out that in a number of the most prominent Methodist enterprises at present the ministers in charge are all total abstainers.

Lord Brassey told an interviewer recently that the "love of opium is the foundation of finance in the far East. The Chinaman's two great vices are opium smoking and gambling"

During a temperance mission at St. Mary Magdalene's, Paddington, nearly seventy men and women took the pledge. At a solemn service recently they were publicly received into the church.

The Alliance Executive offers £5, £3, and £2 as prizes for the three best songs on temperance and prohibition. All songs must be sent to the secretary, 41, John Dalton-street, Manchester, before February 1.

At a meeting at Newcastle, recently, Mr. W. D. Stephens, the Mayor, said they had never had in that town such a sober Christmas and New Year before. That morning eleven pledges were taken in the court.

Writing in The Church of England Temperance Chronicle a traveller of twenty-five years' standing says he is "positive grocers' licences have done more to ruin women, and drinking clubs to ruin men, than anyone who had not studied the question would believe."

The London Temperance Hospital has been established fourteen years. In that time alcoholic stimulants have been resorted to in not more than five cases, and in these instances the results have proved no more successful than where remedies ordinarily used in the hospital were employed. Up to the present time over 30,000 patients have been under treatment, more than 12,000 of whom were non-abstainers and 18,000 abstainers.

FOREIGN.

In many of the missions to the hill tribes in India total abstinence is a sine quâ non of church membership.

It is said the Republican leaders in the United States are beginning to see that in the prohibition movement they must either lead or follow.

An all-night sitting of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria was held lately for the discussion of the Licensing Amendment Bill in committee. The local option law remains as before.

The World's W.C.T.U. petition, placed in circulation in Ceylon by the Misses Leitch, missionaries at Oodooville, received 16 000 signatures within six weeks, many of the natives signing their names with a prayer for the success of the work.

In the New South Wales Assembly lately a brewer handed a speaker a glass of water. The speaker (Mr. Hutchinson) held the glass high above his head, and said solemnly, "Would to God that Mr. —— never gave to any man a worse drink than that."

The Christian Advocate (Nashville) says that during a hot spell in summer, the John Hauck Brewing Company, Cincinnati, stopped the supply of beer to their employés while the hot weather continued. The Advocate does not think this speaks well for the value of beer.

The new chairman of Cook County Prohibition Club made it a condition of acceptance that several representative W.C.T.U. women be appointed on the executive committee, and that a delegate be invited from every W.C.T.U. in the county to serve as regular members of the committee.

A BLIND PREACHER IN PERSIA. One of the most successful missionaries in Ooroomiah is a blind Armenian from Harpoot, Turkey. He knows the Bible thoroughly, and, riding on a little donkey, which is led by a deaf man with only one eye, he goes boldly from village to village preaching the Gospel. His blindness protects him, and the people crowd to see the wonder—a blind man reading.

SLAVERY IN THE SOUDAN.—A letter which Mr. A. B. Wylde has written to the Anti-Slavery Society discloses the fact that there is a great revival of the slave trade in the Soudan, and that slaves "were never cheaper in Arabia, nor more numerous than at the present moment." Mr. Wylde states that "when the friendly tribes, after the fall of Tamai, captured a large number of woman and children, about three hundred and fifty of them were taken to Suakim. Some were given away among friends in the town, or were shipped by Khedivean steamers to Jeddah, furnished with liberation papers; but on the arrival there the papers were taken from them, and they were sold into slavery." It is simply shocking that things should have been so mismanaged at Suakim that women and children who were thrown upon British hospitality should have found their way to the slave market at Jeddah. Mr. Wylde points out that the Mohammedan officials at the Turkish ports on the Red Sea are implicated in the enslavement of their own co-religionists—a fact worthy of the attention of Canon Isaac Taylor.—Daily News.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 22.—EZEKIEL XXVII.

"THE dirge of Tyre. Tyre is compared to a fair vessel, to whose equipment the various nations of the world contribute their stores, launching forth in majesty to be wrecked and to perish." The nations enumerated point out Tyre as the centre of commerce between the eastern and western world. This dirge is grounded upon the dirge of Babylon (Isa. xiv. 3—21); the connection shows that in each case the city named represents the world-power antagonistic to God."—S.C. Hence both passages contribute language to make up the description of mystical Babylon, or the great world-city of apostate Christendom, as described in Rev. xviii.

17.—Pannag.—Various conjectures have been made as to the meaning of this word, which only occurs here. Furst's Hebrew Lexicon takes it to be the name of a place, like Minnith.

29.—The pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships.—"As Tyre is figured by a large vessel, so are the subject states by smaller boats which accompany the great ship. These, terrified by the storm, approach the land, and their crews disembark to gaze on the wreck."

30.—Shall cast dust upon their heads.—See the reproduction of much of this figurative language in Rev. xviii. 19; but there is a sudden fall predicted of the mystical Babylon which is wanting here.

MONDAY, JANUARY 23.—EZEKIEL XXVIII.

2.—Thou hast said, I am a God, I sit in the seat of God.—"Comp. Nebuchadnezzar's speech (Dan. iv. 30). Pharaoh's boast (xxix. 3) and Herod's pride (Acts xii. 21); also 2 Thess. ii. 4, where St. Paul uses the language of Ezekiel." —S.C. The LXX. render "I sit in the seat of God" by "I dwell in the dwelling of God." St. Paul combines both renderings when he says that the man of sin "sitteth in the temple of God." As no literal temple is to be thought of here, so it would seem to be out of place in 2 Thess. ii. 4.

3.—Thou art wiser than Daniel.—The language is ironical. "On the fame of Daniel in Ezekiel's time, see on xiv. 14; for his wisdom, comp. Dan. vi. 3."—S.C.

10.—Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised.—This language is in keeping with the proud pretensions of the prince of Tyrus to "sit in the seat of God"; and as he herein foreshadows Antichrist, so is this description of his fall peculiarly applicable to one who claims the highest seat "in the temple of God."

14.—Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so.—An ironical description of the preposterous claim of the proud prince of Tyrus. "The mind of the prophet is still in the Temple. The prince of Tyre was (or claimed to be) anointed as a sovereign prince, covering or protecting the minor states as the cherubim with their outstretched wings."—S.C. The correspondence of this to the pretensions of the Papacy is very striking, and especially the claim to be anointed of God.

16.—I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God.—The Douay version's note on "the mountain of the Lord" (Isa. ii. 2) is, "This shews the perpetual visibility of the Church of Christ, for a mountain upon the top of mountains cannot be hid." Erroneous as is this application to the visible Church of a prophecy which refers to the latter day glory of Jerusalem, yet it suggests, "Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee." If Rome claims the position assigned by God to Jerusalem, her prince must be "cast as profane out of the mountain of God."

25.—When I shall have gathered the house of Israel.—The time of the gathering of Israel is "when I have executed judgment upon all those that despise them round about them." Whatever preliminary fulfilment, therefore, this prophecy against the Prince of Tyrus may have had in the days of Israel's return from Babylon, its final fulfilment is still future, and would seem to coincide with the judgment upon Antichrist whom he typifies.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24.—EZEKIEL XXIX.

1.—In the tenth year, &c.—"Jerusalem had been besieged, but not taken. It was about the time that Jeremiah (xxxvii.) delivered his prophecy against Egypt when the approach of Pharaoh Hophra's army caused the Chaldeans for the time to raise the siege."—S.C.

2.—Set thy face against Pharaoh.—Pharaoh Hophra, the king of Egypt at the time, used to boast that "not even a god could dispossess him of power."—Herodotus ii. 169.

3.—The great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers.—"The crocodile, the standing symbol of Egypt in the prophets (Isa. li. 9, xxvii. 1; Ps. lxxiv. 13). As the crocodile lies quietly in the Nile as though he were lord of the river, so did Pharaoh regard himself as the omnipotent lord of Egypt."—Keil.

6.—A staff of reed.—Comp. Isa. xxxvi 6.

11.—Neither shall it be inhabited forty years.—"We have no record of the circumstances of the Chaldean invasion of Egypt, except the account which Josephus gives, that 'Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the destruction of Jerusalem, invaded Egypt with a hostile army, slew the then king, and placed another on the throne.' We gather of what nature it must have been by comparing the description of the results of Sennacherib's conquest (Isa. xxxvii. 25) and of the ravages of an invading army as described in Joel. Comp. also 2 Kings xxi. 13 and Jer. xlvi. 19, where the removal of the inhabitants is especially mentioned."—S.C.

18.—Yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus.—Jerome says that "Nebuchadnezzar imposed upon his soldiers a very heavy task in filling up the strait separating Tyre from the mainland in order to bring up his battering rams and other engines of war; but the Tyrians carried off their valuables by ships, and so deprived the king and his army of the rich spoil which they had anticipated."

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25.—EZEKIEL XXX.

5.—Libya, and Lydia.—These words are in Hebrew "Phut" and "Lud," both of them apparently African tribes, the latter not to be confounded with the Lydians of Asia Minor. "Both names occur repeatedly on Egyptian inscriptions. The name 'Chub' occurs here only. The most probable suggestion is that which connects it with 'Copt.'"—S.C.

9.—In that day shall messengers go forth.—"The tidings of this judgment of God will be carried by messengers to Ethiopia, Egyptians who flee by ship to Ethiopia."—Keil.

15.—Sin, the strength of Egypt.—"Sin" is Pelusium, a border fortress on the Nile.

18.—At Tehaphnehes also the day shall be darkened.—This is the same as Tahpanhes of Jer. xliii. 10 (Daphne), whose site was identified the other day by Mr. F. Petrie. There Jeremiah foretold that Nebuchadnezzar would set up his throne, and as this was during his invasion of Egypt, this event is probably what is meant by the day being "darkened."

21.—I have broken the arm of Pharaoh.—"This can only be the great defeat at Carchemish in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, seventeen years before this prophecy. By this battle the fate of Egypt was decided for ever, and from this it has never recovered."—Hengstenberg.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26.—EZEKIEL XXXI

1.—And it came to pass in the eleventh year, &c.—That is about five weeks before Jerusalem was taken. See Jer. xxxix. 2.

3.—Behold, the Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon.—"This prophecy is a warning to Pharaoh by the fate of the Assyrians. The Assyrian empire, after having been supreme in Asia for four centuries, had been overthrown by the united force of the Babylonians and Medes in the year of the battle of Carchemish (B.C. 606), which had broken the power of Egypt. This gives force to the warning to Egypt from Assyria's fall."—S.C.

9.—The trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God.—"In Gen. ii. 8, a distinction is also made between Eden and 'the garden in Eden.' It was the garden planted by Jehovah in Eden which formed the real Paradise."—Keil.

14.—To the end that none of all the trees... exalt themselves.—"A lesson for all the high things of the earth, to place before their eyes the dangers of pride. Genuine humility brings to elevation its only corrective."—Hengstenberg. Stand up in their height, all that drink water.—Better, "nor all that drink water stand up by themselves." "They have nothing but what they receive as water drinkers. To stand up by themselves is to appropriate what belongs to God,"—Ibid. Independence belongs to Him: dependence to us. Comp. Ps. i. 3. with John xv. 5.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27.—EZEKIEL XXXII.

1.—And it came to pass in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month.—"About one year and seven months after the destruction of Jerusalem. In the meantime had occurred the murder of Gedaliah (Jer. xli.—xliii.) and the flight into Egypt of the Jews left behind. Jeremiah, who accompanied them, foretold their ruin in a prophecy (xliv.) probably cotemporaneous with this."—S.C.

2.—Thou art like a young lion . . . and thou art as a whale.—A.V. misses the point of this, which is a contrast, "Thou wast likened unto a young lion . . . yet art thou as a dragon"—R.V. —"or 'crocodile,' as in xxxix. 3."—S.C.

7.—And when I shall put thee out.—Better in R.V., "When I shall extinguish thee." The extinction of Egypt is compared to the extinction of the light of the heavens by "covering the sun with a cloud." There is, too, probably, a further reference to the day of the Lord of which all such national judgments are the precursors, when such figurative language shall have a literal fulfilment. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 29.

27.—And they shall not lie with the mighty.—Better (as in R.V., margin), "And shall they not lie?" &c. "The custom of burying warriors with their swords, shields, or helmets, is well known, natural, and common to most warlike nations."—S.C.

32.—In the midst of the uncircumcised.—"The section containing prophecies against the heathen, closing with this description of the kings who had gone down to the grave, seems to mean that all the powers of the world shall be annihilated to make way for the kingdom of God."—S.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28.—EZEKIEL XXXIII.

"There seems here to be a new designation of Ezekiel to the prophetic office, previously to his undertaking his new duty of encouraging his countrymen to hope for forgiveness and restoration. Hence we may regard it as the commencement of the third and final of Ezekiel's prophecies (the two previous groups being i.—xxiv., and xxv.—xxxii.), the date being reserved, because it applies equally to the whole series."—S.C.

1.—When I bring the sword upon a land.—To the end of ver. 6 is a parable, in which the watchman is a literal sentinel (as we should call him). In what follows the parable is applied to Ezekiel as spiritual watchman to the House of Israel.

12.—The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him.—To the end of ver. 20 is very much a repetition of chap. xviii.

21.—It came to pass in the twelfth year of our captivity.—We now read of the opening of the prophet's mouth, which had been shut to Israel since xxiv. 27.

24.—Abraham was one...but we are many.—"The antithesis of the 'one' and the 'many' points to the descent of the many from the one."—Keil (see Rom. v. 15—19, where there is the same antithesis). The point of the saying comes out more clearly by remembering the meaning of Abraham. Thus: "One was the father of a multitude, and we are the many—i.e., those forming the multitude who inherit under the promises to him." It is the same claim as "we have Abraham to our father" (Matt. iii. 9), and the prophet is made to refute it much as our Lord did (John viii. 39). "If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham." See also Isa. li. 2, as rendered in R.V., "When he was but one, I called him, and blessed him, and made him many," a passage to which this probably refers.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, January 29.

MATT. XVI. 13—28. Golden Text: Matt. x. 32.

PETER CONFESSING CHRIST.

THIS lesson contains so many points to be explained, and so many great truths to be taught and enforced, that no one can hope to teach the whole in the time allotted. Each must choose for himself the points to be dealt with.

EXPLANATIONS.

Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church (ver. 18).—At his first calling, Simon had been told (John i. 43) that he would afterwards be called Cephas—i.e., a stone. Here is the fulfilment. Though Christ is spoken of (1 Cor. iii. 11, &c.) as the only foundation, still the Apostles are also said to be foundation stones (Eph. ii. 20; Rev. xxi. 14). Distinguish between Christ, the bed-rock, unhewn, and eternal, and the twelve Apostles, the rock-like foundation stones, which are laid upon the living rock. Rock-like men are men of deep conviction. According to the depth of their conviction is the strength of their character. Peter's God-given conviction that Christ was the Messiah, and the Son of God, made him a rock-like man, whom Christ could use as a foundation stone. Christ fulfilled this promise literally by using Peter to lay the foundation of his Church, first among the Jews (Acts ii.), then among the Gentiles (Acts x.).

My Church.—Show the nature of Christ's Church, that it is a spiritual building, not membership in any body—e.g., Church of England, Wesleyan, &c. We can be stones—living stones in that Church, only as Peter was a stone. God opened his eyes to know Jesus, to trust and love Him, and this heart-conviction of the truth about Jesus made him a stone—a foundation-stone.

And I will give thee the keys, &c.—Whatever this may mean, it was soon after applied to all the Apostles (Matt. xviii. 18), so that the claim of the Pope, as Peter's successor, to supreme authority in the Church, has no foundation in this passage. As to its meaning, the phrase "to bind and loose" was used constantly by the Jews in the sense of forbidding or permitting. Their Rabbis were said to "bind" this when they forbad it, or to "loose" that when they permitted it. So our text means, "I give you (i.e., Peter, and presently all the Apostles) authority to act for Me as stewards of my Church. What you forbid or permit, it shall be as though I Myself had forbidden or permitted it. This tremendous authority was both exerted by the Apostles and acknowledged by the Church at large, as the Acts plainly show. Even we ourselves do the same, for do we not receive their writings as Christ's own word to us?

Get thee behind me, Satan, &c. (ver. 23).—This may seem like calling Peter by the worst of names. It was rather our Lord's intimation to Peter—made with the vividness of intense feeling—that Satan was speaking through him. In the wilderness the devil had tempted Him to save himself from hunger by miraculous means; and here, through Peter, he is tempting Him to save himself from the cross by the same means. The temptation is very great, all the greater because spoken by loving Peter. His tender and perfect humanity shudders at the cross; but far more is He horrified by the temptation. So He addresses Peter exactly as He spoke to Satan in the wilderness (Luke iv. 8).

There be some standing here, &c. (ver. 28).—What is meant by "The Son of Man coming in his kingdom," or (Mark ix. 1) "The kingdom of God come with power"? Some say, his coming in judgment at the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70), when both John and Philip were still alive; others, his coming in spiritual power, establishing his Church on earth at Pentecost and after; and others, his Transfiguration, which Peter afterwards alluded to as "the power and coming of our Lord," see 2 Pet. i. 16—18. There is most to support this last view.

LESSONS.

We may think very highly of Jesus, and still reject Him.—Every man had some idea about Christ, as most have now. Though they differed in their ideas, they all agreed that He was a great prophet—either John raised from the dead, or Elijah, or Jeremiah, &c. But this did not save them. Till they knew Him as the Messiah, their Saviour and King, they went on in sin—they crucified Him. Apply this—show the children that reverent, kindly thoughts are not enough. We must know Him, so that we love—trust—worship Him, and He is first in the heart—"My Lord, and my God."

Point out the personal nature of the question.—"Whom say ye that I am?" We may be busy about other people's faith, and yet have none ourselves.

Everything depends on having this true knowledge of Christ.—Note when these words were spoken, and why. It was near the end of our Lord's life, when multitudes were taking offence, and walking no more with Him, and when his enemies were growing in hatred, and boldness, and numbers day by day. His concern was for his disciples, that they should stand firm in the great trial now so near. He prepares them by drawing forth this confession of their faith, for He knew they would endure to the end, as long as they believed in Him as the Son of God. Apply this to the children: everything depends on Jesus, the Son of God, being real to them. If they have true faith, and so know Him as their Saviour and their Friend, they will love and serve Him. Their faith will make them rock-like, as Peter's made him.

Christ's disciples must follow Jesus only; they may not lean on others.—Peter was very true and loving; yet Peter could bring his Lord into sharp temptation. So really good people, with very kind intentions, may mislead others. It's never safe to follow men; we must learn to judge all by the Bible.

On following Christ.—The stupendous responsibility thrown upon each one. Each is left to choose: "Whosoever is willing to save his life," &c. Christ often knocks, but never forces the door of the heart. He sets before everyone life and death, and everyone must make that great choice. Show that delay is choosing, doing nothing is choosing—death.

The stupendous folly of choosing a selfish life (verses 26 and 27).

We must follow Jesus very truly. We must so know Him and love Him that we put his will before ours, and so "deny ourselves" that we bear pain and shame for his sake, and so "take up our cross." We know of a workshop where nearly 300 meet at their work. One of their number, a very young man, has given all his heart to Jesus. He has taken his stand boldly as a Christian. The men laugh and jeer, take away his tools, and throw things at him. He has often gone home with a bruised head; but he is a singularly happy young fellow. There is another in the same shop who is most miserable. He says, with tears in his eyes, that he can have no peace till he knows Christ as his Saviour. He knows all about the Gospel, yet he is perhaps the most wretched man there. Why? He is afraid to take his stand on Christ's side, and wants to be a secret disciple. "He that loveth his life shall lose it."

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—At the first meeting of directors for this year, held in Glasgow on Monday week, the total income for 1887 was reported to have been £33,432 7s. 1d. The expenditure had been £30,992 6s. The issues in 1887 were 632,073 copies or parts of Scripture, including 164,729 Bibles, 180,662 Testaments, and 286,682 portions. Though somewhat less than the exceptional circulation of the last two years, these figures are considerably beyond any former record. The issues at home were 220,754 copies, and abroad 411,319.

ASSURANCE.

How often, as we sit within our room,
And in its well-loved silence work or pray,
Asking of God the radiance for the gloom,
Wond'ring if He will answer all we say—
There comes a knock upon the fastened door,
And they who enter ask with us to speak,
Adieu to self and all we've puzzled o'er—
We hear One saying, "They shall find who seek."

And then we know the heart-grace that renews
Itself the while it dries another's tears,
Or shares another's joys. For heavenly dews
Give newness for decay, and hope for fears.
E'en as we talk together, love's great tide,
With which we do not wrestle, binds each shore;
And hearts united thus ope oft and wide
To give to others of their Christ-sent store.

At first we wanted much to be alone,
But when God sent these seekers to us, thus
We buried self; for did not Christ atone
By giving up Himself for each of us?
And so we know He hears us when we knock,
And that He'll answer when we, trembling, call;
And that He'll set our feet upon the rock,
And, gently list'ning, let us tell Him all.

M. BUTLER GERDS.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

UNEMPLOYED AT KILBURN HALL.

ON Wednesday, January 11, Kilburn Hall was a scene of bustle and activity, owing to the presence of some five hundred of the unemployed, who were entertained to a hearty meal. The applications for tickets were painfully in excess of the supply. At the close of the tea Mr. Russell Hurditch expressed hearty sympathy with the men in their troubles, and earnest addresses were given by Messrs. W. R. Lane, E. Hurditch, James L. Stanley, E. J. Thomas, and Charles Inglis. The men dispersed in a quiet and orderly manner, as they entered, each one receiving a half-quartern loaf, a Testament, and other reading matter.

TRAMPS IN RATCLIFF-HIGHWAY.

On Friday evening last it was my privilege, for the third time, to be present at a tramps' supper given at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway. The large room was crowded with poor, ragged, men, who looked "Weary, and worn, and sad." Outside, quite a small crowd clamoured for admission, and a harder heart than any present seemed to be possessed of was needed to turn them supperless away; a large room at the top of the building was opened and was as soon crowded. There were boys there who apparently had never known the joy and brightness of boyhood, and I am afraid they never will. There were men, some of whose faces looked pure and kind; others that told a tale too sad and bad for words, though some of them seemed quite young.

Supper being over, Miss Ellen Everett, of West Norwood, sang, with much feeling, "Knocking, knocking; who is there?" and then followed brief addresses from several friends. Those present will not soon forget Mr. Isaacs' story of a runaway lad, whose parents had fourteen years mourned for him as dead. He visited the Strangers' Rest, and was there led to Christ. Mr. Isaacs found out his parents in Wales, and the boy's aged mother came up. The lost was found; the dead was alive again. It was a study to watch the eyes bedimmed with tears, and the keen interest the men took in this narrative, as the speaker pressed home God's tender love towards all. At the close he requested any who desired to give themselves to Christ to hold up the hand. Very soon a dozen hands went up, and I trust as many hearts were yielded to God. The thing that caused me most sadness was that funds do not permit these meetings to be held oftener.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Sufficient funds have now been subscribed to complete the Wakefield Bishopric fund, and to secure the foundation of the new See.

The Bishop of Colchester and Canon Francis Holland will preach at St. Mary's, Bryanston-square, on Sunday next, in aid of the Building Fund of the Samaritan Free Hospital.

On Wednesday afternoon last week the Archbishop of York opened a new mission church in the populous working-class district of the Holmes, Kimberworth, Rotherham.

METHODIST.

Rev Thomas Champness has now fifty evangelists at work.

Rev. Owen Watkins, the well-known Wesleyan missionary, sailed on Thursday last for South Africa, where he will resume his missionary labours.

Mr. Walker, the contractor, who is a Wesleyan, has asked Rev. Charles Garrett to appoint five evangelists to work among the men engaged in constructing the Manchester Ship Canal.

At a meeting of the Primitive Methodist missionary committee, on Friday week, the brethren present agreed to start a ministers' list of subscriptions in support of the new mission to Central Africa.

Rev. J. B. Stephenson is appealing for ministers and local preachers for Queensland. The work is extending rapidly in the colony, rendering such an increase of ministers and preachers necessary.

Urgent requests come from the Bible Christian ministers in the Australian colonies for additional missionaries, and it is hoped that some suitable men will soon be found for those important fields of labour.

Rev. Edward Smith, of Clerkenwell, has taken premises in which to carry on work amongst work girls. He will be glad of the help of lady friends to teach the girls sewing, &c. Good literature of all kinds will also be welcome. His address is 52, Myddelton-square, E.C.

News has been received of the sudden death, from cholera, of Mrs. Jones, wife of Rev. J. Pengwern Jones, missionary at the Khassia Hills, India. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were among the band of missionaries who left for India in September last, and were married shortly before their departure.

Rev. T. Champness recently visited Humber-street Chapel, Hull, and gave an emphatic condemnation of the pew rent system. Street preaching he especially dwelt upon as calculated to secure the people. If the names "churches" and "chapels" repel the people, we must do away with them, and adopt new names.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, and Rev. C. New, of Hastings, had their annual interchange of pulpits on the second Sunday in the year.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded an eight days' mission at Wimborne, Dorset, with large and successful services. He is now at Southport.

The ministers of the Congregational churches of Sheffield have arranged for a monthly interchange of pulpits for eight months of the present year.

At the Borough-road church a number have recently been received into Church fellowship, including two of the grandsons of the late pastor, Rev. G. M. Murphy.

Mr. Albert Spicer left Sydney on November 30, sailing for Samoa, from whence he proposed visiting the stations of the London Missionary Society in the South Sea Islands.

During the past year Rev. Charles New, Hastings, received into fellowship 157 persons, about fifty of them being from the villages around, in which evangelistic work is carried on.

After a public lecture at Wanstead Hall on the 13th inst., by Rev. J. W. Atkinson, a liberal offering was taken on behalf of East London Mission and relief work. Other suburban churches are to follow this good example.

The Sick Man's Friend Society, in connection with the Argyle Church, Bath, for the temporary relief and religious instruction of the sick poor of Bath, without any denominational distinction, has been doing good work during the past year.

The Young People's Associations in connection with Oxford-street Church, Leicester, recently gave a free tea to about five hundred poor children of the district, and a week later a hundred poor persons of the congregation and neighbourhood were entertained.

The new church at Mount View, Stroud Green, N., may be congratulated on the advent of Rev. E. D. Braimbridge, of Portsea, who has accepted the pastorate. He commenced his ministry on Sunday last. He has left a church of 600 members to undertake this rising cause.

A correspondent of The Christian World says that all the ministers of the Welsh churches in London, Liverpool, and other places interchange pulpits every Sunday. The stated minister never preaches more than once a day to one congregation. This arrangement works admirably.

Rev. W. Clayton Fuidge, of the Congregational Church, St. Ives, Cornwall, writes that the work of God goes on steadily in his church, but it is so hard to keep a good spirit amid so much depressing influence. The fishery is in the most deplorable condition, and great poverty abounds in the homes of many of the fishermen

BAPTIST.

There is some talk of Rev. Dr. Clifford, of Westbourne Park Chapel, receiving a call to succeed Mr. Henry Ward Beecher.

Rev. Edwin H. Ellis, of Devonshire-square Church, Stoke Newington, will preach on the second Sunday evening in each month to young men.

A new church has been formed at Tunstall, being the outcome of a men's Bible-class, for three years conducted by Mr. Perrins and the town missionary.

Rev. J. E. Martin, of Erith, has received a very pleasant surprise in the form of £100 from a member of the Church of England towards the enlargement of his chapel.

The Gospel Mission Band connected with Church-street Chapel, Edgware-road, gave a free tea to 200 poor people residing in the Lisson-grove district. The work of the Mission is being carried on with much success.

The conference between Mr. Spurgeon and the deputation of the Baptist Council took place on Friday last at Mr. Spurgeon's residence. The Baptist Union Council meeting was held on Tuesday, when the result of the interview with Mr. Spurgeon was discussed.

SALVATION ARMY.

Staff-Captain Chuckerbutty and a party of twelve Swedes will sail for India to-day (Friday).

Work has been commenced in Jamaica. Colonel Davey had an enthusiastic welcome on his arrival at Kingston.

A telegram from Ceylon reports a remarkable tour, with crowded meetings, and conversions of high-caste Brahmins and Hindoos.

It has been decided to start a new monthly, which will contain articles about the best way to get the children converted, and to teach them to tell the Gospel to others.

In Germany the work advances amid great difficulties. At Murrhardt the lasses have to walk eight miles through deep snow up the hills and through the woods, having to make their own track.

"The Story of an Eventful Life, as told by Captain Bell at the Great Western Hall," and given in last week's War Cry, is a remarkably interesting narrative of the life of a Salvation Army soldier.

In some parts of Switzerland opposition is being renewed. At Romanel an order was issued to put a stop to all Salvation Army meetings. This order being disputed by the young leaders, they were commanded to return to their homes. One was taken by two gendarmes to Neuchatel, greatly to the surprise of her parents—the other young girl, whose home is in the South of France, was conducted to Pontarlier, the French frontier town, and left without friends or money.

The annual report of the Army shows that 1,800,000 meetings were held, 2,700,000 houses visited, and 150,000 souls professed conversion during the past year in Great Britain alone. Detachments of the Army have been sent out to every quarter of the globe, nearly half of the officers being employed abroad. Large numbers are in America and Australia, and smaller detachments are scattered about throughout France, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, South Africa, India, Ceylon, St. Helena and the West Indies.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. James Graham, of Broughty Ferry, is arranging for the publication of a memoir of his late brother Professor Graham.

The elders of Regent-square Church have commenced the holding of prayer-meetings in each district embraced by the Church operations.

Dr. Hamilton has commenced holding a service for young people of both sexes in his church at Brighton, after the ordinary service on Sunday evening. The meetings are proving a great success.

The London Presbytery have endorsed the arrangement that Dr. Adolph Saphir be retained as senior minister of Belgrave Church, taking the morning service on Sunday during seven months of the year.

An attendance of over 500 is maintained at the Wednesday prayer-meeting in Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow. Rev. James Stalker, the pastor, takes the second half hour for an exposition of one of the Psalms.

A meeting was lately held in Glasgow to bid farewell to three missionaries of the U.P. Church—Rev. James A. Wylie to Manchuria; Rev. John F. Gartshore to Old Calabar; and Mr. Miller, returning to Jamaica.

Eighteen ministers of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland who have attained their ministerial jubilee still survive, the oldest being Rev. Dr. Bryce, of Belfast, who was ordained in 1824. In October next Rev. Dr. Ritchie, of Dunse, enters upon the fortieth year of his ministry.

The Established and Free Churches of Scotland last week suffered heavy loss in the death of two ministers who have been prominent for years in the Church Courts—Rev. Dr. Phin and Rev. Dr. Wilson respectively. The latter was for some years Clerk of the Free Assembly, and subsequently held the office of Convener of the Sustentation Fund Committee.

On Sunday week, Dr. Donald Fraser, of Marylebone, repeated, by request, a sermon which he had preached a few weeks previously on the "Dilemma of Unbelief." The object of the discourse was to show that unbelief involves men in inextricable difficulty, intellectual and moral, and obliges them to believe things vastly more strange and perplexing than the Gospel.

At a meeting of students in the Free Church College, Glasgow, to bid farewell to Rev. William Ewing, who goes to labour amongst the Jews at Tiberias, Mr. Ewing said it was sorrowful that so many young men should crowd into particular spots already overstocked with clergy, while immense tracts of country all over the globe are inhabited by people who have not yet heard the name of Christ.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Successful evangelistic services have been held in the Presbyterian Church at Richhill.

A branch of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association has been formed in Belfast.

The annual meeting of the Women's Temperance Union was also held last week in Belfast, and was well attended.

Rev. J. S. McDade, general missionary, has held Gospel services in the Methodist Mission Room at Jennymount, Belfast; at the closing meeting several professed to have received Christ.

At the anniversary of the Irish Temperance League, held last week at Belfast, Mr. James N. Richardson, jun., of Bessbrook, presided at the opening meeting; he stated that in Guinness's Dublin brewery there are now about fourteen millions of capital invested, and about three thousand people employed, while there is about the same amount invested in the linen business of Ulster, but in the latter case that amount gave employment to 100,000 persons.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Dr. Donald Mackinnon, for nearly thirty-five years parish minister of Strath, Syke, and formerly for ten years minister of Fearn, near Tain, Ross-shire.—Rev. R. L. Thomas, for twelve years minister of the Borough Welsh Congregational Church, S.E.—Rev. Dr. Phin, who has for many years occupied a most prominent position in the Established Church of Scotland.—Dr. Vincent William Ryan, rector of Stanhope, Darlington, Durham, and previously Bishop of Mauritius.—Rev. Samuel Black, rector of Ballyeaston, co. Antrim, in the 68th year of his age.—Rev. Ringland Fisher, Presbyterian minister of Raffery, co. Down, an able preacher and a faithful pastor, in the 69th year of his age and forty-fifth of his ministry.—Rev. James Irwin, of New Ross, in the 68th year of his age and fortieth of his ministry.—Mr. William Daunt, for more than half a century a successful Methodist class-leader and Sunday-school superintendent at Ballineen, co. Cork.—Miss Diamond, an earnest Christian worker, at Tenaleek, co. Longford.—Rev. Matthew Cochrane, minister of St. Peter's parish, Glasgow, since 1849.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

NEUCHATEL.—The New Year prayer-meetings have passed off very peaceably and not without blessing, says the Neuchatel Journal Religieux.

TAHITI.—The first stone of the new House of Prayer at Moorea was laid by King Pomare V., on September 16 last. The chapel is for the use of the French Evangelical Mission.

AT RUTI, near Zürich, a Home for Epileptics was opened in 1886, since which 60 patients have been received and 66 refused for want of room. It is now proposed to erect a new building for female epileptics.

WOMEN IN INDIA.—An interesting illustration of the power of Western culture to penetrate the almost invincible social conservatism of India has lately occurred in Bombay. The brilliant career of the now famous English "girl graduate" has been repeated in India, in exceptionally difficult circumstances, by a Parsee girl named Sorabji. Miss Sorabji has distinguished herself throughout her University course, and has succeeded in winning sholarships each year.

GERMAN MISSIONS IN AFRICA.—The Herrmansburg Mission reports that during last year 232 Zulus were baptized under its auspices. The number of Zulu Christians is now about 1530. The first German missionary station in Wituland has been founded by Missionary Würz, of the Neukirchen Society, at Ngao, on the river Tana. The German East African Mission has secured an Abyssinian, trained at Crischona, as helper to Mr. Grenier, their missionary at Dar-es-Salaam. Deacon Karpinski, who has spent some years in work among epileptics and others, is also to join Mr. Grenier.

MADRAS PRESIDENCY.—Twenty-one years ago the Nellore district was most unfavourable for missionary work. Not a single Christian amongst the natives, and no European residents. Dr. L. Jewett, after carefully going over the field, was led to pray that it might be occupied. God was meanwhile preparing a young man in America to work out the answer to that prayer. That brave man is in the Nellore district this day, and through his instrumentality over thirty thousand men and women are singing "Happy day, happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away." Thousands more are inquiring the way to Zion. Rev. J. E. Clough, D.D., to whom I refer, is over fifty years of age, and is still strong and healthy, with all the vigour, zeal, and faith of youth undiminished. He is praying that God may give him thirty thousand souls more. Will not your readers join us in that prayer?

J. KIERNAN, American Baptist Mission.
Ongole, Nellore District, Madras Pres., India.

THE ZAMBESI.—Correspondence has been received from M. de Chatelain, of the French Protestant Mission on the banks of the Zambesi. He complains that the political organisation of the Zambesians is most defective, and that too many of them are semi-nomadic in their habits. They are dependent upon the king even for supplies of ammunition and clothing. M. de Chatelain is of opinion that so long as personal property is not recognised in the country it is doomed to sterility. Even in the matter of education the missionaries are bound by iron rules. They must not teach the young men and women in the village near the mission station because they are slaves; but while this interdict exists, it yet appears that the slave attendants of the children of the chiefs will be able to profit by the instruction. M. de Chatelain sighs for King Leopold to make another Congo of the Zambesi. The French Protestants, says The Daily News, have surmounted far greater difficulties in other parts of Africa.

Mission Appeals.

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE.—The address of Mr. W. R. BRADLAUGH, who appealed in our last issue for funds to carry on this excellent work, is 70, King's Cross-road, London, W.C.

JUBILEE GOSPEL MISSION (32, Jubilee-place, Chelsea).—This mission, commenced last November, is unsectarian and self-supporting, but at present it is an uphill fight. We would be glad of any Bibles, copies of "Songs and Solos," or tracts.—WILLIAM GLASSBY, 15, Hobury-street, Chelsea, S.W., Secretary.

ALBION HILL HOME, BRIGHTON.—Unless larger funds are forthcoming, the workers of this Rescue Home will be compelled to reduce the number of the inmates. Mrs. Vicar's death has greatly affected the subscriptions and donations. Applicants are being refused daily. I feel sure I have only to make our needs known to get a liberal response.—L. S. BUCHANAN, Lady Superintendent.

Notices.

Miss F. M. Cowherd, Stony Dale, Grange, Cornforth, has a large number of pressed leaves, which she will be glad to send gratis to any who may desire them for use in mission work.

MORLEY ROOMS.—A very pleasant evening was lately spent by the young women who attend these rooms in John-street, Bedford-row, when an illustrated lecture was given by Mr. Wakeley, of the Band of Hope Union. These young women, who are engaged in restaurants, refreshment bars, &c., have long working hours and little to brighten their lives; such occasions are therefore greatly valued.

FIRE AT A RESCUE HOME.—SIR,—At 2 o'clock on Monday morning last our Preventive Training Home for Girls at Woodford was completely destroyed by fire. The inmates escaped with their lives, except one poor child afflicted with deafness, who could not escape in time, so terribly rapid was the destruction. Nothing has been saved from the burning building. Temporary shelter has been provided for the poor girls. To reinstate the Home in full working order will probably necessitate an outlay of, at least, £1000 beyond the amount of insurance. May I plead for clothing, suitable for girls of fourteen to sixteen years of age; for bedding and all kinds of furniture, as well as contributions.—Your obedient servant,

C. STUART THORPE, Secretary.

Rescue Society, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, January 16, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

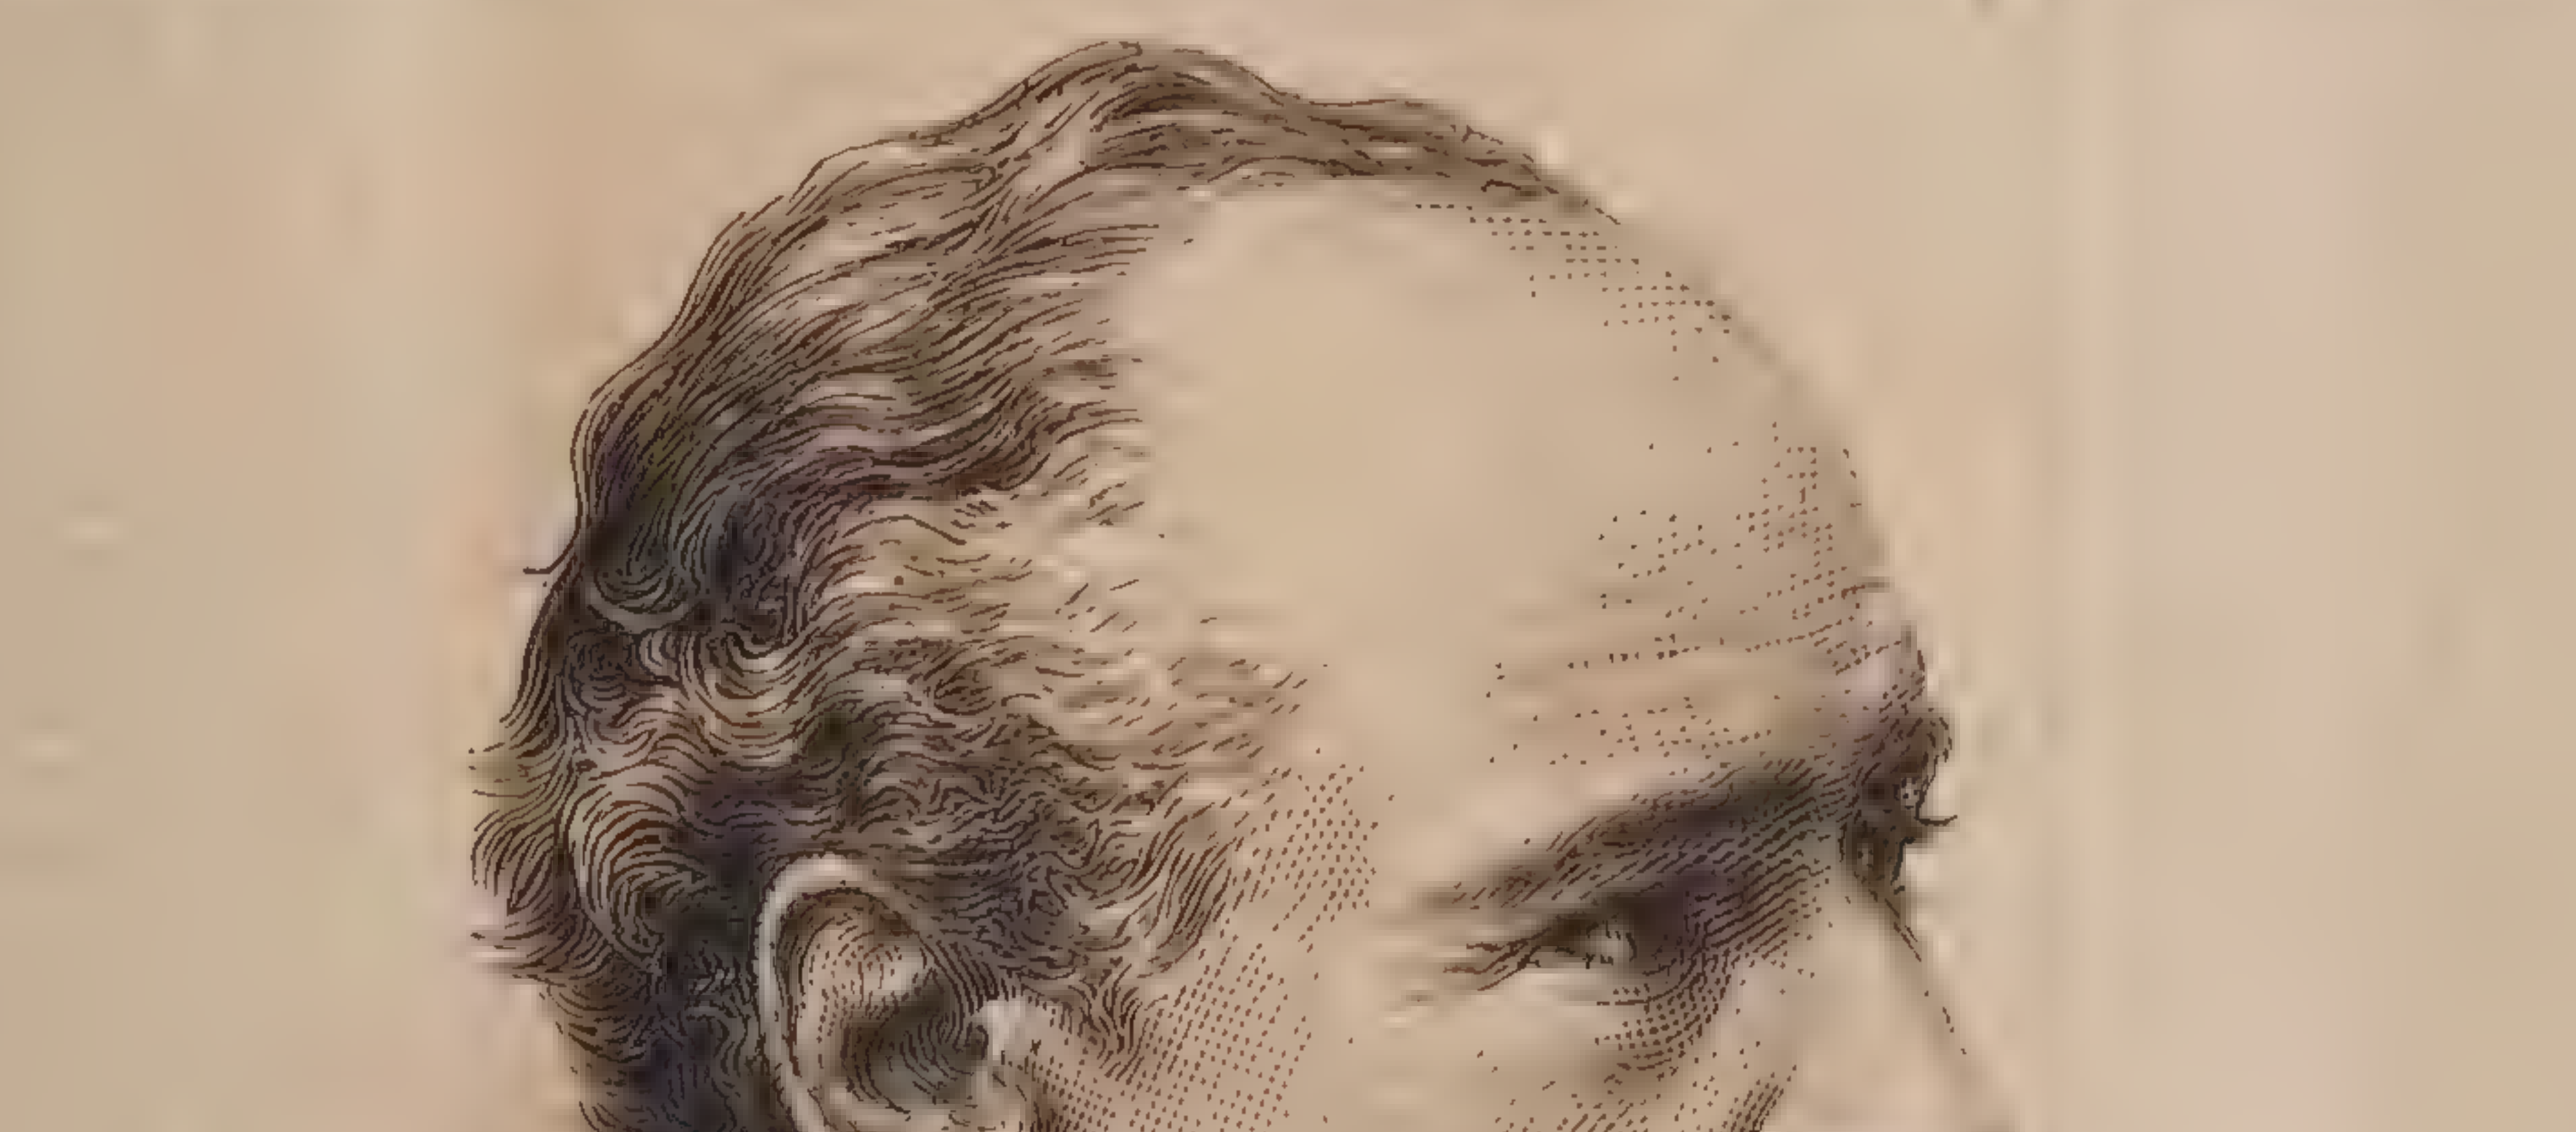
REV. CANON WILBERFORCE.

ALBERT BASIL ORME WILBERFORCE, a grandson of the celebrated William Wilberforce, M.P., the fourth son of the late Bishop Samuel Wilberforce, and the younger brother of Ernest Wilberforce, the present Bishop of Newcastle, was born in The Close, Winchester, February 15, 1841, his father being at that time a prebendary of Winchester Cathedral, and rector of Alverstoke, in Hampshire. Before he was a month old he was deprived of his mother (Emily Sargent), to the poignant and lasting sorrow of his father, who was most tenderly attached to her, and who now with double fondness yearned over her last-born child. The delicate health of this beloved son in his earlier days on more than one occasion racked the Bishop's heart with aching anxiety, as some touching letters in his Life, by Canon Ashwell, record.

In 1865 Mr. Basil Wilberforce graduated at Oxford from Exeter College, and in 1866 was ordained by his father to the curacy of Cuddesdon, a village near Oxford, wherein the episcopal palace was situated. He held this till 1867, when he accepted, it is stated, a curacy at Seaton, a maritime village of South Devon. His last curacy was at St. Jude's, Southsea, from 1869 to 1871, and in this last year, at the age of thirty, he was collated by his father, then Bishop of Winchester, to the rectory of St. Mary's, Southampton. He had hardly been here two years when, in 1873, he was deprived by death of his distinguished father, and a funeral sermon for him preached at St. Mary's Church was, we believe, the earliest of his published works. In 1876 he was advanced by the present Bishop of Winchester to an honorary canonry in his Cathedral.

St. Mary's is a very extensive parish in the north-east quarter of Southampton, reaching to the broad estuary of the Itchen, and teeming in that direction with a shipbuilding and manufacturing population. The rectory-house, or more properly the "Deanery," is a good family residence within spacious walled grounds, in the centre of the parish, furnishing some of the charms of a rural parsonage without removing the pastor from contact with his parishioners. It was a favourite resort of the Bishop after his son had come into the occupation of it.



(From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.

From his first connection with St. Mary's Basil Wilberforce threw himself into its duties with all the ardour which so important a sphere demanded, and which only the love of human souls for Christ's sake can adequately supply. The scenes of misery and vice into which he was constantly called deeply moved him, and in seeking for instrumental remedies he was soon led to take a warm and active interest in the temperance movement. What induced him to pledge himself formally to it was not any discovery in Scripture of a sin in tasting fermented liquor, nor any in physiology of its deleteriousness, nor yet was it any conviction that entire abstinence was in itself a higher virtue than moderate use, for he thought it a lower one. It was rather the blessed motive of mercy and humanity. He saw that the virtue of the tempted classes had not sufficient stamina to stand firm at the appeal of remonstrance and exhortation, but needed support in the ever-present example of one who knew their temptations, and would give up something for their salvation. The Rector of St. Mary's, like many another pastor in similar circumstances, did not hesitate to give that pledge of brotherhood in his own person.

Becoming warm in the cause he had adopted, and taking a wider view, he felt ashamed at observing that the National Church, instead of occupying the van of such a cause, was leaving that post of honour far too exclusively to the Good Templars and other zealous Nonconformist agencies. Had theTemperance Society of the Church of England been then to found, Basil Wilberforce would have been the man for the occasion; but it had, in fact, already existed since 1862, and when he came to Southampton there were a thousand abstaining clergymen connected with it. Early in 1873 this society made a new start, having been in a re-organised form adopted by Convocation, and inaugurated at Lambeth Palace under Archbishop Tait. The Archbishop and Bishops at once gave it their sanction, and subsequently Her Majesty became its patron. Mr. Basil Wilberforce was among the earliest to forward the movement under this new impulse. In May, 1874, besides speaking for it, he issued a tract, which, under the title "Doctors and Brandy," discussed the question of employing that stimulant in sickness, giving numerous medical dicta, which are worthy of the perusal of anyone, whether an abstainer or not. But it was probably on April 5, 1875, that he made his mark as a leading platform champion of temperance, and on Sunday evening, November 19, 1876, that he achieved his pulpit reputation as its advocate. On the former day he was the principal supporter of Bishop Ellicott at a great meeting in Gloucester; and on the latter he preached under the dome of St. Paul's on the text of Joel: "Sound an alarm." It would require more space than we can command to dwell adequately on Canon Wilberforce's life-work of Gospel total abstinence. He has had a share in the signing of about half-a-million pledges, and registered over 6000 during his recent short sojourn in America.

The kindred vice of impurity has also found in Canon Wilberforce an eloquent and most determined denouncer. In a well-remembered trial he openly and ardently took the side of the incriminated editor. In his largest work, "Trinity of Evil" (1886), he deals with this subject, the other two of the triad being infidelity and intemperance.

It was possibly a frequent co-operation in this triple crusade which led Canon Wilberforce into an apparently intimate alliance with workers of other denominations, and to some extent possibly coloured some of his Church views. In the most frank manner possible he ever avowed himself as of the High Church school, and on all fit occasions sought to impress upon others the privilege of belonging to what he regarded as a ministry of Apostolic descent in a pure branch of the Church Catholic. He had been brought up, as he once expressed it, in the straitest sect of High Churchmen. Yet he never unchurched Nonconformists. On the contrary, he said of them, "Though they are not in communion externally with us, [they] are yet built into that spiritual fabric of which Christ is the chief corner-stone, which is the Holy Catholic Church, and cannot, therefore, be stigmatised as heretics and avoided as lepers." Such sentiments must have attracted much of the sympathy of the Southampton Nonconformists, and on one occasion led to a very marked act of fraternisation on their part, with a reciprocation of it on his. This occurred on one Sunday when the whole body of their ministers attended at St. Mary's Church, and there received the Sacrament at his hands. His brother High Churchmen, we should imagine, must have been hardly so much astonished at their receiving as alarmed at his administering. In the course of the year 1886, the members of the Albion Congregational Chapel in St. Mary's parish were accustomed on one Sunday evening every month to allow their seats to be occupied by invited outsiders who never attended any place of worship, and so made the building in fact, for that night, a mission room. On December 26, Canon Wilberforce became the preacher, and the news of what had occurred, not quite fairly transmitted, very soon travelled to Farnham Castle. A correspondence ensued between the Bishop of Winchester and the Canon, the former expressing his strong disapproval, and the latter explaining that he had not "officiated" in the ordinary sense of that word, and would not have done so, but had simply preached, and that in his own parish. After vindicating himself both in law and divinity, and arguing out his right to repeat the act if he thought fit, he dutifully gave way to the strongly expressed wish of his diocesan. This incident illustrates the place which the doctrine of the Catholic Church held in the High Church system of Canon Wilberforce.

Another doctrinal point of no mean importance leads us back for a moment to the temperance question. He always pressed upon his temperance converts the truth that their main strength lay in Christian motives alone. Thus, indeed, he was in full accord with the very first principle of the Church of England Society, which lays it down "that the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is the one appointed means for the recovery of men from this as from every other shape of sin." It was "Gospel temperance" that the Canon laid stress upon: mere pledges were not to be depended on, nor could they make a Christian. It would indeed have been a grand delusion to preach pledges instead of Christ crucified and risen and the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost.

We have hardly touched upon the third evil which Canon Wilberforce has been using his eloquence and his energies to combat, that of infidelity. He was once preaching to a congregation of men at Oxford in reference to this matter, when in the fulness of his heart he said that, as he might never address them again, only one thing and only one name would he preach, Jesus, Jesus only; the one Name by which the sin of the world can be overcome, the Name of Jesus, God and Man. That was indeed a noble sentence. There is no clergyman in the diocese of Winchester whose opportunities of usefulness are superior, if anything like equal, to those of Canon Wilberforce. His preaching talent, his unaffected sympathy with all classes of the people, his unwearied devotion to parochial duty, have made him an immense favourite, as was amply shown in his recent illness and his restoration to health. His views on many subjects, which we regard as of great importance, differ widely from our own; but we are glad to recognise in him a man of abundant human sympathy, great power of utterance, and a sincere desire to teach and to do what he believes to be right.

THE SOUTHSEA MISSION does its work chiefly through the Gospel tent pitched on the Common, and the Bible-carriages which go their rounds during the summer season. More than 300 places have been visited, and Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, and tracts, &c., have been sold, to the value of £1000. One woman dated her salvation from the words she read on the side of the carriage, "Behold, now is the day of salvation." A kindly reception of the brethren is appealed for by any who may meet them "on the road." The new mission hall, opened last September, requires £100 to free it from debt. The address of Mr. John Denning, the founder of the Mission, is Ebenezer Cottage, Inglis-road, Southsea, Hants.

CHURCH AMUSEMENTS.

The Church has gone into the amusement business largely. In the days of primitive simplicity, it was thought that the world and Satan had a monopoly in that line. This, however, is "an age of progress," so called, and the Church has entered the market, and is in competition with these great caterers.

The discovery has been made that the Church, in order to hold its young people to its altars, must provide for the natural craving for amusements. It used to be held that Jesus and his work furnished ample resources to meet the loftiest aspirations of a saved soul. It was sung—

Thou, O Christ, art all I want;
More than all in Thee I find.

That sort of sentiment is now thought not to be up to "the times." Sad as it may appear, judging from the new order of things, Jesus is not equal to the occasion. A little amusement must be thrown in. In order to keep the people from the theatre and opera, our churches must be made into semi-theatres and semi-operas.

The holidays furnish occasion for the ingenious and progressive sons and daughters of Zion to make full proof of their new vocation. They prepare dramas, farces (very farcical), suppers, fairs, and entertainments of every sort. They are spending their wretched strength for nought. So far from preventing attendance upon a full-grown theatre and opera, by these efforts, they are whetting the appetite of the people therefor.

The Church-theatre is a preparation for the world-theatre. Satan is delighted with these inventions. But this is serious business—dreadful business. It is eating out the life of the Church—it is destroying our young people, rendering them unfit for all true spiritual exercises. We counsel every follower of Jesus resolutely to discountenance these church amusements. Be kind, but firm. Loyalty to Jesus demands it. Give your money liberally for every laudable church object, but stand aloof, positively, evermore from the unholy festivals.—Guide to Holiness.

MRS. WALL and the POOR of ROME.

Mrs. Wall writes on the 8th instant:—Our hearts are very sad at the state of our dear native land. English Christians in general do not know what Roman Catholicism really is, or they would treat the action of the Queen much more seriously. Were it not that our strength is in the Lord of Hosts, and that we are sure "He will reign whose right it is," we should be dreadfully discouraged.

I am thankful to say our special services this Christmas have passed off very well, perhaps even better than in any previous year. There has been a deeper spiritual element. One of my very poor women, whose bed is only a sack of leaves, with nothing more than her rags to cover her, came to me after their treat, saying, "Signora, I am so happy; I feel I am a saved woman. Oh, where would my poor soul have been had I died before I came to your meetings?" Several others, by their tears, told how much they felt. Last week we had two hundred and more at our meeting. It is sad to think how many of these are still in the far country. Pray for us and our work.

SHADWELL.—An eight days' Gospel mission has been held at the Sailors' Institute. Large numbers attended, nearly all seamen. Brief Gospel addresses were given, with plenty of bright singing and hearty testimonies.

By FRANK H. WHITE.

That this is the year of three eights is to my mind a most suggestive fact. Without attempting any exposition of the symbolism of Bible-numbers, let me take you to a few passages in which the number "eight" figures conspicuously, and see if we cannot find therein something to help us forward for the days that remain.

"Seven" is admittedly the number of perfection—the seventh day; as also the seventh year, speaks of perfected rest. If this can never be fully realised here, we know such is our Lord's purpose concerning us. Faith sees, and by anticipation enters into, that "rest which remains for the people of God." "Eight" is the number of activity and result; it follows seven, which must first be reached. The land of Israel was to rest the seventh year; the "eighth" was to be a year of sowing. "When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord." "In the seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest... and ye shall sow the eighth year" (Lev. xxv. 1—4, 22). Rest first, then activity as the fruit thereof. We rest not to rest, but to work. But it is not so much activity after rest that the number "eight" expresses, as restful activity. Seven is embodied in the "eight." In it is enfolded all that has gone before. Oh! that this year may be a year not only of abounding activity, but activity accompanied by and exercised in the power of sweet rest in God.

Eight is the number of activity following upon full acceptance. In Ezekiel xliii. 26, 27, we read the instructions given respecting the Temple of the restoration, and its services: "Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves. And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the 'eighth' day, and so forward, the priest shall make your burnt offerings upon the altar, and your peace offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God." So also the consecration of Aaron and his sons: the "eighth" day is seen as a day of blessed activity, not for God merely, but with and in God. In Lev. viii., Aaron and his sons, though called, cleansed, clothed, anointed with oil, and strengthened with altar food, their hands also filled with the best things of the sanctuary, were not permitted to enter upon their priestly work till seven days had been accomplished—seven days of waiting before God—at the door of the Tabernacle. Under pain of death they might not pass from the door of the sacred tent till the "eighth" day. Then they might begin their blessed ministry, which commenced with offering the sin-offering, and ended in Aaron, the fully consecrated man, fresh from the altar fire and its holy food, blessing the people. Thus our glorious Lord, fresh from the cross, where He had offered Himself without spot to God, after He had rested in the grave the seventh, rose on the first, or "eighth" day.

Again, it was on the "eighth" day, when the doors were shut for fear of the Jews, that He appeared in the midst of his disciples, and blessed them, saying, "Peace be unto you." This blessing thrice repeated (answering to the three-fold character of Aaron's blessing, when he came down from offering the burnt offering) was followed by Pentecost, which was an "eighth"-day as well as an "eighth"-week event. Pentecost answered to the feast of weeks, or feast of fifty days. Seven Sabbaths were to run their course between the feast of the sheaf of the firstfruits and the feast of weeks. "And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven Sabbaths shall be complete: even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord" (Lev. xxiii. 15, 16). The fiftieth day was, of course, an "eighth" day, as well as the first day of an "eighth" week. The Year of Jubilee also was, of course, an "eighth" year. The sheaf of the firstfruits, type of the Lord's resurrection, was to be waved on the morrow after the Sabbath—the "eighth" day (Lev. xxiii. 11). So Jesus rose on the first or "eighth" day, and when fifty days were accomplished, came Pentecost, and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, as the proof of accomplished redemption. May this year on which we have entered be a year in which a three-fold measure of the Spirit of God shall be received by us—a triple eighth year indeed—a year of threefold spiritual activity, as the result of the indwelling and inworking of the blessed Spirit of God.

The waving of the sheaf of the firstfruits was an ordinance for the land. "When ye be come into the land which I shall give you, and ye shall reap the harvest thereof, THEN ye shall all bring a sheaf of the firstfruits of your harvest unto the priest." When Israel crossed the Jordan it was the time of barley-harvest. Their first act therefore on entering the land of promise was to wave the sheaf of the firstfruits, on the morrow after the Passover—the "eighth" day; and so lift up before the Lord, and one another, a precious type of the resurrection of Christ, their Passover and ours; blessed pledge, too, of our own resurrection, for it is written, "Christ the firstfruits, and afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. xv).

Thus Baptism and the Lord's Supper, setting forth our legal and vital union with the crucified and risen Saviour, and consequent participation in all the glorious and blessed results of his sacrificial death, are "eighth-day" ordinances. Noah, saved by water, the instrument by which, in virtue of his being within the Ark, he was carried forward into a new world—separated unto God, as well as saved from Divine wrath—is called an "eighth" person—type of the true believer saved "by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Pet. iii. 21, 25). May the coming year be marked by a fuller separation to God and a deeper realisation of our everlasting oneness with our ascended Lord.

Following upon the feast of the sheaf of the firstfruits, came the feast of trumpets and the feast of Tabernacles. The great day of the latter feast, celebrated on the 15th day of the seventh month, was an "eighth" day, and kept as a Sabbath (John vii. 37; Lev. xxiii. 36; Num. xxix. 35; Neh. viii. 18). It was a day of unwonted gladness, and pointed onward, not only to the glad hour of Israel's restoration and blessing (Zech. xiv. 16), but to the glorious hour when the holy city, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, shall come down from God out of heaven to the new earth, and the saying shall be brought to pass, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God" (Rev. xxi. 3). Peter seems to have foreseen the harmony between the type and the anti-type, when, after "eight" days, standing with his glorified Lord on the Mount of Transfiguration, he said unto Jesus, "Master, it is good for us to be here; let us make three tabernacles, one for Thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias."

Among the detailed descriptions of the temple of Ezekiel, we read that the "going up" to the inner court had "'eight' steps" (Ezek. xl. 34). Here the number "eight" is the number of access—near and intimate access. Oh! that this may also be ours in the year that is before us. May it be, in a threefold sense, a year of RESTFUL ACTIVITY, GLAD ACCEPTANCE, RARE ACQUISITIONS, and a nearer and yet NEARER ACCESS to God. May we each dwell in the "Secret of His Presence," until the hour of our ascent into his glory, when "we shall see his face, and never, never sin, and from the rivers of his grace drink endless pleasures in."

WORKING-MEN AT NOTTINGHAM.

"Pleasant Sunday afternoons" is the title given to an effort which is being carried on in this important town for the various classes of working men.

The movement was commenced on October 2 last year, when the audience was composed of 150 men—the meetings being only open to men—and the numbers have steadily increased, until, on a recent Sunday, 410 were present. The most interesting feature is that each Sunday afternoon is devoted to a certain class, and the meeting on that occasion is addressed by one or two men of the same station in life. Whether it be policemen, miners, railwaymen, omnibus and tramcar men, or the workmen of the Corporation, speakers were forthcoming who understood the needs and temptations of those present, each having to experience the same himself in his own daily toil.

The meetings consist of an abundance of bright singing, either by the choir, or as solos, duets, and quartettes, led by a grand organ and band; a brief exposition of Scripture adapted to the spiritual necessities of the audience; prayer, testimony, and preaching of the Gospel; and these very simple but effective means have, by the blessing of God, produced fruit for eternity.

Several members keep the registers of attendance, others visit absentees, or administer relief to the distressed out of the money collected at the services. A provident fund has also been started.

This remarkable work is the outcome of a Bible-class connected with the United Gospel Mission. It only shows what can be done by patience, tact, and perseverance.

HOME OF HOPE, GLOUCESTER.—This Home has been quite full during the past year, while many were refused admission through lack of room and funds. Ladies needing servants are requested to apply to Miss Watkins, the new matron, at the Home, who regrets the increasing difficulty experienced in obtaining for her reclaimed ones suitable situations, owing to the demand having greatly lessened of late.

CHRISTIAN LIBERALITY.—Five and a half years ago, Mr. Arthur Scoullar, of the well-known firm of Scoullar and Chisholm, of Dunedin and Wellington, offered Mr. Duncan Wright a subsidy of £200 a year, on condition of devoting himself to evangelistic work in New Zealand. Mr. Wright accepted the offer, and has for over five years prosecuted evangelistic work throughout the colony with much success. We regret to learn that the prevailing depression constrained Mr. Scoullar to terminate the subsidy at the close of last year. Our readers (says The N.Z. Presbyterian) will hold with us that a gift of £1100 for the diffusion of the Gospel is at once handsome and substantial. We trust that the churches will devise means for securing to our common Christianity the services of Mr. Wright, which are as effective as they are acceptable. He proceeded in November to fulfil evangelistic engagements in North Otago and Canterbury, which were to extend over several weeks.

THE "UP-GRADE."

IT seems to me that in the heat of discussion as to the "Down-Grade," there is serious risk of our thinking too little of the distinctive marks by which the "Up-Grade" is to be distinguished, and forgetting that the more closely we strive to follow the latter the less will be our danger of getting upon the former.

I find in the Word of God teaching as to this "so plain upon the tables that he may run that readeth it," in such passages as the following, for instance: "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press toward the goal for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iii. 13, 14); "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith" (Heb. xii. 1, 2).

Here I find the "Up-Grade" most unmistakably; but, if I look for any line of rails, doctrinal or ecclesiastical, such as many good men consider as test of the upness of the grade, and necessary thereto, I find such conspicuous by their absence, and that I am met, if I would travel upon it, by sign-posts as it were, having upon them such directions as the following:—

"The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship Him" (John iv. 23).

"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. viii. 14).

"But as many as received Him, to them gave He power (or right) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John i. 12, 13).

From these and other passages I gather:—

(1) That no man can be on the "Up-Grade" who is not "born of God"—"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. viii. 9).

(2) That every one who is led of the Spirit is a child of God, and, therefore, on the "Up-Grade."

(3) That, as a man becomes regenerate—born again (as from above)—not by heredity or personal relation, or by the will or act of any man, but only "of God," he cannot possibly get on the up-grade by any orthodoxy of his own, or by any recognition of fitness for it on the part of others, nor, if on it, or born of God, can he be moved from it one hair's breath, though all Christendom, so called, could for once agree, and pronounce him heterodox and a heretic.

Therefore, I gather it to be my duty, if, indeed, I have the Spirit of Christ, to let it be seen that I am one of his disciples, by bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit, one of the very first of which is love for the brethren; and, in the exercise of that love, and trying others, as I must be tried myself, not by doctrine, but by fruits, to rejoice whenever I discover in the life of another fruits which I know can be from no other source than the Spirit, to recognise such a man as a brother, and to have fellowship with him, and unite with him as far as he will allow me in serving God, even though he differs widely in doctrine from me, and fails to recognise me as other than a schismatic.

Surely it must grieve the Holy Spirit exceedingly, when a believer, because another does not agree with him in doctrine, refuses fellowship with him, though he sees in his life the fruits of the Spirit; and especially so when the first shows a readiness to recognise another man as a brother, and to hold outward fellowship with him, because he finds they agree in doctrine, though he fails to find him responsive to spiritual fellowship, or to see in his life the fruits which are distinctively those of the Spirit.

It must not be supposed that I think it of no moment what doctrines a man holds: very far from it. But I will not trespass upon your space by entering upon that subject. My contention is that to determine whether a man is on the "up" or on the "down-grade," we must first ascertain if he brings forth the fruits of the Spirit.

CHRISTIANITY & MAHOMMEDANISM

THE paper on "Christianity and Mahommedanism," by Canon Isaac Taylor, read before the Church Congress at Wolverhampton, though written in lamentable ignorance of what Mahommedanism really is, has done good from the correspondence which it has elicited. It has shown the worthlessness of the opinions expressed by many writers both as to Mahommedanism being a revelation from God, and as to the benefit it confers on the human race. It has shown at the same time how little really has been effected or even attempted in the conversion of Mahommedans, especially in countries not under British rule.

With reference to the first of these points, I would refer those who may be under the delusion that Mahommedanism is a religion to be encouraged, to the Koran itself, of which cheap translations are procurable. Neither individual followers of any religion, or any communities of them, are a true criterion as to what that religion is. The book or books from which the tenets of any religion are obtained are alone authoritative. If, for instance, Christianity were to be judged by the lives or the creeds of individuals, or by the various articles of faith adopted by Christian sects, a very inadequate impression might be conveyed of what Christianity is.

We would, then, ask those who say that the Koran was inspired by God, and that it was a revelation from Him, if they have ever read it. We will quote only two passages from it. "They are infidels who say, Verily, God is Christ, the Son of Mary" (chap. v.). "The Christians say, Christ is the Son of God... May God resist them; how infatuated they are" (chap. ix.). Will anyone dare to say that the Holy Spirit inspired a book containing such passages as these, which are in direct opposition to the express declaration of God: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Further, can anyone who writes "Islam is not an anti-Christian faith, but a half-Christian faith" have read such passages? If so, we fear the writer must be ignorant of what true Christianity is.

A great deal of ignorance prevails, even in the Christian world, as to what Mahommedanism really is; some, merely hearing a few of its moral precepts, take the optimist view to which we have referred, but the great majority, taking no trouble to get any information in the matter, conclude that it is some form of heathenism, and suppose that missions to the heathen include missions to the Mahommedans. The great missionary societies ought to give greater assistance in clearing up the ignorance that prevails; if they are missions to Mahommedans as well as to heathen, let them distinctly announce the fact, and let them at their public meetings give definite accounts of their work among the Mahommedans as distinct from their work amongst the heathen. Let prayer at their meetings be offered up for the conversion of the Mahommedans as distinct from the conversion of the heathen. A prayer for the conversion of the heathen is no more a prayer for the conversion of the Mahommedan than it is a prayer for the conversion of the Jew or the Roman Catholic.

In missionary meetings, on days of intercession, little is said of the Mahommedans. I was present at a large prayer-meeting on the last day of intercession for missions in one of our cities, and in spite of the attention that is at present being directed to the Mahommedanism question, the word, in any form was only once introduced. A local secretary and treasurer of one of our principal missionary societies recently expressed astonishment at being told that Mahommedanism is totally distinct from idolatry, and that the Mahommedan is a worshipper of the same one true God as the Christian. The Mahommedan is fully in earnest in the detestation and destruction of idols, pictures, images, as the most zealous iconoclast in Christendom. His formula of initiation is, "There is no God but the God of gods, and Mahommed is the prophet of God."

The Koran is compounded of the precepts of Judaism, its history, legends, and traditions, some small parts of the New Testament much perverted, and a great deal evolved out of Mahommed's own brain. Mahommedanism, more correctly, Islamism, is a monotheism extracted out of this heterogeneous jumble; it has some precepts that are good, some that are bad, some arrant rubbish. It is essentially anti-Christian, as can be seen from the passages quoted in the early part of this paper. It permits polygamy (chap. iv.), it permits slavery (chap. xxiv.), it offers as an eternal reward a sensual paradise (chap. lv.). Can it be said that such a religion which is a mixture of good precepts, bad precepts, and nonsense, but which is opposed to Christianity, is one which a Christian has any right to encourage?

With so much ignorance on the part of even Christian people as to the benefits of Mahommedanism, and as to the difference between it and Christianity, it is not surprising that there has been so much apathy in the matter of any special effort amongst Mahommedans, and that there have been comparatively few conversions from Mahommedanism to Christianity. What adds to the difficulty of making converts is the persecution to which they are subjected in countries under Mahommedan rule. Death by law is awarded to anyone who becomes an apostate from the Mahommedan to any other form of religion. In the Koran it is written, "They are infidels who say God is Christ" (chap. v.). War is enjoined against the infidels; here then is a clear command to destroy Christians. It is not to be wondered at, then, that in reply to the remonstrance of our Government in the case of executions for apostasy in Turkey, the Grand Vizier wrote; "The laws of the Koran are inexorable as respects a Mahommedan who embraces another religion. No consideration can produce a commutation of the capital punishment to which the law condemns him without mercy." Later on our ambassador was informed that "executions are obligatory under the law considered by Mahommedans as Divine." After repeated remonstrances and a firm demand by our Government that the Sultan abandon so revolting a principle, he engaged "to take effectual measures to prevent henceforth the execution and putting to death of the Christian who is an apostate." It cannot reasonably be expected that the head of a religion which makes execution an obligatory punishment for apostasy will be whole-hearted in carrying out a concession so unwillingly wrung from him, and which must not only be against the dictates of his conscience if he believes in the religion of which he is the head and whose precepts he is bound to enforce, but must bring him into contempt with his co-religionists and spiritual subordinates.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

VII.—THE FULNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

Nothing can compensate the Church, or the individual Christian, for the lack of the Holy Spirit. What the full stream is to the mill-wheel, that is the Holy Spirit to the Church. What the principle of life is to the body, that is the Holy Spirit to the individual. We shall stand powerless and abashed in the presence of our difficulties and our foes, until we learn what He can be, as a mighty tide of love and power in the hearts of his saints. Amongst the readers of these lines there may be many who are suffering from different forms of spiritual weakness, all of which are directly attributable to the lack of the Holy Spirit. Not that they are completely destitute of Him, for if they were they would not be Christians at all; but that, being within them, He is present only as an attenuated thread, a silver streak, a shallow brook. Why should we be content with this? The Pentecostal fulness, the enduement of power, the baptism of fire, are all within our reach. Let us be inspired with a holy ambition to get all that our God is willing and eager to bestow.

Do you lack assurance? Sometimes you do not, for you feel happy and content. The sun shines, and the birds of hope mirror themselves on the placid waters of your heart. But, anon, these happy hours are fled, and your rest is broken, as the surface of the mountain tarn is overcast and ruffled by the gathering storm. You need a basis of settled peace, and it is only to be found; first, in a clear apprehension of what Jesus has done for you; secondly, in the sealing of the Holy Spirit. It is his sacred office, to witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. He is the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father.

Do you lack victory over sin? This is not to be wondered at, if you neglect the Holy Ghost. He is the blessed antidote to the risings and dominion of the flesh. He lusts against the flesh, so that we may not fulfil its lusts. When He fills the heart in his glorious fulness, the suggestions of temptation are instantly quenched, as sparks in the ocean wave. Sin can no more stand against the presence of the Holy Ghost than darkness can resist the gentle, all-pervasive beams of morning light. If, however, He is grieved, or resisted, or quenched, so that his power and presence are restrained, there is no deliverance for the spirit, however bitter its remorse, or eager its resort to fastings, mortifications, and regrets. The law of the Spirit of Life, which is in Christ Jesus, can alone make us free from the law of sin and death. But it can, and it will, if only we yield ourselves to its operation.

Do you lack the fruits of holiness? Some whom we know are so evidently filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are to the praise of God, that we are instinctively drawn to them. Their faces are bright with the presence of the Lord, though they drink of the cup of his sorrows. Their spirit is tender, their disposition sweet and unselfish, and their childlike humility flings the halo of indescribable beauty over their whole behaviour. We lack these graces. There is little in us to attract men to Christ; much to repel. Our boughs are naked and bare, as if locusts had stripped them. And the reason is evident. We have not let the Holy Ghost have his way with our inner life. Had the sap of his presence been mightily within us, we should have been laden with luscious fruitage; it would have been impossible to be otherwise.

Do you lack power for service? You have no burning thirst for the salvation of others. You are not on fire for souls. You have never been in agony over the alienation of men from God. And when you speak, there is no power in what you say. The devils laugh at your attempts to exorcise them. The sleeper turns for a moment uneasily, but soon falls into profounder slumber than ever. The home, the class, the congregation, yield no results. No hand-picked fruit fills your basket. No finny shoal breaks your nets. No recruits accept your call to arms. And you cannot expect it to be otherwise, till you obtain the power, which our Lord promised, when He said, "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you." It was when the early Christians were filled with the Holy Ghost, that they spake the word of God with boldness, and gave witness, with great power to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus.

These and many other deficiencies would be met, if only we were filled with the Holy Spirit. There would be a joy, a power, a consciousness of the presence of the Lord Jesus, an habitual rest in the will of God, which would be a joyful discovery to us; if only we refused to be satisfied with anything less than the full indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Entire consecration to the service of the Lord Jesus is a great step in advance of the experience of most Christians; but even that is not enough. It is negative, but we require something strongly positive, to meet the necessities of our hearts and of our times. And this is to be sought in our entire possession by that mighty Spirit, whose advent at Pentecost has dated a new era for the Church and the world.

Of course He was always in the world. It was the Holy Spirit of Pentecost who brooded over chaos; and spoke in prophets and holy men; and nerved the heroes and saints of Old Testament times. The day of Pentecost did not introduce a new Spirit into the world, but inaugurated an era, in which the weakest and meanest of the saints might possess Him in the same measure as they did who lived upon its farther side. Before that momentous day his fulness was the prerogative of only the few, the élite, the Elijahs, and Isaiahs, and Daniels; but since that day He has been shed forth in all his plenitude on the many; on women and children; on obscure thinkers and hidden workers; on handmaids and servants; on all and any who were prepared to fulfil the conditions, and to abide by the results. Why not on us?

We are willing to admit that the special gifts of the Holy Ghost belong to the Apostolic age. Given for a specific purpose, they are now withdrawn, though it is a serious question whether they might not have been continued, if only the Church had been more faithful to her sacred trust. But the special gifts of the Holy Ghost are altogether apart from his blessed fulness. That is not the exclusive right of any age. Confined to no limited area or epoch in the history of the Church, it pours its tides of light and power around us, as the Nile in flood; nor is there a single plot of garden-ground, however remote, into which it will not come, to fertilise and enrich, if only the channel of communication be kept cleansed and open.

"Be filled with the Spirit" is an injunction as wide-reaching in its demands as "Husbands love your wives," which is found on the same page. It is a positive command, which we must obey at our peril, and all God's commands are enablings. In other words, He is prepared to make us what He tells us to become. Moreover, on the day of Pentecost, in words which are the charta of our right to the fulness of the Holy Spirit, the Apostle Peter told the listening crowds that the fulness which had suddenly come on them from the ascended Lord; and which was a direct fulfilment of ancient prophecy; was not for them only, or for their children, but for as many as were afar off, even for them whom the Lord God should call. Are you one of his called ones? Then rejoice, because that fulness is for you. Be not faithless, but believing. Lay claim at once to the covenanted portion; and thank God for having cast your lot in an age of such marvellous possibilities.

Twelve months ago I was invited to the north of England to conduct a Gospel mission in connection with the opening of a new chapel erected under rather extraordinary circumstances. The gentleman who built it had been for many years a deacon of a church and superintendent of a Sunday-school—so he told me (on the evening of my arrival at his house)—but though having a form of godliness, he had never been born again, and consequently knew nothing of the peace and rest of those who have passed from death unto life. Slowly but surely his true state before God dawned upon him, and he felt himself enveloped in terrible darkness and despair. Only one voice seemed to speak, and that bade him curse God and die. He felt that to do this in the town where he had taken such an active part in religious work would cause great scandal. So he made up his mind to get far away from everyone who knew him. On a certain day he found himself at the railway-station with his coat linings full of bank-notes. His idea was to get to some seaport town, take ship for America, where he could die and be buried unknown. But the express for London had just steamed into the station; scarcely knowing what he was about, he took a ticket, and entered a carriage, in a few hours to find himself in the surging crowds of London streets.

For two months he wandered about hither and thither, feeling as if he were already one of the damned. Not a glimmer of hope came to his poor weary soul. He thought every day must be his last. At times he was tempted to spend his money in prodigality and sin before he committed suicide, but he felt the devil had enough in having his soul, so resisted this temptation. But brighter and better days were in store for him. It so happened one day, when hell itself seemed moved against him, that he stopped at a second-hand bookstall, and picked up a book with the following printed on the title-page:—

THE JERUSALEM SINNER SAVED; OR, GOOD NEWS FOR THE VILEST OF MEN.

Being a help for despairing souls, showing that Jesus Christ would have mercy in the first place offered to the biggest sinners.

By John Bunyan.

He began to read till tears blinded his eyes, and there and then was enabled to rest his weary soul on Christ's finished work. He was soon filled with joy unspeakable, returned home, and told what great things God had done for him. He soon after presented an organ to the church as a kind of thanksgiving offering. But he felt this was not enough. He was intensely desirous of preaching the same kind of Gospel that Bunyan preached in "The Jerusalem Sinner Saved," which had been the means of his conversion.

So he bought a piece of ground in a very poor neighbourhood, and put up quite a handsome building, and invited me to conduct a ten days' mission in connection with the opening. Quite a number of poor people were brought out of darkness into light; they formed themselves into a church, and elected my friend who had put up the building as their lay pastor. There he may be found week by week preaching to the people "that Jesus Christ will have mercy even on the biggest sinners."

THE GIRLS' MISSION at Stratford has been carried on for fourteen years, and continues to provide a place of safety and recreation for factory girls after the hours of business. The little report just issued complains of increasing difficulties, arising through counter-attractions and the scarcity of suitable helpers. A morning service has been started on Sundays, which bids fair to succeed. Mr. Dowding-Sansom, the hon. superintendent, who devotes all his spare time to the work, speaks of his faith being tried through lack of funds. His address is Hazelmere, Atherton-road, Forest Gate, E.

BURMA AND ITS PEOPLE.

An extremely interesting little book on this subject has been published by Mr. T. Woolmer, 2, Castle-street, City-road, E.C., price 2d. We give several extracts describing the life and characteristics of the people. We trust many of our young friends will get the booklet, and read it all. It will tell them what has been done in past times to take the Gospel message to the Burmese, and what is now being done:—

The Burmese are inveterate smokers, the very children at the breast being indulged with an occasional whiff; and as long as they can take a pull at a long cigar they take life easily. They are cheerful to a fault, in spite of the wretched system under which they have lived. The inhabitants of a burnt-out quarter have been known to erect a theatre on the ruins, in order to console themselves in their trouble by a little amusement. As might be expected, they, as distinguished from their rulers, now happily got rid of, are a pleasant people to deal with. They are not treacherous nor habitually untruthful, although their love of the ridiculous leads them sometimes into monstrous exaggerations. They make jokes freely, but are not so ready to take them, and have a bitter dislike to being teased. Their manners are courteous, but quite free. Even the poorest, while frank, are well-bred, except when betrayed by ignorance or temper into arrogance. They are not an industrious race, yet we ought not to call them lazy. A moderate amount of work for two days supplies them with ample provision for both, and for a third, which they spend in meditation, boat-racing, football, or other recreations, according to taste.

The Burmese are born petty traders, and the women especially know how to drive a good bargain. Although few are rich, none are very poor. Pauperism is quite unknown. Should a man, whether native or stranger, be unable to provide the necessaries of life through misfortune or ill health, his neighbours help him with the utmost readiness. But if they are too badly off to assist him, he has only to knock at the door of the nearest monastery to get immediate relief. There is no caste in Burma, as in India, but there are certain outcasts who live by themselves, and with whom no one will associate. These are the lepers and other incurables, deformed persons, policemen, undertakers, and people employed in certain trades.

Rice is the staff of life in Burma, and breakfast, dinner, and tea are called morning, noon, and evening "rice." And although, as Buddhists, the people are professed vegetarians, both fish and flesh find their way to their tables. A soup composed of sea-swallows' nests is much relished, and thought to be very strengthening. The lower orders will eat rats, lizards, and snakes. In each case, however, they like someone else to do the killing for them, as their religion forbids them to take away life. When the meal is served up, the guests eat off one dish in the way all used to do before knives and forks were invented. Almost the only beverage is water, which is greatly reverenced and valued. The water festival is one of the most honoured of all the year. It is begun on New Year's Day, and lasts for the best part of a week. At daybreak the people repair to the pagoda, which they sprinkle with water, and pray for a plentiful season. A jar of the fluid is then presented to the priest, with a prayer that any wickedness they may have committed in the past may be forgiven. After this ceremony is over the play begins, which consists in drenching one another with scented water. Bad luck is supposed to attend those who have not been thoroughly wet at least once, and who have not soaked somebody else through and through. The custom is connected with the idea of the cleansing of sin and the washing away of any ill-feeling which may have sprung up during the year.

In such a country as Burma the principal industry is agriculture. In the mountains, among the wild wandering tribes, the methods of tillage are very rude and wasteful. A patch of forest is burnt, which manures the soil. The ground is next sown, and then, after a few harvests, the tribes move on, and do the same over again. But a better system prevails elsewhere. Under British rule a number of peasant proprietors have been created, who purchase small farms of about twelve acres at a cheap rate, and many of them are now in a prosperous way. All the agricultural implements are of wood, except the ploughshare, which is of iron. The plough is drawn by a pair of oxen or buffaloes.

As the mulberry plant grows luxuriantly all over the country, there is an extensive silk industry. The material is very strong, and the dyes are permanent and beautiful. The people have a keen sense of colour and design. The orthodox Buddhists look down with great abhorrence on this manufacture, and the poor people who are engaged in it are treatad as outcasts by those who wear the fabrics they weave. Very pretty lacquered ware is also made in Burma, and jewellery that will compare with much that is made in England. Besides all this, a good trade is done in wood carving, bronze casting, boat building, weaving in various textures, and in paraffin oil made from the abundant petroleum wells on the banks of the Irriwady. The native markets are held in the open air, where all the retail business and much of the wholesale is done by the women.

When the people die, there is terrible lamentation, for their religion gives them little hope in death. Messengers are sent to friends, who come to offer condolence, and make arrangements for the funeral, the expenses of which are met by voluntary gifts. The body is next washed, and a coin called "ferry hire" is placed in the mouth, from the idea that death is a river whose waterman requires pay. It is then placed on an open bier in front of the house, where it remains for three days, when it is placed in a coffin. When the priests come to conduct it to its last resting-place, a procession is formed, in which the white-robed mourners are conspicuous. On reaching the cemetery, water is poured on the coffin, alms are distributed amongst the guests and the poor, and pickled tea is passed round. After these and other ceremonies the body is burned, and three days after the relatives return, and gather the ashes to bury them or to place them in an urn. On the tenth day a great feast is held in honour of the deceased.

The religion of these people is somewhat mixed. Originally it was what is called Shammanism, and it still survives in the form of the adoration or dread of nats or dewas, good and evil spirits. These nats, so they say, live in the six heavens beyond the moon, but can transport themselves from place to place with great rapidity, and every mountain, tree, river, town, village, and important object is presided over by them. The thunder and lightning which ordinarily precede rain in Burma are supposed to be caused by nats playing in the air and flourishing their spears. When rain is wanted badly, the people assemble in the streets, and pull a long rope backwards and forwards, and, with loud cries, invite the nats to come forth and play and produce rain. The Burmese also believe in witches, who haunt solitary places and woods, and live on human flesh. They are thought to have a gigantic but shadowless body, and a mouth so small that a needle cannot enter it. Notwithstanding all this, they call themselves Buddhists; members of a religion which embraces 500,000,000 of the human race.

AT THE FOUNDLING CHAPEL.

Gleaming through coloured panes like ruby fire,
The light fell on the children in the choir,

Tinting the quaint mob-caps with soft pink glow,
As doth the setting sun the winter snow;

And brightening up the ruddy crimson vests
Until the lads seemed robins in their nests.

A flood of music like a summer tide
Swept softly through the place, the organ sighed,

And then a clear voice sang, "For ever keep,
O Saviour, these thy frail and trembling sheep."

But I was sorrowful: I could not sing,
Nor could I pray, or think of anything

So sweet; for I had seen what made me sad,
Up in the choir, a tiny foundling lad,

Railed off from all the pews, amazed,
Who clasped his pleading little hands and gazed

Upon another child, in rich attire, who stood
Just kept apart from him by that thin wood;

And yet with all a world between them there—
One had a mother's hand upon his hair.

Tears welled into mine eyes: the woes of life,
The mysteries of sin, of wrong, and strife,

The waste and lack of love, the seeming loss,
The children toiling 'neath their heavy cross—

Weighed on my weary heart and on my brain,
A bitter load of others' grief and pain;

Until I thought I heard the martyrs' cry,
"How long, O Lord, how long?" continually.

But soon the cry was hushed; the chapel rang
With all the foundlings' voices as they sang

The promise of our God for that new day
When sorrow and all sighing flee away;

And they, the ransomed of the Lord, draw nigh
To Zion, with their songs of endless joy:

And, as the anthem ceased, my heart found rest,
I left the world's grey grief with God, who knoweth best

And, looking up, I saw the child's rapt face
Illumined with a ray of Heaven's own grace.

THE SCRIPTURE TEXT MISSION publish their fourth annual report, showing the several tramcars and 'busses in which their advertisements appear. It says:—"In this age of advertisements, when special study is made to attract the eye, it behoves us to exhibit the Word of Life to the millions who travel in the tramcars and 'busses." Blessing has marked the efforts of the past year, though the funds have fallen short of the need. Communications may be addressed to Mr. W. Walters, 53, Paternoster-row, E.C.

THE ORPHAN HOMES at Leominster are evidently not without honour in their own country. Never have so many presents been sent in, "from the dripping reserved by the cook to the suits of clothes set aside by the merchant." In surrounding places also collections have been made in churches. Others have invited the orphans to spend a happy day. Mr. H. S. Newman, treasurer and secretary, has certainly produced an attractive report, containing a number of illustrations. The printing press has been as busy as ever, and almost overdone with work. The secretary's address is Buckfield, Leominster.

PAUPER CHILDREN.—With respect to this subject, to which reference has been made in recent issues, a letter reaches us from Mr. E. S. Macharg, secretary of the Reformatory and Industrial Schools, Herald-buildings, 69, Buchanan-street, Glasgow. He says: As regards industrial schools, the report to Parliament last year (p. 30) states that of girls discharged from industrial schools in England in 1883, '84 and '85, about 84 per cent. were doing well; while, in the case of our schools in Glasgow, the result is even better, out of 148 girls discharged in the same period, 135, or 91 per cent., being returned as doing well. The average expense is also considerably overstated in the note which appeared in your issue of January 6.

An EVANGELIST in NEW S. WALES.

COMING home from my last mission it struck me that, as many of your readers are interested either directly or indirectly in Australia, a line from one of the harvest hands down in the sunny South might not be amiss. The advent of an evangelist into the majority of the centres of population in N. S. Wales is quite an event. Many muster the first night out of mere curiosity to see what kind of a wild or tame animal a live evangelist is; some of the knowing ones come to see the collapse of the whole thing, for "such meetings will never answer here."

Many were the prophecies of failure before our last mission began at Tenterfield, a town of two thousand inhabitants, away upon the Queensland border, four hundred miles north of Sydney. After the Sabbath's work among our own people in Sydney, we left on Monday night by boat for Newcastle (our chief coal field), thence on Tuesday morning by train to Tenterfield, arriving there at 1 o'clock on Wednesday morning. "Gaius mine host," in the person of a sheep and cattle station manager, is waiting for us with his buggy and pair. That evening at 8 o'clock the mission begins. We find that, though we have come up at the invitation of the Presbyterian Church, the mission is a united one; Methodists and Episcopalians are well represented in the hall in which all the meetings are to be held.

The first night is devoted to Christians, seeking to get them ready for the work of "bringing in the sheaves." The second night an inquiry meeting is held, to which about two-thirds of the entire congregation stay. When the request is made that all who are seeking the Lord should fall upon their knees, such is the power present that nearly every seat is empty, and scores are upon their knees seeking mercy. It is our custom to deal with every inquirer individually, but to-night this is impossible; it would keep us till daylight to get over them all. Having spoken to just a few to satisfy ourselves as to the genuineness of the movement, we ask them to rise, and we address the company as we would one seeker.

The mission lasts eight days, and every night there were fish in the net. At the close we had taken the names of about sixty inquirers, most of whom were "in the light." These names were handed to the different pastors, that by them they might be shepherded. The night after the mission closed there was a ball in the township, which we have the satisfaction of knowing was well crippled by the mission, as many a one has been before.

We started for home again at 4 a.m., with a pile of about a hundred CHRISTIANS and numbers of tracts on the carriage seat beside us. As the train thunders along, hundreds of souls are passed who are nearly all shut out from the means of grace. Gatehouse keepers, line repairers, swagmen, teamsters, &c., and, as far as we are able, something is dropped from the carriage window for each, till all our seed is gone. Not for many a long day have so many CHRISTIANS been flying about "New England," as that district of the Colony is called. After about twenty-five hours' travelling, home is reached near Sydney. Here we go on quietly with our pastoral work for about three weeks, when the date comes round again for beginning our next mission; and thus the work goes on, a spell at home and then a spell away, gathering in the lost ones for whom our Lord did die. Some of your readers might pray occasionally, "God speed the work of the harvest hands away down in the sunny South."

EVANGELIST.

DOCK-LABOURERS' MISSION.—Mr. C. Coleman has completed twenty-five years' service among the poor men who daily seek work in the neighbourhood of the London Docks. He asks our readers to join with him in thanking God for all the success given to the Mission during that period.

ANTI-INFIDEL LITERATURE.

A VERY important though unostentatious work is being done by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh (the brother of the notorious Secularist). His monthly organ, The Anti-Infidel, is a strong weapon for the defence of the truths of the Gospel. As "An Old Canon" wrote to The Record a short time ago: "It is soundly evangelical in its teaching, and highly suitable for distribution among working-men in large centres of industry. Workshop scoff and ridicule are honestly dealt with and refuted, and infidel objections met and answered. The price (one penny) places it within the reach of the working classes, with whom it becomes very popular when brought under their notice." Besides this, Mr. Bradlaugh has written a number of powerful and convincing tracts to the same end, and the "Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise" is established for the free distribution of such literature. Subscribers of 5s. and upwards receive grants of these at half price; but, as hundreds are given away free of cost, the "enterprise" cannot be sustained without outside help. Lovers of the Gospel who desire to further this end should communicate with Mr. Bradlaugh, whose address is 70, King's Cross-road, W.C.

A MISSIONARY'S MESSAGE.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—While my wife and I are returning to our work in South Africa, I have had time to think of the many Christians I have met in the different towns I have visited in England, Scotland, and Ireland, with the view of increasing the interest in foreign mission work. I am filled with devout thankfulness for the hospitality, and Christian sympathy and help, given by so many friends.

At the same time I am saddened by the remembrance of many who, as yet, do not seem to realise their great responsibility in connection with the work of giving the Gospel to the heathen world. If, as the Bible teaches, responsibility is in proportion to knowledge, then that of European Christians must be great indeed. Yet many are evidently not awake to it, and are not ashamed to acknowledge their indifference; leaving the heathen in their darkness, and thus wilfully disobeying Him who is their light and their salvation. We are the Lord's, body, soul, and spirit; and it is for Him to use our gold and our silver, our property and our children, and ourselves, as He shall choose.

I do not write this with a view of asking special help for the work given us to do in South Africa, although we can only do a small part of the work needed for want of that help, but with the prayer that all may be roused to take a fair share in the great and blessed work of publishing the good news of salvation to all for whom Christ died.—Yours in Him,

ELBERT S. CLARKE.

R.M.S. "Athenian," Algoa Bay.

THE BREAD AND MILK BREAKFASTS for poor children provided last winter by Rev. Walter Hobbs, of Gipsy-road, Norwood, are being repeated at the present time. Those who are looking about for ways and means of helping the unemployed may learn in Mr. Hobbs's little report how it can be done, in one of the very best forms we have seen. Mr. Hobbs will forward his pamphlet to any who apply to him.

THE UNION HALL MISSION has entered on the twenty-eighth year of its evangelistic operations. At present there are six mission halls in the poorest parts of London, where a good work is being regularly sustained. This includes Gospel preaching, Sunday-school teaching, mothers' and fathers' meetings, house-to-house visitation, Bible-carriage, work, &c. Through the last-named agency thousands of Testaments have been sold. There are also open-air preaching and tent work. Mr. Robert Bilke, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, London, N.W., is the superintendent.

MR. HENRY THORNE AT OXFORD.

THE visit of Mr. Thorne to this city has been a marked success. The mission has resulted, not only in the quickening of many dead souls, but in a very gracious revival in the hearts of those who had long known the Lord, but were conscious of their need of a more real and deep consecration to Him.

The meetings were held from January 8 to 16, at first in the Town Hall, and latterly in the Corn Exchange, a much larger building. The attendances increased nightly, and on Sunday afternoon and evening the large building was crowded to its utmost capacity. Mr. Thorne's remarkable felicity of illustration, his simple and pointed presentation of the vital truths of the Gospel, and his tender and sympathetic spirit, have endeared him—and, best of all, have endeared the Saviour whom he so faithfully proclaims and represents—to many hearts in this city.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

IN a recent trip to Virginia I made some inquiries into the physical, mental, and moral condition of the Negro. For years past I have made similar inquiries during frequent visits to the Southern States, and find myself to-day, as in the past, unable to solve the problem of the Negro's future. There is positive deterioration of the race in many sections; there is just as positive evidence of advancement intellectually and morally, but only here and there. And this, because of patient concentrated effort on the part of laborious Christian philanthropists, who believe in the race, and who spend time, money, and energy for their social and spiritual improvement.

* * * *

Whatever the political views of the Southern whites, they generally vote the same "ticket." They fear the political ascendency of the blacks; they dread subserviency to former slaves. And this, as a well-informed friend remarked to me, "not because they are black, or because they were slaves, but because, as yet, they are too ignorant to rule, and, like all ignorant classes, would abuse their power."

* * * *

Interest in the freed man deepens with a growing knowledge of his needs and resources. Recently I enjoyed the rare privilege of meeting daily with nearly a score of ministers for mutual Bible study. Several of them were negroes. There was no discourtesy shown by the white brethren towards them, not even a slight put upon them by word or act. The coloured brethren were very intelligent, very earnest in inquiry, humble, devout, polite. All were brotherly, cordial, courteous. They represented two races, hence to my queries, privately and personally, neither the white brethren nor the coloured, wished for social equality. The one would not give it; the other would not accept it.

* * * *

The question arises: Is it wise to enforce a principle repudiated by both classes, North and South, and urge forward an unwelcome reform which is impracticable, and can only result in loss of influence? The existing difficulties cannot be immediately swept aside. An unwise aggressive policy may rebound upon the coloured people, however innocent themselves, while the white missionary seeking their best welfare will thereby minimise his opportunities for good, and greatly lessen his influence with both races. Even in Northern cities the coloured people prefer their own preachers and churches.

A TRUE INCIDENT

IN CONNECTION WITH THE WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

Some years ago, in God's providence, I was left alone during the winter months in a large house. Being a regular reader of The Christian, and seeing there was to be a Week of Prayer for Women, I felt a strong desire to join with other Christians; but as the house was quite in the country, and the weather severe, I could not attempt to go out.

Having two lady friends about two miles distant, I wrote asking them to come and join me in prayer, explaining that the first week in February was set apart as a Week of Prayer for Women. Their reply was that, much as they would like to come, they were quite unable on account of their health. It then occurred to me to assemble the servants of the house—one of them being a bright Christian—to join me in praying for women everywhere, explaining to them what was going on in other parts. They gladly consented, and though none of them prayed audibly, I knew their hearts went with my words. Very precious days they were, the Lord being in our midst.

One morning I was led to ask Him to "let us see some answer in our neighbourhood, that our faith might be strengthened." Now, notice God's power to work upon the heart. In the course of the day our Biblewoman wished to see me. When I entered the room she exclaimed, "Oh, Miss ——, there is that girl Jane ——, who gave us so much trouble in the village, asking for you. She has walked eight miles without a bonnet, and declares she has had a letter from you, saying you would be her friend at any time, if she wished to change her life. I told her not to tell me any more falsehoods, as I was sure you had not written to her, or you would have told me. However, I have brought her to see you, as she persisted in her statement, and have left her in the kitchen. Would you like to see her?"

I shall not forget Miss G——'s surprise when I said I had written to her, some months previously.

It must now be told that this poor girl had given our missionary and Biblewoman great concern. She was the eldest of a large family in our neighbourhood, all of them quite indifferent to religion; but J—— had seemed rather impressed during a season of revival services in our church, and joined a number of young people under me to lead the singing of Sankey's hymns—not so well known then as now.

An aunt, who was said to keep anything but a respectable house, induced this girl to go and live with her. We were anxious to get J—— into a "Home." Our missionary and Biblewoman went to the aunt's to try and persuade her to come, but in vain. She seemed most hardened, and would not listen to a word they said. I was much grieved on reading this in the missionary's journal, and pleaded with the Lord on her behalf. As the aunt's address was given in the journal, a thought struck me to write J—— a letter, telling her that, though I did not know her, yet I understood she was amongst those who joined the young people in singing praises to Jesus, and how sad for her to be shut out from singing them above, &c.; adding that, if at any time she wished to change her life, I would be her friend. When sealing the letter, the thought crossed my mind, the aunt may keep this from her, and I breathed a prayer that He who could, would see that she got it.

I told no one of this, and must say the incident had almost passed from my mind. It seems that J—— had gone with the stream, not at all troubled in mind, till this Week of Prayer for Women, when she felt so wretched, that she could not bear to hear the swearing, &c., in her aunt's house. Just at this time her aunt sent her to look for something in a drawer, when, to her surprise, she came upon my letter. So God had not permitted the aunt to destroy it, though she had not given it to her. J—— resolved at once to run away and ask for me; hence her appearance without any bonnet.

Oh, how changed was her manner now—willing to do anything we wished! We first had to provide her with suitable clothing, and our missionary wrote to know if she could be received into a "Home." The answer was favourable, and J—— gladly accompanied the missionary, though so averse to it before. She remained there some months, and her conduct was most satisfactory. She then came to live with her parents, and testified by her life that she was a new creature in Christ Jesus.

I told her she had now to be a missionary at home. Her father did make a profession, and was admitted a member of the Church. J—— died a few years ago, and is now, I trust, in glory.

Surely this is an encouragement to us to plead with our Heavenly Father on behalf of our sisters, however they may be situated, knowing that He knows all about them, and can bring them out from any evil surroundings, and enable them to live to his glory.

TRAVELLING SHOWMEN.

On Sunday evening, January 15, the London branches of the British Women's Temperance Association gave tea to the travelling showmen now gathered from all parts of England at the "World's Fair," Agricultural Hall, Islington. The programme has included a school for the children, as, owing to their roving life, the show people are unable to obtain any education for their little ones. Every morning about fifty are gathered in a corner of the Berners Hall (kindly placed at our disposal), and with very imperfect appliances these children are taught by a number of devoted friends—who have given up all their holiday time to the work.

On Sunday evening between 300 and 400 men, women, and children, sat down to tea, and afterwards, under the presidency of Mrs. Stewart, an excellent meeting was held. The speakers included ladies and gentlemen. Not the least interesting feature was that three of the "travellers" themselves gave addresses. Mr. G. Nokes spoke with pathos and power, evidently reaching the hearts of those assembled. The visible result of the meeting was that 68 pledges were taken; but who can doubt that some Gospel message shall find its destination in weary souls?

THE SCUTARI MEDICAL MISSION is carried on with increasing usefulness and blessing; many sick bodies have been cured, and hundreds of patients spoken to about their souls. Jews and Mahommedans alike gather to hear the Word of God read, and confess to its influence. The recent disastrous fire furnished additional and abundant scope for the medical aid of Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian, the conductors of the Mission. The report recently published contains a preface by Dr. Grattan Guinness, who lately visited the place, and commends the work. Dr. Alexandrian may be addressed, care of Dr. Bliss, Bible House, Constantinople.

THE MISSION TO SAILORS at Madeira, established twelve years ago, reports much good work done during the past year. Many thousands of tracts and periodicals were given to seamen and passengers; parcels of reading were sent to twenty vessels, and visits were paid to men-of-war. The Rest has proved of very great value, thousands having availed themselves of the recreation and spiritual advantages which it provides. The work done has been "real rescue work, and some extremely sad cases have been met with." The systematic attempts made by "Guides" to keep sailors away from the Rest, have been largely defeated by counter-Guides who watch for foreign sailors, and conduct them to the Rest. Mr. W. Smart, 183, Rua dos Ferrieros, Funchal, is the superintendent.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

Miss Steer's well-known work among young women in the East of London was the subject of a "conversational hour" on Wednesday, last week, at the new Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, kindly lent for the occasion by Miss Macpherson. Nearly a hundred ladies and gentlemen assembled, and listened to addresses which showed the great importance and value of rescue and preventive work. Miss Macpherson, in opening the proceedings, called upon those who could do nothing else, to spread information as to the pressing needs of young women in the East-end.

In the course of her interesting address Miss Steer said that when she commenced in Ratcliff-highway nine years ago it was very difficult to get people to interest themselves in the matter. Now, a great change has taken place. With an increase of interest, however, there has come increased difficulty. There are still people who think that such endeavours do very little good, but she affirmed that results demonstrate the contrary view. Apart, however, from results it is enough that such work is distinctly in accordance with God's will. Having sketched the progress and extension of the Mission, Miss Steer showed that her endeavour has always been to meet the needs of the poor women and children who find their way to the refuge. It is well known to the women of Ratcliff-highway that the institution is not hampered by rules under which they might be refused admission; in fact, they know that the houses are always open to them. Cases from the country are sometimes refused for want of accommodation, but cases from the neighbourhood never. Many of the girls who have been taken in hand are now doing well in respectable ways of life, and there is great cause for encouragement. Having urged ladies to show their sympathy by co-operating in some of the many methods open to them, Miss Steer spoke next of the anxieties of the work. Sometimes girls are received for the second and even the third time, but they are always freely and gladly taken in, and as long as they can be persuaded to stay they are willingly helped. The extent of the work may be judged from the fact that 116 Christmas remembrances were recently sent to girls who are being corresponded with in situations, or with their friends, or who are still in the Homes. For the most part the mission efforts are of a preventive character. The night shelter, where women are always cared for, is distinct from the Refuge; it has been extremely useful, and is highly appreciated.

Miss Jones, who has assisted Miss Steer for the past six years, delivered an earnest address, as also did Miss Smedmore, who has been a helper for three years. Miss Stock emphasised the fact that Miss Steer never refuses the poor girls of Ratcliffe-highway. Miss Macpherson appealed to the ladies present to show a genuine interest in this good work. While there is much evil in London, there are also many righteous people in the city. Such people need never be without work. She commended the Bridge of Hope to them, and asked all to pray for its success, and to remember its needs.

At the conclusion of the "hour" Miss Macpherson's little ones, numbering over seventy boys and girls, sang some melodies, and showed the efficiency of their training in Scripture knowledge and intelligence.

THE DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH SOCIETY continues to supply railway waiting-rooms, workhouses, hospitals, prisons, asylums, &c., with rolls of texts, and other publications. Though the report does not recite any particular case of blessing, it is evident from the testimonies received that the value of the Society is being recognised, not only at home, but in nearly all parts of the world. The Depôt is 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne; and Mr. Woodhouse is the secretary.

FIRE AT GIRLS' TRAINING HOME.

On the morning of the 16th January, one of our Preventive Homes was TOTALLY DESTROYED BY FIRE, with the loss of the life of one poor afflicted inmate.

The Matrons and all the other inmates escaped in their night dresses, having lost everything but their lives.

The rebuilding must commence as soon as possible; but to reinstate the Home in full working order will probably necessitate an outlay of at least £1,000 beyond the amount of insurance.

This has occurred when our Funds are absolutely exhausted, with OVER 150 GIRLS IN OUR HOMES.

Will not every reader send a Contribution to help at this time of great and dire necessity?

Contributions will be kindly received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott; and the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

Mr. C. STUART THORPE, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution.

The NEW YEAR'S DEVOTIONAL MEETING will be held (D.V.) on TUESDAY, the 31st INSTANT, IN EXETER LOWER HALL, AT 6.30. GEORGE WILLIAMS, ESQ., will preside.

The end sought is the SPIRITUAL AND ETERNAL WELFARE of all those admitted to the Homes; and there have been many blessed instances of young women and girls being won for Christ by the power of the GOSPEL OF THE GRACE OF GOD.

From the last complete return made it appears that in the year there had been 1,976 Gospel Services and Bible-Classes held; also 988 Temperance, Educational, and other Classes; and all these were conducted by Voluntary Workers, both Ladies and Gentlemen.

Christians who sympathise especially with Preventive and Rescue Work are invited to attend the Meeting, or join in prayer at the above hour; for in relation to Christ's Spiritual Kingdom, Zech. iv. 6 teaches Workers the source of all true success.

A HAPPY CHANGE.

About a year ago a gentleman consulted Mr. Garratt on behalf of his wife, who had been an invalid for some time, life having become a burden she would willingly have laid down. He said: "This time last year she was one of the brightest and happiest of mothers, with a baby only five weeks old. Four months afterwards a severe cold developed into a kind of delirium. For over two months her doctor treated her for nervousness and general debility of the system, and at the end of that time he discovered internal displacement.

"Skilled medical advice accomplished not the slightest good. She gradually sank into a depressed state, out of which it was impossible to arouse her. Change of air and scene was advised, and total freedom from worry and care. For three months she had the quietness and advantages of a country home, but even this did not rouse her. She lost interest in her two darling little children, and seemed incapable of doing anything for herself, even dreading the thought of resuming her household duties.

She fears the entire loss of her reason, and complains greatly of pain in her head, and at the top of the spine."

After much consideration Mr. Garratt undertook the case, with what success the following report from the lady herself will show:—

Mrs. MARTIN, Everton House, Bangor, co. Down.

"For the past six months I have put off from day to day writing you of my wonderful recovery, and time has really passed away far more quickly than ever I could have anticipated. Last year was so miserable and so full of mental and bodily suffering that when I look back I feel just as if it had been one long horrible dream. No words of mine could ever express to you how debilitated I was, or how completely I despaired of ever being myself again, and I even feared my mind would altogether give way.

"It was truly remarkable how quickly the improvement came about in my own case. I had not worn the appliances more than ten days when I felt decidedly better, and the benefit went steadily on. So very rapidly did I get well that by the end of three months I lent my Belt to a young lady friend who had Rheumatic Gout, and is, I fear, in consumption. She had tried every imaginable remedy, but obtained no relief, for nights together getting no sleep, and her joints aching and paining so intensely that she could not walk across the room. Before she had worn it more than a fortnight not only had the pains left her completely, but she said she felt like a new creature.

"God in His great mercy has strengthened me with a strength which has been remarkable; and, in spite of the dreadful worry connected with family matters, which I have lately passed through, I am better and more free from pain than I have been for many years.

"Your appliances have indeed been a wonderful blessing to me, and I am a living testimony to the efficacy of your Treatment."

DOCK LABOURERS at SPITALFIELDS.

THE good work done among dock labourers by the Spitalfields Gospel Mission was explained on Wednesday evening, last week, at the usual workers' meeting in the Home of Industry. There was a goodly attendance of interested friends.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN, who presided, called attention to the significance of the words, "Certainly I will be with you," printed as a motto on a card circulated in the meeting. It is recorded in Hebrews xi. that the worthies of old "obtained promises," and he counselled those who are engaged in this difficult work among dock labourers to take hold of the motto, to grasp the promise and make it their own. The promise of the motto is as true to-day as when it was originally given to Moses.

Mr. W. F. A. ARCHIBALD, an active worker in the cause, described the dock labourer, and set forth the varied efforts being made to help him. These men have no regular employment, and know no trade. They form one of the lowest strata of society, and include many who have sunk from much more exalted positions. They go to the docks, where men are employed by the day, without questions as to character, to do very rough work. There are thousands of these men in London, and a large proportion of them have fallen into their present condition through drink. Others have been the victims of "sheer misfortune," while others have fallen through sickness, or loss of character. Some have been school-masters, or gentlemen who have spent fortunes, or have been in good conditions of life. From the dock gates they too often drift to the workhouse to die in the infirmary. Invitations have been sent to them, about 200 at a time, to come to free teas, at the Spitalfields Mission; after tea the Gospel is preached to them. Being low down, having lost all hope in this world, they are predisposed to receive the message of salvation. Throughout the winter season these teas have been given, and many have been thoroughly saved. As surely as they get converted they rise in other ways: they become new men, and some way opens for them to lead happier lives. Mr. Archibald expressed a hope that some means would be devised whereby the work could be made more permanent, so that the men may be enabled to leave the scenes of wickedness and misery by which they are surrounded.

Mr. W. C. MILES, another worker, gave particulars of cases of conversion that had come under his notice. A good many of the men attributed their downfall to the reading of penny sensational papers, which made them dissatisfied with their lot, and through which they started upon lives of adventure. After turning over a new leaf, they shudder to go back to the common lodging-house; for the past few weeks many have been sleeping on hard forms in the school-room, in Hospital-place, with rags thrown over them, rather than return to their old surroundings.

Mr. WILKE gave an account of the work done in the Victoria Home, in Commercial-street, where 273 beds are let at 4d. a night, and where the necessaries of life are supplied at a cheap rate. Many men have to be turned away for want of accommodation, but the adjoining house is about to be taken to meet the pressing needs. The institution is self-supporting, and is a complete success.

Mr. JAMES SHARPLESS, superintendent of the Spitalfields Mission, spoke of the delight which the men had expressed at being able to sleep in the schoolroom. Before that arrangement was made, some of them made it a custom to retire to rest as late as one and two o'clock in the morning, and to get up at five in order that they might not be in the lodging-houses when their old acquaintances were about, cursing and blaspheming after their usual way.

The meeting having been closed, many of the friends remained to a tea and Gospel meeting, attended by about 140 dock labourers. The men seemed thoroughly to appreciate the kindness shown them.

ON PREACHING.

REV. W. B. LARK spoke of the need of the Holy Ghost in preaching, at the last monthly Conference of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission. No preacher, he said, is worth the name who does not labour from the conviction that he has a Divine call. Every preacher should retain his own individuality, studying all, but imitating none. He referred to the attempt to substitute entertainments for preaching, with a view to make religion more palatable. Christians are not sent to conciliate but to convert the world. Too high a premium is put in these days on rhetoric and mere machinery.

As to the need of the Holy Ghost, Mr. Lark dwelt forcefully upon the oft-quoted passages, "Tarry ye...until ye be endued with power from on high" (Luke xxiv. 49), and "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts i. 8). It is no fresh revelation that is needed, but old truths proclaimed with new power. The Holy Ghost is not given to save us the labour of preparation, for we are bound to give our best to the Lord. Nor is it to save us from difficulties and discouragements in doing the work. The help of the Holy Spirit is in understanding the Word, in our preparation for our work, in selecting and treating our subjects, in giving power to speak, and in accompanying the Word when spoken. In these respects we must be inspired men.

CHRISTIAN P.O. ASSOCIATION.

ON Thursday, January 19, a meeting was held at the Shaftesbury Hall, Aldersgate-street, E.C., to inaugurate the General Post-office branch of the Christian Post-office Association. Sir Arthur Blackwood, who presided, said it was now nearly thirty years since he had been led to take a Christian interest in the servants of the Post-office, long before he had ever joined their ranks, or had any idea that he would become one of them. He gave a brief, but deeply interesting sketch of the work of the London City Missionaries in the Post-office, the wide and blessed bond of the Civil Service Prayer Union, and the Association they were inaugurating to-night, started specially to suit the convenience of the Post-office officials, and to meet their special needs. The movement started by friends outside the office has begun very successfully; there are branches nearly all over London, as well as in Edinburgh, Manchester, Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, Sheffield, Portsmouth, &c. The Association is undenominational.

Special addresses on the Christian Life were given by Evan Hopkins, of Richmond; Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester: Messrs. H. Thorn, H. Maynard, and A. C. P. Coote, all overflowing with words of deep profit and power, and with earnest, glowing appeal for immediate decision for Christ and full consecration to his service. Early in the proceedings the hall was crowded with Post-office officials (of every grade in the service), and their friends, and those actively engaged in the work of the Christian Post-office Association in various parts of London. Deeply interesting it was to note the eager attention of the audience.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A neat pamphlet bearing this title is the record of good work done by the Christian Institute, Hoxton Market, N.E., showing an extensive programme of effort among the poor and needy. All sorts of cases are dealt with; their bodily needs are relieved and the Gospel is preached to them. The Mission is carried on by voluntary helpers. Though quite unsectarian the Institute is largely under the fostering care of Rev. F. Williams, pastor of Rectory-road Church, Stoke Newington, whose congregation contribute systematically to its needs, and to whom help for the poor may be sent.

PRAYER MEETING NOTES.

AT a recent meeting at Aldersgate-street, a worker told of great blessing amongst seamen in the neighbourhood of the London Docks. Amongst several incidents mentioned was the following:—A man employed in the docks, formerly a drunkard, who had been saved by the Gospel testimony at the sailors' meetings, induced a friend to occasionally attend. He had arranged to row for an amateur gold challenge cup, for which he was considered to have a good prospect of victory. On telling this to his friend in the docks he met with a very earnest remonstrance, winding up with the words "I had rather go round to that seamen's meeting than win a thousand gold cups." The young man was persuaded to accompany his friend to the meeting, where that day he found the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour. His brother was induced to attend on the Sunday following. In the after-meeting he rose and testified to the striking alteration in his brother's life during the previous week and his own desire at once to accept Christ.

On another occasion a working-man desired prayer (in fellowship with two of his mates, who, with himself, are constant attendants at the meetings, and were then present) for their foreman at the point of death, given up by the doctor. He had been so fierce and outspoken against the Gospel in life that they hardly dared to approach him in his sickness; but in answer to prayer his heart had been so softened that Christian workers had been admitted to his bedside. He seemed to be trusting Jesus, and prayer was now asked that he might leave such a testimony behind as should greatly affect the men over whom he had been placed in life.

TEMPERANCE IN BIRMINGHAM.

THE past year's record of the Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission embraces a large amount of successful effort in the four quarters of the town. Forty-one missions have taken place, comprising a total of 518 meetings, besides mothers' meetings, and the many local meetings assisted by the officals of the Mission. The meetings have been well scattered throughout the town, the following being the number held in the respective divisions:—South, 168; North, 128; West, 123; East, 99. During the summer 242 meetings were held in tents. A large number of pledges have been enrolled and visited. The testimony of the visitors is that an increasing number are faithful to their promises, and that hundreds who formerly neglected the house of God, are now regular worshippers. In many cases the whole personal and home life has been altogether changed. The churches have been stimulated to more vigorous efforts, and many are now holding regular Gospel temperance meetings.

The Police Court Agent has carried on his trying but useful work day by day, to the benefit of the many unhappy drink victims found in the cells at Moor-street. His efforts meet with the full approbation of the magistrates and police authorities. Mr. J. T. Forder, the mission agent has been very successful in the conduct of several missions in the neighbourhood of Birmingham. Gratifying testimonies have been received from ministers and others, as to the permanent nature of the work.

It is hoped that during the current year, even greater results may be achieved. Efforts will be made to secure an increased number of visitors who shall take the charge of small districts, and promptly see the newly pledged. In addition to tent meetings a number of large open-air gatherings will be held during the summer. Sunday afternoon addresses will be given in the Town Hall. The secretary of the Mission is Mr. J. M. Goodchild, Lancaster Buildings, Corporation-street.

"RADLEY'S MEETING."

ACCORDING to yearly custom, Mr. George Williams invited the members of committee and the secretaries of the various Metropolitan and Suburban Associations to a friendly Conference last week. There was a large muster of old and new friends. The opening remarks of the chairman touched upon the inestimable privilege of seeking to save young men, and the secret of success in the work, namely, abiding in Christ. The meeting was then devoted for more than two hours to a stream of testimony concerning the progress of the work in various centres. Mr. Holme spoke first of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association—the blessing that had resulted from the labours of their secretary, and the deep foreign mission interest amongst the members, one of their number having been recently accepted by the Baptist Missionary Society as a candidate for the Congo. The same speaker also testified to the work at

FINSBURY PARK.

Last year the work was in a state of great weakness, but has now mightily revived, and is most prosperous in all departments.

CLAPHAM COMMON.

Dr. Dunbar spoke of the formation of a new Association in this popular residential district, and the prospect of good success.

BRIXTON.

Mr. Swift, the hon. secretary, reported the recent appointment of a new secretary, George E. Williams (late of Peterboro', Ontario). The work is being reorganised. The members are full of zeal and expectation. Brixton Hall is rented every Sunday night for a public evangelistic meeting, which has proved most successful.

BLACKHEATH.

This branch, in this its fourth year, has moved into new premises, and not only covered all incidental expenses, but secured £160 for a furniture fund. Great blessing rests upon the spiritual work. Two of their members, Messrs. Aspinwall and Brooke, have recently gone into the foreign mission field.

FULHAM.

Established eight years; has forty-four average attendance in Sunday Bible-class; holds a special meeting every night; members distributed 46,000 tracts during the season at the American Exhibition. One American gentleman, interested by this means, amongst other gifts, has lately handed £50 to the Society towards the Building Fund, which now amounts to £480.

WOOLWICH.

LAMBETH.

The late Secretary narrated an anecdote concerning a bill of exchange which, having been transmitted to Canada for collection, was returned marked, "Acceptor deceased." By some means it was sent again, and endorsed with the further memorandum, "Acceptor still deceased." Lambeth was "still deceased," having been absorbed into the South Branch in Fentiman-road. The joint association was going ahead; Bible-class very good: open-air work well sustained; training class, literary society all in good condition. The members are about to undertake a house-to house canvass for young men.

STRATFORD.

Mr. McCall reported that the evangelistic work, of which he could personally speak, was doing well. The hall is crowded. Many infidels have been reached. Two excellent Bible-classes are held weekly.

SHOREDITCH.

By an expenditure of £600 some dirty, ill-adapted buildings have been transformed into a model association, of modest dimensions, with 230 members. Open-air work, special mission to young men, and other methods have resulted in the conversion of many young men. Their annual expenditure £350—of which £300 is guaranteed.

CROYDON.

FRENCH ASSOCIATION.

Fourth year: many trials of faith; God had answered prayer and revived their work.

GERMAN ASSOCIATION.

Last year President reported: "Consolidation; growing at the roots." This year, "extension; growing at the branches." In the East of London a German Home has been established; in the West-end a Bible-class has been maintained; a similar meeting in the north of London, at Mildmay; and now a good prospect is opening for establishing a Bible-class in Dulwich, in the south.

Dr. GLADSTONE interposed a few words, by invitation, on the Christian stand of some of the foremost scientific men. His own opinion is that the souls of men are not wanting philosophy, nor theology, but Christ.

SOUTH NORWOOD.

The Hon. Secretary reported hopefully, and closed by expressing his conviction that a Y.M.C.A. must be a spiritual success or a financial failure.

EXETER HALL.

Mr. Kennedy reported successful Sunday afternoon and evening evangelistic meetings. A string band had formed a helpful attraction: also good nightly meetings.

ALDERSGATE-STREET.

Mr. Burn spoke of the increased interests in the Gospel meetings since they had been restricted to young men. He spoke of much recent blessing, especially in connection with social meetings, both small and large.

STAFFORD ROOMS.

Mr. W. H. Mills said it was fifteen years since they had closed a financial account with a deficit. They had recently received legacies from two young members, one of £1, the other of £20. His experience was that the work of the association was never more difficult than to-day. But it is a glorious ministry, and, "having received it, and obtained mercy, we faint not."

KING'S CROSS.

Prospering spiritually: Bible-class specially encouraging; as also open-air work, under the notorious Midland arches.

The meeting was brought to a close by a brief testimony from Mr. J. HERBERT TRITTON, who said he was an intense believer in the Y.M.C.A., and his heart rejoiced at the prospect before the Association. Their common platform for all Christians is a noble feature. Briefly referring to the miracle of the lad with the five barley loaves, he compared the Association to the rank, beyond rank; to whom the workers were the distributors of the Bread of Life. The meeting was a great success.

Conference on Foreign Missions.

REV. JAS. JOHNSTON, Secretary of this Conference, writes:—"In looking back on my brief mission to America, I feel deeply impressed by a sense of the importance of this Centenary Conference on Missions. It is so evidently of God. No power but that of the Divine Spirit could have led to such unanimity as has been manifested at home, and such readiness to co-operate on the part of the societies in America. It was my privilege to address between 1500 and 2000 ministers of all denominations, at different meetings in the principal cities of the U.S.A. and Canada; and the unanimity and earnestness manifested were the best evidence of the presence and power of the Spirit of God. Seventy-five societies are now combined in this great movement. That there are so many divisions is a cause for regret. That they are all united in the desire to meet in brotherly conference, with a view to combined and harmonious action in the future is a ground of thankfulness and hope. Let the whole Church unite in prayer that the Spirit may be given to those who are arranging for the meetings, and that a great blessing may attend them."

MARGATE Y.M.C.A.—There has been an increase in the attendance at the devotional meeting and Bible-class held weekly. The Bible-class has been doubled in four weeks. Prayer is asked for the outbreak of a converting work of grace. The usual classes, &c., are all in a promising condition.

J. M. PAMMENT, Secretary.

Y.M.C.A., BRISTOL.—Mr. Thomas Jameson, who has for nearly ten years occupied the position of secretary of this Association, has now accepted a similar post in Liverpool. A farewell meeting was held on the 19th inst., at which were manifested the warmest feelings of goodwill. J. S. Fry, Esq., the President, presided, and spoke very highly of the work which Mr. Jameson had been permitted to do. Mr. and Mrs. Jameson were then presented with a handsome clock, a pair of bronze ornaments, and a purse containing £55. Mr. Rayner, from Weston-super-Mare, who is to fill Mr. Jameson's place, received a hearty welcome.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S WORK.—1.

BY REV. JOHN E. LINNELL.

AWAY down in the country, some of our village folk will be thanking God, at the prayer-meeting to-night, that their Sabbath has already begun. But little is there here to suggest that the Sabbath is even nigh. Rather does the constant "whizz" of countless vehicles in the road, and the ceaseless tramp of the thousands of people who throng the pavements on either side, remind one of that "troubled sea," which the prophet says "cannot rest."

"The Assembly Hall" is well filled, and no one can grudge a "God-speed" to Mr. Charrington, who realises that but for this counter-attraction, which he supplies through Professor Malden, numbers of those who are so thoroughly enjoying the Professor's lecture and magic lantern would have probably been spending their Saturday night in the curse-laden atmosphere of the public-house, or amid the demoralising influences of the music-hall.

But certain soul-cravings that have been created by the remembrance of the prayer-meeting at home refuse to be satisfied here, and so I pass on to the Y.M.C.A. room to find myself at one of the most delightful gatherings of God's people I have been privileged to join for many a day. The holy enthusiasm that prevails soon thaws the frost I have felt in my heart, and I get warmed up for the self-imposed task that still lies before me. I loathe the idea, but I have determined to see to-night what the music-hall is like; and oh, what a contrast! Numbers too are here, greater numbers than I have left behind me in "The Assembly Hall," for the place is crowded from end to end, civilians and soldiers, women and men, they seem to be sitting in such endless rows that the eye grows weary of looking at them; nor, as I listen to the continual popping of corks, and watch the movements of the busy waiters, do I wonder that the young ex-brewer still wages a war of extermination against all such dangerous places. But I cannot resist a growing conviction that his determined efforts to grapple with such evils have begun to tell even here; and when, after a ten minutes' sojourn in the place, I seek the open air again, I feel more convinced than ever that the labours of himself and his noble fellow-workers have been blest with a greater measure of success than many have believed.

Before I finish this, I must just say a word about the Sabbath services. Most cheering, indeed, is this of the morning; but the sight of "The Hall" to-night is one that memory must retain for ever. A chorus of Mr. Sankey's breaks on the ear like the roar of the sea, and partly prepares one for what is before him; but who would have expected to see such an assembly as this? The dullest of preachers, with life in his soul, would be fired to enthusiasm here. But no dull preacher is Charles Inglis; he grasps the attention of the thousands before him, and holds it till, with the solemn poem, he finishes an address of some fifty minutes, and hurries off to the inquiry-room, to which several anxious souls are soon seen following him.

> Gone, gone, gone;
> And the bell tolls solemnly slow,

It is a question with many heads of churches, "How shall we get the people to us?" Here, to-night, it is rather a question of getting them away, for singing, praying, and encouraging each other with appropriate texts of Scripture, it is not till the clock strikes ten that, keeping step to the music, they strike up the chorus, "Homeward," and leave "The Hall" for home.

Pavenham Vicarage, Bedford.

BALLYCLARE Y.M.C.A., CO. ANTRIM.—This Association has been much benefited by the recent visit of the travelling secretary for Ireland, Mr. R. McCann. Meetings have been held for sixteen days, and much blessing was given. The children's meetings were especially interesting.

A MISSION AT BRIXTON.

A TWELVE days' mission is being held by well-known members of the Evangelisation Society, at Immanuel Church, West Brixton, of which Rev. Aubrey C. Price is the minister.

Much blessing has been manifest at the meetings during last week, under the teaching of Capt. Carey Brenton, R.N., Gen. Anderson, R.A., Messrs. J. H. Lydall, and William Taylor. Souls have been saved, and Christians stirred up to renewed zeal, and love for the Lord.

An interesting innovation has been adopted. Some twenty or thirty friends have banded themselves together, and, lighted by Chinese lanterns, go forth half an hour before the services into the surrounding streets, singing and giving invitations to all to come and hear the good news of salvation.

The South London Evangelistic Choir is greatly adding to the success and enjoyment of the mission by its sweet singing before each meeting, and in leading the hymns in the services.

REV. J. H. TAYLOR IN HASTINGS.

IT is not long since we noted the increase of spiritual blessing in Hastings and St. Leonard's. The quickening received by many, on the occasion of the mission held by Mr. Meyer, abides. And now again special "times of refreshing" have come through the visit of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission. It was the happy thought of Mr. J. Barnabas Bain, the evangelist, to invite him. He also took the responsibility of all the arrangement for meetings, thus relieving Mr. Taylor of that heavy item, an example worthy of imitation. Signal service of this important work in China could be rendered in the same way by many in different towns.

Meetings were held on Thursday afternoon and evening, last week, at which accounts of the work of the China Inland Mission were given. On Friday afternoon and evening the subject was "The Christian Life," and these gatherings were occasions of great blessing. The word was spoken in much simplicity and with great directness and power. The night services were in the large public hall. At some of the meetings many were unable to get in. On the following Lord's Day Mr. Taylor preached three times to large audiences.

In narating how, a year ago they had begun praying for a hundred workers to be sent out during last year, he gave some interesting details. Each of the bands had been able to report conversions on the voyage. Interwoven in all Mr. Taylor's teaching were two vital thoughts too much ignored by most teachers. The one was that in consecration, whatever position we take before God, God will test, and test by trial. The other thought was the solemn one that in the churches are many self-deceived people, who, though full of religious work, yet, because they are not doing "the will of the Father in heaven," are lost, and will have an awful awakening when Jesus comes (Matt. vii. 22, 23).

TOTTENHAM.—A good work has been carried on at Westerfield Hall, by Messrs. Eastty and Myerson, for the last two years. God has greatly blessed the preaching and singing. The services are looked forward to, and well attended. E. J. BRAY.

Y.M.C.A., AMPTHILL (BEDS.).—At the twelfth annual meeting recently held, Rev. W. Hay Aitken delivered an address. He conducted a very successful mission in the Parish Church last October, and therefore attracted a large audience. A peculiar merit, he said, of the Y.M.C.A. is that all denominations can meet together. We might be wrong in our theories, ideas, and convictions, but could never be in love. By mixing with those who differed from us our grasp of truth was strengthened, and our view of truth widened, resulting in our charity being broadened. Our need is more aggressive Christianity.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THE fourteenth anniversary of the work at Malden Hall brought together a good company of friends on the afternoon of Thursday, January 19, for praise, prayer, and exhortation. Mr. C. Russell Hurditch expressed gratitude to God for the progress of the work during the past year, at the same time remarking on the losses which had been sustained by the removal of old and valued friends. Several brethren engaged in prayer, after which Mr. W. R. Lane read and commented on Matt. xi. 20, &c. Mr. Charles Inglis followed with a concise address on the four promises contained in Isa. xliii. 1—4. Mr. Robert Paton remarked that the longer he lived the more he felt that the most important thing was not the grasp which we have of truth, but the grasp the truth has of us.

At the close of the afternoon meeting a large number of friends sat down to tea, and the evening meeting was resumed in the hall at seven o'clock. Mr. Robson and Mr. Bateman gave cheering statements of the continued progress of the work at Malden Hall, especially rejoicing in the harmony which prevailed among the workers in the various departments. The mission services, conducted by Mr. Connor in November, had been followed by cheering results.

Dr. McKilliam, in a very happy and pointed address, drew some striking lessons from the invitation to retirement which our Lord gives to his disciples in Mark vi. 30, 31. Mr. James L. Stanley read 1 Kings xix. 9—12, and offered a few words of encouragement to workers who might be cast down in their service because of apparent failure. Mr. George Hucklesby commented briefly on Ps. l. 5, "Gather My saints together unto Me," referring to the present gathering of his people to Him, and the future gathering at his coming. Mr. Finlay Gibson made some spirited remarks on a few passages from the Epistle to the Colossians, in which he believed we might find something suited to all the errors of the present day. A happy and profitable evening was brought to a close with singing and prayer.

GOSPORT.—An evangelistic service was held last week, on board the Herald of Mercy, lying in the Bursledon river for repairs, ere she leaves for Plymouth, for her campaign among seamen. Several speakers gave addresses, and some were much moved by Mr. Cook's description of the conversion of seamen, and of the marvellous work done in various ports and roadsteads in England and France.

AGED POOR.—The annual social gathering of the inmates of the Homes in Wallerton-road, Minford Gardens and St. George's-road, was recently given. Sixty-nine, of various ages, met in St. Johns Hall, Prince's-road, Notting-hill. After an excellent tea, Rev. W. E. Emmet, vicar of St. Mark's, and Rev. Dr. Thornton, vicar of St. John's, Notting-hill, gave addresses. Several friends supplied the musical part of the evening's enjoyment. Each guest received a present in the shape of some article of clothing.

KENSAL TOWN.—The opening of a new hall in connection with the Gospel Mission, Kensal Town, took place on Monday afternoon, January 16, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding. The hall will hold 500 people, and is in the midst of a working-class population. Mr. A. B. Stoney, one of the trustees, gave a short account of the commencement and growth of the work, telling how, through blessing received during three consecutive summers in tent meetings, the workers had been led to desire a permanent building. After some cheering words from the chairman, Miss Thompson described the various branches of work in connection with the Mission. Mr. C. C. M. Baker, the treasurer, Rev. W. Mitchell Carruthers, Pastor Frank White, Mr. Reader Harris, Mr. George Hanbury, and others, followed. In the evening over 300 gathered to tea, and a soul-saving time followed. On Tuesday there was a tea for the members of the Kensal Christian Band, who help largely in the work, and on Wednesday 350 men, mostly out of work, were gathered to tea, followed by a bright Gospel meeting.

"FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH."

AFTER describing a severe outbreak of cholera from which they have been suffering at Ranee Khet, the military sanatorium situated on one of the spurs of the Himalayas, at which he is stationed, Rev. G. M. Bulloch narrates the following touching story of a young English soldier:—

For a time, the cholera only affected the natives, but ultimately it spread to the European troops stationed in what is called 'The Standing Camp,' where the men are entirely under canvas the whole season. One of the first to be stricken was Private Rose, of the 17th Lancers, who was a member of our Soldiers' Bible-class, a Baptist by religious persuasion, and an earnest and devoted Christian young man, much admired and respected by his comrades. Another member of my Bible-class, Gunner Ridge, hearing of his friend's illness, besought most earnestly to be allowed to attend upon his friend, and was at last permitted to do so; but it was only for a couple of days that he was able to do so, for the fell disease also took hold of dear, devoted Ridge—for he, too, was an earnest and true Christian, never ashamed to witness for the Saviour. He and Rose both lingered for a few days, and sometimes we had hopes that they might recover; but it was not to be. The Master had higher service for them, though we thought there was lots of work for them here, and that they were just the men for it.

Ridge, on the last day of his illness, took his Bible out from below his pillow (a rather unusual thing, I am sorry to say, for sick soldiers in hospital, at least so far as my experience goes), and said to his attendant: 'If you were taken ill as I was, would you be ready to die?' His comrade, with tears in his eyes, replied: 'No, I am afraid not; I wish I was.' Then in a sort of half-conscious state, Ridge said to him: 'I am going to be with Jesus; take my Bible, and read it, and it will show you how to get there too.' Soon after he passed away quite peaceably. His body was wrapped in his military blanket, and carried to the forest close by, where we buried it beneath the waving plumes of the pines, to the sweet but mournful music of the sighing of the wind through the branches of the pine trees. The bodies of those who died had to be buried quietly and quickly, in order not to increase the panic.

To show how much Ridge's conduct was admired, I quote the following honourable mention from Station Orders, which appeared the other day:—"Of these three men" (three men out of twenty-one are specially noticed for their unceasing care and attention to their stricken comrades), "Gunner Ridge, R/3, R.A., lost his life through devotion to a dying comrade, Private Rose, 17th Lancers. This young soldier, when actually seized with symptoms of cholera, still stuck to his post, and more, concealed those symptoms, lest he should be sent away from his dying friend. The officers of the various regiments and corps at this station will be glad to do honour to the memory of Gunner Ridge. A monument will be erected over his grave, and a tablet placed in the church."—L.M.S. Chronicle.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS. — On Monday week, January 16, the Society, as usual, invited its London friends to commemorate its foundation by a devotional meeting, in the offices, at Buckingham-street, Strand. Sir Robert Phayre presided. Rev. Horace W. Townsend said the work of the Society has been actively carried forward during the past year. Access to Roman Catholics is increasing day by day in, perhaps, every branch of the Mission, notably in the city of Dublin, and there is cause for special gratitude, owing to the unusually large numbers who were last year called out of darkness into light, and that there had been so many fresh openings for mission work in all parts of Ireland. Prayer was offered by Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and C. A. Fox, and General Haig.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. E. J. Mather, Founder and Director of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

At the meeting last week of the Council of the Baptist Union the resignation of Mr. Spurgeon was unanimously accepted. A special meeting is to be held in February to consider Mr. Spurgeon's proposal of a doctrinal basis on similar lines to that of the Evangelical Alliance.

It would be a very salutary lesson to wine-bibbers, if they only knew the exact composition of the liquors which they consume. The British Consul at La Rochelle has recently issued an official report, from which it appears that a very large proportion of the "French brandy" imported by us is, in reality, only a concoction distilled from the potato. This spirit is manufactured very cheaply in Germany, whence it is shipped to Bordeaux, and exported from the Cognac district to England, where it is sold as the "finest French brandy," at a profit of some 600 or 700 per cent. It is remarkable that all who take part in the iniquity of the liquor traffic invariably become utterly demoralised, and prepared to pander to the lowest forms of fraud. No one having a regard for his own true welfare should have any dealings with this unholy traffic, which has, alas! so often accomplished the ruin of the unwary.

We hear that a project is on foot to send up the Congo vessels laden with fiery spirits, and that German authorities will do nothing to prevent the nefarious traffic. German merchants have waited till the natives could barter through the civilising influence of Christianity, and then rush in to spoil the work of the missionaries. We offer our profoundest sympathy to the Baptist Society. We do not wonder that the matter is seriously troubling the Committee. Is not this an occasion for English opinion to make itself heard?

Mr. Henry Varley writes to us from Cape Town, dated Dec. 28, that his chest weakness has been much relieved by the voyage. He speaks with pardonable enthusiasm, after leaving the London fogs, of the beauties of nature, and the balmy atmosphere of the Cape at this season, and thinks that the change to such a clime would benefit many home-bound invalids. He hoped to sojourn in the colony for some weeks before proceeding further south; this would enable him to visit Kimberley, in the region of the diamond fields, as well as to revisit places where he has formerly laboured in the Gospel.

The census returns of the unemployed in London recently taken through the enterprise of the Waterbury Watch Company have been analysed and tabulated by a firm of City accountants. Two facts are stated to have been clearly established—that almost all expressed willingness to accept relief work, and that the bulk of the unemployed are Londoners and not new-comers from the country. About half of the 17,700 registered are described as "labourers"; this points to the great necessity for paying larger attention to technical education in our elementary schools, so that every boy, if possible, may have a practical acquaintance with some useful handicraft.

☞ Will our correspondent Miss (or Mrs.) A. J. Crookshank kindly send to us full address.

Mr. Denham Smith continues to lie in much the same state, but this week has brought him increasing difficulties as to food and rest, which are gradually telling on the little strength that remains.

A wonderful story well told is Miss Gordon-Cumming's narrative of Rev. W. H. Murray's Mission to the 500,000 Blind of China. Whether we regard the persistent courage and earnest godliness of the missionary, the revelation made to him of a method of teaching the blind to read, and the patience and ingenuity with which it was studied and applied; or, on the other hand, the difficulties to be overcome, the degraded condition of the blind people, and the glorious success which has attended his labours, we have before us one of the most prosaic yet romantic stories of missionary enterprise. "Work for the Blind in China" is published by Messrs. Gilbert & Rivington, St. John's House, Clerkenwell-road, E.C., 2s. per dozen, with extra postage, 4½d. for one and 7½d. for three dozen. It will be doing good service in many ways to circulate it widely.

Our grumbling propensities often find vent in complaints as to the fickleness and unhealthiness of our winter climate. Comparing our lot in this respect with that of dwellers in some other countries, we ought rather to be profoundly thankful. We know nothing of the terrible "blizzards" that periodically afflict the far Western States, and one of which has recently caused the death of over two hundred persons, many of them children, who were caught in the storm on the way home from school, and met a sudden fate. Monday's papers tell of several deaths in Hungary from the attacks of wolves, grown bold by the excessive rigour of the season. When we are tempted to repine at what we have to suffer, let us rather think of what a kind Providence has preserved us from.

It cannot excite surprise in relation to the late Islington meeting of evangelical clergy that a desire should find a voice in The Record for shorter papers and more practical subjects. Are not theological treatises, which have to be read over twice before their meaning is got at, altogether unsuitable for our modern conferences? When men travel long distances to attend a meeting where they expect a free interchange of ideas on the duties they owe to the times, it is disappointing that long papers should be read, which, instead of opening the way to discussion, attempt to be exhaustive, and are (as we are told some were at Islington) "inexpressibly wearisome."

The Times lately published a most interesting notice of the life and habits of "the Peculiar people." The leading tenet of their creed is absolute disbelief in the efficacy of medical skill, founded on an interpretation of Scripture which has on more than one occasion brought them into collision with the law. Apart from this peculiarity, they appear in every way to be most estimable people. Although they are all poor labourers, they never allow a member of their body to become chargeable to the parish; their family life is irreproachable; they never touch alcoholic drinks, and are scrupulously clean and neat. It is further stated that no member of their sect has ever had to answer a charge in a court of justice, except for neglecting to obtain medical help for the sick. Their mode of worship and practical Christian habits recall the days of primitive apostolic Christianity, and remarkable cases of faith-healing have been reported among them. Whatever may be thought of their tenets, they cannot but inspire admiration and respect by their willingness to undergo obloquy and imprisonment for the sake of their honest convictions.

Every member of the British and Foreign, and of all other Bible Societies, and, indeed, all who believe in the wide dissemination of the Scriptures as one of the most effective agencies for evangelising the world, must be intensely interested in a pamphlet entitled, "The World-wide Distribution of the Word of God" (J. F. Shaw & Co. 3d.), just issued by Rev. John Wilkinson. Its facts are chiefly derived from the report of the above-named Society, and are expressed with warm appreciation of its invaluable work. But it is clearly shown that this and all other agencies fall lamentably short of the fulfilment of the purpose for which they exist—that of supplying every human being who can read it with the Word of God in his own language.

The subjects treated are (1) The needs of the world; (2) To what extent supplied; (3) The methods employed; (4) The methods suggested. One chief feature is an examination and a signal refutation of the argument that selling the Scriptures is far preferable to giving them away. And in more than one instance the very reverse of some current statements is shown to be the truth. We shall return to the subject, which is of the highest importance. Meanwhile we urge our readers to possess themselves of Mr. Wilkinson's contribution to the discussion which he has thus ably inaugurated.

The lengthy report of the Commission upon the New South Wales liquor traffic contains some interesting and suggestive information. During the decade from 1876 to 1886, there has been a slight decrease in the consumption of wine and spirits, but an increase in that of beer: yet, for all that, the United Kingdom consumes more than twice as much beer per head as the Colony. The sum spent in liquor during 1886 is estimated at £4,634,000, or £4 14s. 6d. per head of the population—which proportion, however, the Commissioners congratulate themselves, is less than that of Victoria and Queensland. With regard to the percentage of crime caused by drink, the estimates of the witnesses varied, some putting it at 75 per cent., and others, e.g., the chaplain of one gaol and the governor of another, placing it as high as 90 per cent! The amount of lunacy traceable to this source is reckoned by the Commissioners at 12 or 14 per cent., but one of the witnesses gave it as his opinion that three out of every five cases of insanity were due to excessive drinking. These figures speak for themselves.

The New South Wales beer and spirits, it also appears from this same report, are composed largely of fusel oil. The Commissioners therefore recommend the infliction of a heavy penalty upon anyone selling liquor thus adulterated, the second offence to be punished by forfeiture of the license. It is also advised that several months' residence in some retreat or asylum for inebriates should be substituted for the usual drunkard's sentence of seven or fourteen days' imprisonment. As a further means of restricting the traffic it is also proposed that not more than one liquor license to every eighty electors shall be permitted; this recommendation certainly does not err on the side of stringency, and indeed throughout the report the nettle seems to be stroked with a tender hand. It is to be noted that Sunday closing is compulsory throughout the Colony, but, especially in Sydney, the law is habitually transgressed or evaded. Local Option has also been tried, but, owing almost entirely, it would seem, to the apathy of the population, has not proved very successful. Let the English people, however, once obtain this power, and they would rapidly set the men of New South Wales a wholesome example in the application of it.

The New York Independent relates the following testimony:—

> The Pundita Ramabai, who has been visiting Boston, who has more lately been with Miss Willard, at Evanston, Ill., and who is preparing to return to India to engage in teaching high caste Indian women, does not find it easy here to tell what denomination she belongs to. A reporter asked the question, and she answered:—
> "I belong to the universal Church of Christ. I meet good Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians and Presbyterians, and each one tells me something different about the Bible. So it seems to me better to go there myself and find the best I can. And there I find Christ the Saviour of the world, and to Him I give my heart. I was baptized when in England and I commune with all Christian people who will allow me to do so. I do not profess to be of any particular denomination, for I would go back to India simply as a Christian. To my mind it appears that the New Testament, and especially the words of our Saviour, are a sufficiently elaborate creed. I believe as the Saviour has told us, and his message through John has come to us, that God is a spirit, is light, and love; in his threefold nature He creates, illuminates, and pervades the universe; that Jesus, his Son and servant, the Apostle of our faith, was sent by Him to be the Saviour and leader of his children; that as many as believe on Him have the right to be the sons of God, and that the Holy Spirit is our Guide and Comforter, the great gift of God through Christ; that there is but one Church, and that all who acknowledge Jesus as their Saviour are members of that Church. I believe that whatever is needed for my salvation will be given me, and I pray earnestly that God may grant me the grace to be a seeker and follower of truth and a doer of his will....I am simply a Christian, and the New Testament teaches me my religion."

The Pundita appears to us to be one of those who are willing to do the will of God, and to whom, according to the promise, shall be made known the doctrine of the Christ.

The following extract from Lord Robert Montagu's recent pamphlet, "Scylla or Charybdis: Which?" illustrates rather startlingly how history repeats itself:—

> In the year 1687 there was a very great conspiracy which had proceeded from a small beginning and had grown rapidly every year. It was utterly unknown to the nation, and was suspected only by a few of the longest-headed and most far-seeing, and if they ever spoke of it they incurred ridicule and were thought to have a craze....In England there was an endeavour to introduce by degrees into the Church of England the ritual and practices and doctrines of the Church of Rome, and to favour a movement for reunion with the Church of Rome.

Do not these words accurately describe the insidious disease which has for the last fifty years been gradually eating into the vitals of the Established Church, and the treatment meted out in press, on platform, and in ordinary conversation, to those who have correctly diagnosed the complaint, and have in vain tried to awaken the patient to a sense of her danger? For example, only a few days ago a weekly critical paper superciliously dismissed this pamphlet as "not to be taken seriously."

Patriotic Italians are greatly perplexed at the effusive remarks of certain English newspapers on the occasion of the Pope's Jubilee, which have been widely circulated in the Peninsula by Papal journals; meantime the Jesuits are "straining every nerve to win England for the Pope, and felicitate themselves that the English are running into the net spread for them."

As Miss Finkelstein has taken legal action against the proprietors of The British Weekly our note of last week might be taken as prejudging or prejudicing the case. This is not our wish. We sincerely and deeply regret that a question of fact between Christians should be carried into a court of law; but as this is so, we can only hope that it may be thoroughly sifted, and that the truth may be made manifest.

Do any of the playgoers who at this season crowd to witness the gorgeous stage spectacles upon which immense sums have been lavished, ever think of the bitter contrast between the brilliant scenes before them and the wretched home-surroundings of many of the gaily-bedecked figures when the spangles and tinsel are off? Do they ever consider that, in order to furnish them with amusement, children of the tenderest age are often subjected to a morally poisonous atmosphere, where they, all too early, see vice tricked out in attractive garb? Eighteen hundred years ago, in the crowded amphitheatre, human beings were "butchered to make a Roman holiday." Is professedly Christian England free from the guilt of purchasing some of its amusement at the price of childhood's purity and innocence?

The startling pictures of starving workmen and thriving "sweaters" lately drawn by Mr. Burnett and others, have elicited a reply from the London Jewish Tailors' Benefit Society, and the Tailors' Mutual Association, wherein it is stated that no Jews are employed in that branch of the trade which has been singled out for special criticism. They imply that high rates of wages are the rule rather than the exception in the "trousers and vest trade." Which of the conflicting statements is right is not for us to decide; but whatever may be the exact state of the case in some particular branch of trade, there is only too abundant evidence that vast numbers of the poorer classes are in the deepest distress, and these representations must not be allowed to weaken or suspend any of the efforts being made for its alleviation.

Much has been said and written about the evils of "sweating" in London; but it may be doubted whether the system has not "deeper depths" still in Germany. In 1885 the German Parliament ordered an inquiry into the wages of the women employed in the sewing and dressmaking industries of that country, and the information thus collected, much of which has been summarised by the American Consul at Barmen, shows an amount of misery which is appalling. The wages paid to seamstresses, it appears, are so low that, though a poor girl may work twelve hours a day, she cannot, unless she have some family support to fall back upon, earn sufficient to provide herself with the commonest necessaries. When it is stated that, according to the estimate of the Berlin Trade Council, bare food and a place in which to sleep alone cost 8s. 6d. per week, and that in some branches of work only the most skilful dressmaker can earn 8s. or 9s. a week, and an inexperienced one only 4s. or 5s., for a season of four or five months, is it matter for surprise that, as is unhappily proved to be the case, the ranks of the "friendless and fallen" should be largely recruited from this class? Cannot some of the money which nations so lavishly spend upon perfecting torpedoes, guns, and other destructive engines of war be spared for the more righteous cause of bettering the welfare of their toiling subjects?

A correspondent of The Bristol Times and Mirror adverts to a phase of the Sunday labour question which is deserving of attention—viz., Sunday funerals. The writer says that he has been in the employ of a funeral-carriage proprietor for ten years, during which period he has been unable to attend a place of worship more than nine times, Sunday being the day in which his employer does the most business with his horses. He aptly remarks that "it is no use calling upon undertakers or funeral-carriage proprietors to stop Sunday traffic as long as the cemetery gates keep open." In many towns Sunday afternoon is a favourite time for interment; but, apart from other considerations, in the interests of a body of men who are as much entitled to a day's rest as others, it is to be wished that burial boards and corporations would abolish the practice. In some places this has already been done, with a manifest gain to the cause of Sabbath quiet and order. Now that the Saturday half-holiday is general, the plea that week-day funerals entail the loss of half a day's wage, and that Sunday is the only available day, has lost most of its force.

The Romanising tendencies of the German Government are calculated to arouse considerable fears in the minds of thorough-going Protestants. An exceedingly objectionable feature is the wholesale appointment of Roman Catholic officials in Protestant districts. It appears that these officials form a nucleus for Romish congregations, and that in course of time their churches and chapels are actually erected in districts where the idolatrous worship was formerly scarce known by hearsay. In a country like Germany, where officialism is supreme, this system of sending men of an alien creed is exceptionally objectionable, and we are glad to note that serious protest has been raised against it in the German press.

The Indian Government is trying to solve a scholastic puzzle of its own construction. It appears that one result of the recent extension of education has been to develop in the rising generation of India "tendencies favourable to irreverence," and consequently it has become difficult to maintain discipline or morality in the Government colleges and schools. Such a result of the official attitude of entire neutrality or indifference in matters of religion need surprise no one. The teacher without any religious code or standard to which he may appeal, in order to enforce his authority, soon finds himself at sea in a rudderless ship. It is, therefore gravely proposed to arm him with "a moral text-book, based on the fundamental principles of natural religion." But how, it may be asked, is such a text-book to be compiled out of the conflicting religions of India, each with its own special standard of "morality"? Such an ill-tempered weapon, even if it can be forged, will but break in the teacher's hands.

Parliament will reopen early in February, and then, we are glad to learn, an attempt will be made to constitute a Purity Section in the House of Commons. Its success will depend upon the definiteness and practicability of the objects adopted by the promoters of the scheme as the basis of such a section. In the House of Commons, and elsewhere in the region of practical politics, every object must have its practicability demonstrated before it can gain adherents. The chief difficulty in the way of those who propose to form this section is the want of one simple defined object, attainable by legislation. It is surely not a hard task to find it. When we suggested in these columns a short time ago that a Purity Section might be formed, we did so because we saw the importance of keeping together in active unity all the forces, both in and out of the House of Commons, which carried the repeal of the C. D. Acts. It is certain that any Purity Section must consist in the main of repealers.

This indicates the direction in which to prosecute future work. It should complete the work of repeal. It should seek to extirpate the legislative patronage of vice in every place where Government control exists. The C. D. Acts and their iniquitous concomitants exist in India, and linger hesitatingly in some of our Crown colonies, such as Fiji, and Hong Kong. A resolution condemning the maintenance of the system in India will, we believe, be moved in the House of Commons next session. The first object of the Purity Section should be to support and carry that resolution. After consultation with wise and prudent men of great political experience, a plan for the future can be formulated. Immense advantage will accrue to the Purity movement, and to the whole political world, if such a section be formed. But its immediate energies should be directed to the extinction of the system of licensing vice in India and the colonies.

It seems hopeless to expect that our police authorities will take any steps towards cleansing the foul spot in Western London which is nightly the scene of a pandemonium of flaunting vice. The supineness of the police lays an additional responsibility on the shoulders of the Christian citizens of the Metropolis. We rejoice that a Vigilance and Rescue Committee has been appointed specially to deal with this black business. The aims of the Committee are—

> (1) To make every effort to bring to justice those vicious persons who break the law, or who haunt the district with a view to tempt or entrap the young or foolish; (2) To prevent the young from falling into the temptations thus offered, by sending out workers who will offer them friendly warning, counsel, and assistance, as need arises; and (3) To rescue those who have fallen, and to establish a refuge or shelter on the spot, in which women who are willing to abandon their vicious courses may be at once received and kept from danger until satisfactory provision can be made for them elsewhere.

If this programme is energetically and persistently carried out, we may hope for some improvement, but we need preventive as well as, if not more than, reclamatory action, and we trust the Purity Section of the House of Commons, referred to above, will espouse the cause of the West-enders who feel the stigma that is now cast upon them.

Londoners are being favoured, at the expense of the provinces, in the advent of some excellent men to Nonconformist pulpits in the city and suburbs. The congregations of the Rev. F. B. Meyer (from Leicester) at Regent's Park, Rev. E. D. Braimbridge (from Portsea) at Stroud Green, and Rev. Evan Thomas (from Cinderford) at Victoria Park, will not be subjected to anything like "Down-Grade" teaching. We only hope their places will be adequately filled at the churches they have left.

Dr. John Brown, in his Introduction to the Library Edition of "Grace Abounding" (Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.), gives prominence to the fact that the few outward events mentioned in Bunyan's narrative are simply given as throwing light on that inner life of the soul which is to him the one great reality of all:—

> He lived through those memorable years when the constitutional liberties of England were trembling in the balance; he heard the boom of cannon when appeal was made to the wager of battle; saw the dashing charge of Rupert's dragoons and the deadly onset of Cromwell's ironsides. Yet all these things, important as they were, have scarcely left a trace on the life-story he has given to us. External scenes and circumstances have only interest for him as they bear upon internal conflicts and victories. There is a far-off look in his eyes, and he scarcely sees the figures in the foreground. The struggle between Charles and his parliament is for him as though it were not, for his soul is fixed in one long concentrated gaze upon that other struggle which is the one conflict of all the ages, the struggle between darkness and light, between the man and his temptations, between Satan and God.

This is the Pauline method of autobiography. How rare it is in other men! Yet how excellent a plan would it be for each of us to give its true significance and value to the inner over the outer life. That is a grand title of old Peter Sterry's sermon, "The Rise, Race, and Royalty of the Kingdom of God in the Soul of Man."

It is so far agreeable to learn that the projected renewal of diplomatic relations between Great Britain and the Papal See are pretty certain to fall through for lack of a common agreement between the parties. But our satisfaction on this score is somewhat damped by the discovery of a Papal plot in connection with the system of elementary education in this country. Strenuous efforts are to be made, we are told, during the approaching session of Parliament, to secure such an alteration of the system as will place all denominational schools on an equality with the Board schools in the receipt of State support. This, of course, means that Romanists and their Anglican allies would be enabled to propagate their peculiar tenets among the young at the expense of the nation. We should hope it is only necessary to state the fact of such a plot to ensure its utter and ignominious failure.

Seldom has the machinery of our Metropolitan Police Courts been put to better use than that to which Mr. Montagu Williams, the Greenwich Stipendiary, is now applying it in the relief of the unemployed poor of that neighbourhood. Distress is specially prevalent within his jurisdiction, he says, in a letter to The Times, and he has resolved to devote the three days a week, when he is not sitting as a magistrate, to the investigation and relief of deserving cases. This mingling of mercy with justice is a pleasant thing not always found in such surroundings, and we trust Mr. Williams will be well supported in his new function.

Several noteworthy decisions have recently been given from the judicial bench. The churchwarden at Netley, who sought to exclude Reformatory boys from the parish church is successfully baulked in his intent by a highly satisfactory and common-sense judgment from Mr. Justice Stephen. The attempt to ostracise these unfortunate boys was surely a most discreditable one on the part of any official connected with a Christian institution. In giving judgment Mr. Justice Stephen well remarked:—

> As a general rule, the difficulty is to get people to go to church, not to keep them out of it. The fact of a boy being in a reformatory is no reason to keep him away from church; rather the reverse indeed. It seems to me very unfortunate that this dispute should have arisen at all, and especially that it should have taken the form of excluding boys from church.

This spirit of exclusiveness, and the erection of artificial barriers between rich and poor, has much to answer for in alienating the masses from the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and we cannot but rejoice in the discomfiture of this ill-advised churchwarden.

Another decision, on a different subject, is equally gratifying. A Welsh lady destroyed or defaced some grossly indecent posters in Llandudno, and, when sued for damage, paid twenty shillings into court. The jury decided that she had done as much as the justice of the case required; but an appeal was lodged. This appeal has been decisively dismissed by the Divisional High Court, with the expression of an opinion that the action of the righteously indignant lady was not unwarranted. Surely, however, it ought not to be left to the irregular action of individuals to conserve the morals of the people. We have ample cause in London to complain of the laxity of the authorities in dealing with indecent posters. Our laws bearing on the subject seem to be in abeyance, or there is no one authorised to set them in motion. We wish some British Anthony Comstock would arise.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—Rev. George Wilson, of Canonbury, has been appointed Literary Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Mr. Wilson is the minister of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Church-road, Canonbury, N., and is well known for his earnest Christian spirit, and high literary culture.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Rev. C. A. Fox, of Eaton Chapel, presided at the Bible-reading held there on Thursday evening, last week. His address was greatly enjoyed by the students; it was based on Phil. iv., and was spiritual and practical. A prayer-meeting and Bible-reading is held at the College (58, St. George's-road, S. W.) every Saturday at noon.

SEAMEN IN ROUEN.—According to statistics recently published, some 15,000 British seamen annually visit Rouen. Friends there have started a Mission and Reading-room, which is open every night. The Mission premises, now in course of erection, will be a very great boon to the port. The work is entirely undenominational.

ROBERT A. CROSS.

BATH CABMEN'S MISSION.—On January 16 about 150 cabmen, bath chairmen, and grooms, were entertained to a meat tea, by Mrs. Skinner, in the Mission Hall, St. James's. An earnest Gospel address was afterwards delivered by their missionary, Charlie Smith, who gave an account of his own conversion. The Rector of the church and Miss Skinner, the author of "The Friendly Letters," also spoke. Marked attention was shown throughout.

PARIS.—In our days, rebuking prophets are not stoned, but ridiculed and jeered. This is what has happened to M. de Pressensé, who lately raised his voice at Lyons against the publication of immoral literature; but he has the support and best wishes of all Christian patriots.—Le Signal.

A SATCHEL OF SONG.

The pauses in a busy life Mr. Fox has once more filled with heartful music.[*] We see him on this occasion in, if not a new, at least an unwonted dress. The little volume is made up of a number of sonnets, a somewhat lengthy poem in English heroics, and a still lengthier one in blank verse.

Of the sonnets, probably the finest of all in its truthfulness, as well as its nobility of form and its richness of fancy, is the "Palace of Words,"—("without and within"):—

I stood without the gates of Westminster,
While, crowned with clamour, England's Chief passed by,
And watched a circling flock of pigeons high
Wheel in white clouds of innocence mid-air,
Till soft on winnowing wing they lighted there,
Right in the very courtyard fearlessly,
Unheeding the proud State's imperial eye,
Or surging crowds, or April's staring glare.
But, ah! within, the wrangling Fates, I ween,
With soulless and irrevocable shears,
Carving what must be from what might have been,
Sxared the fair Future's white-winged flock of years—
Blind to a thousand beckoning hands unseen,
Heedless of Hope's rich sungleams and her tears!

The quaintness of Herbert lives still in such lines as these:—

He who o'er dark Gethsemane could sing,
First bowed his will like some majestic bow,
And placed it strung within his Father's hand,
Thence all the purposes of Heaven took wing.
("Cross-bearing.")

Humanity's the keyboard where, in time,
God plays rich preludes of some deathless world!
("The Mighty Past.")

This woodland wilderness,
Where Spring, soft crowding, heals each rent recess,
'Mid rippling roof, and breezy labyrinth
Of lighted leaves, rest on this fall'n oak plinth
Stretch'd 'mid a sapphire sea of hyacinth,
That, crowned with floating sapphire mist, low broods,
Like heaven's blue stillness carpeting the woods.
("The Syrophœnician Woman.")

What felicity of phrasing there is in such words as those in which Canon Battersly is spoken of as setting himself:—

From Doubt's cold, chilling tenure to reclaim Truth's waste Crown-lands, reclaim them for the King;

or those in which the "Independent Statesman" is said to be given to

No fingering of light coins of speech; or yet again, when of Lord Iddesleigh it is said that amid all the strife of political life, the misunderstanding, and noise of it:—

His life's horizon still touched quiet sky.

The poet finds, for the most part, nothing but old used words, feelings and yearnings waiting his advent; but their transparency is his opportunity, and he, and no one else, looks through them with that strong fascination which makes them thrill into newness. The true singer needs no apology; but the strange persistency of the instinct to sing—traced through the creature to the Creator Himself—the marriage of words and music, the place of refreshment and the catholicity of the welcome, are all set forth in words which apply in no small measure to the book itself from which these last lines are taken:—

Seeking perchance to sing themselves to rest,
Strong feelings down the channel of sweet sounds
Find natural vent, as God Himself hath made
The streams to mate with music, till the call,
"Come to the waters," echoes everywhere.

Missionaries at Exeter Hall.

The year of grace 1887 will long be memorable in the history of the modern Church, as that of "the hundred missionaries" who went to labour among China's millions, in connection with a single society; besides large parties commissioned by others. What 1888 has in store we may not foretell, but, at any rate, it has begun auspiciously. Its first month has seen a party leaving the shores of old England for distant China, and individual workers moving on to their chosen fields.

We have seen a good many remarkable missionary farewells at Exeter Hall and elsewhere, but few have been characterised by such overflowing numbers and rapturous enthusiasm as that which took place in the historic building last Monday evening. It reminded us of the never-to-be-forgotten good-bye to the Stanley Smith and Studd party three years ago. It was convened by Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, and its special interest arose from the fact that one of the departing ambassadors of the Cross is Miss Guinness, whose earnest and successful work among East-enders has endeared her to many. She goes to China in association with the Inland Mission, and is accompanied by Miss Mary Reed, daughter of the late Mr. Henry Reed, of Tasmania, a name that is fragrant in connection with foreign missions. Several of the Harley House students, who have finished their course of studies there, are designated for different parts of the field.

The meeting at Exeter Hall was noteworthy, not only for the peculiar personal interest attached to it, but for the probable bearing it may have on the future development of the missionary spirit in our midst. The addresses were mainly directed to the awakening of this spirit in the hearts of the many young people present. In his brief opening remarks, as President of the meeting, Mr. T. A. Denny referred to the vastness of the heathen field, and the responsibility that rests on Christians in this land of light to carry some of that light to those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death. In the course of an earnest address Dr. Barnardo naturally touched on the pressing needs of the East-end, that are his special burden. No better place, he said, could be imagined as a training ground for intending missionaries to the heathen abroad; and he pointed out the wisdom that had led Mr. and Mrs. Guinness to plant their Missionary Institute in the middle of East London with its teeming multitudes. He bore warm testimony, from his own experience, to the fidelity, devotion, and success with which Miss Guinness had laboured in the Gospel among the rough youths of Bow and its neighbourhood, and prayed that many might be led to imitate her, not only in that kind of work, but in the step she has now taken. One of Dr. Barnardo's sentences deserves to be writ in letters of gold:—"Two questions are rapping at the Church's heart—how the poor live at home, and how the heathen die abroad."

Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, having given some interesting recollections of a visit paid by Mr. Grattan Guinness to that city many years ago, spoke of the inspiration that he drew from the sight afforded by the meeting, and urged the departing missionaries to take Jesus Christ as their model in their work among the benighted heathen. He alluded to the self-denial involved in going, and in giving up dear ones to go among the heathen, but this view of the case was not endorsed either by Mr. Guinness or his daughter: in her touching and impressive address later in the evening, Miss Guinness said that instead of a feeling of self-sacrifice, she had, since the matter of her going was settled, experienced a joy that was a fulfilment of the hundredfold reward promised in this life to those who yield all to Christ. A very interesting interlude in the flow of the evening's speech was the urgent entreaty of Mr. John Haffenden for an increased interest in Christian work in the large islands of the Malay Archipelago, where, for five years, he has represented the British and Foreign Bible Society. The spiritual needs of Borneo, Java, and Sumatra, he said, are most clamant, and very little has been done to meet them. He is hoping at some time in the future to be able to distribute the Word of God even in the Philippine Islands, but it would be useless to attempt to send a colporteur there at present, as the islands are under Spanish rule, and closed to Protestant Bible and missionary work.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's address, which came next, was mainly an impassioned plea, in his characteristic manner, for unreserved surrender to the will of God on the part of Christians. That is, he urged, really the best way to further the cause of foreign missions, because such full consecration is inevitably followed by a practical solicitude as to the state of the heathen world. This point was most impressively pressed home by Mr. Radcliffe, and he quoted with effect the recorded words of David Livingstone, in which in the closing year of his devoted life he reconsecrated himself to the work of God in Africa. Mr. Grattan Guinness spoke with deep and suppressed feeling, in view of the departure of his beloved daughter; still he greatly rejoiced at the honour laid upon her in being made a messenger of the blessed Gospel to her sisters in China. Miss Guinness herself took up the same lofty strain. Her calm but most earnest words were devoted to an appeal to all for that fulness of consecration which had been the keynote of preceding speeches. She asked for intercessory prayer on behalf of herself, Miss Reed, her companion, and all the other friends leaving Harley House at this time. Some words followed from the Rev. A. G. Brown, in keeping with what had gone before, and after a further appeal from Dr. Grattan Guinness, chiefly addressed to his young brethren in the meeting, the stirring proceedings were closed with prayer by Rev. C. A. Fox, as they had been opened with prayer by Pastor Frank White.

We have not space to give any details of the very interesting statement of progress on the Congo, by Mr. McKitterick, who has recently returned from that region, accompanied by two negro lads. We hope to have another opportunity of telling, in part, at least, his encouraging story.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

A much smaller gathering of friends, in connection with the outgoing China Inland Mission party, met at the Mildmay Conference Hall on Saturday afternoon. The proceedings were more of a devotional nature, in keeping with the usual Saturday prayer-meeting held by the Mission. Words of farewell were spoken by Mr. and Mrs. Pigott, and Mrs. Schofield (widow of the late Dr. Schofield), who, with Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, are returning to China after a stay in this country. Miss Guinness, Miss Mary Reed, Miss Annie Sanderson, and Miss Malin, all of whom are going for the first time, also spoke, and the occasion was felt to be one of singular impressiveness and spiritual power. As the custom is, all the members of the Mission now in the field, or on the way, were remembered before the Lord by name, and earnest petition was offered by various friends.

On the previous Thursday evening a valedictory meeting was held in the Gospel Hall, Southgate Wood, Wood Green, N. Miss Annie Sanderson, one of the outgoing party, is, so to speak, the second child of this little church who has resolved to obey our Lord's last command in its relation to the heathen world. The first, Miss Ellen A. Barclay, who went in 1884, is now working in Tsin-Chau (Kansuh province), in the far north-west of China, with much encouragement and success. The Gospel Hall was filled by a sympathetic audience, and the proceedings throughout were most impressive. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and addresses were given by Mr. T. W. Pigott, Mr. H. W. Hunt, and Misses Malin and Sanderson. The party of missionaries sailed yesterday (Thursday) by P. & O. steamer.

TWO POSTHUMOUS VOLUMES.*

READERS of the two volumes of "Sermons," by the author of these later productions, will expect to find rare pleasure in the perusal of further writings from the same pen. Nor will they be disappointed; they are the work of a true "Master in Israel," and show an erudition and Christian sagacity of the highest order. Homiletics have been dealt with by many writers of repute, and furnish a somewhat wide range of literary effort, but we have read no book on the subject with keener relish or truer satisfaction than the first-named of the two before us now. For ten years, prior to his death, Dr. Ker held the Chair of Practical Training for the Work of the Ministry, in the Theological Hall of the United Presbyterian Church, and the twenty-one lectures contained in this book were given in that capacity. The first seven deal with the preachers and preaching of the early Church down to the Reformation period, while the remainder treat exclusively of German Protestantism and its heralds. The mode of treatment is intensely practical, and deals closely with the subject as bearing on the greater efficiency of the modern pulpit.

One great charm of the volume lies in the combination there is of firm adherence to evangelical truth, with readiness to profit by anything which may come to us from other sources. As, for instance, referring to "the allegorical tendencies of Origen," "the extreme self-inspection of Jonathan Edwards," and "the constant moral-essay preaching of the Tillotson school," he says, "we may learn how vitally important it is to breathe into all duties the life and the moving power of the person and work of Christ, to remember that Christianity is a plan, not of moral teaching, but first of all of redemption and reconciliation; birth before life, and life before work." Very discriminating and important in reference to much that is transpiring around us are such words as these, "If some turn to what is called the Broad School, may it not be because evangelical preachers have not been showing how the Gospel touches all that is human, and gives to common life a tenderness, and beauty, and meaning which Broad Church doctrine has not in itself. If others are turning to confessionals, and spiritual directories, and the corporeal presence of Christ in the sacraments, is it not because we have not shown clearly and warmly enough the humanity of Christ brought close as a guide and friend always and everywhere?... So let us study the preaching of past times, that we may add to it that which was wanting; and, while we maintain the unchanged centre, Jesus Christ, we shall bring into the circumference a richer and fuller provision, that as He Himself says, the sheep may go in and out, and find pasture."

Historically and critically the book is rich in interest and worth, and should be read by all students and preachers without delay.

The second volume is of a different class, but by no means of an inferior type. Dr. Simpson, of Derby, says truly, in an admirable introduction:—"When we consider the number and variety of subjects which he passes under review; the knowledge which on all of them he seems equally to possess; the historic, ethical, or Scriptural light which he sheds over them, and the lucidity and calmness, free from the spirit of dogmatism which characterise his carefully balanced judgments, we feel as if we had more of Dr. Ker in the fragmentary but many-sided character of this book than in any other from his hand." The table of contents contains seventeen distinct sets of subjects upon which the author's thoughts are given, among them being "Men and Manners," "The Bible and Bible Studies," "Philosophy and Theology," "Churches," "Science," "Art and Music," &c. These subjects are treated on in an aphoristic style which admits of the book being taken up for a few minutes and laid down again without loss of continuity or link with what has gone before. Compressed thoughts, suggestive ideas, striking analogies, and illustrations from many sources, abound under each heading. Dr. Ker was no mean poet, as a selection of poems and translations at the end of the volume will prove. A striking and beautifully executed portrait of the author adorns this work, which, with that on "preaching," should be in the hands of all who delight in refined and cultured thought on high and holy themes.

KEY WORDS OF THE BIBLE.

A MOST useful and suggestive book with this title, by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, is published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton (2s. 6d.). Dr. Pierson's phraseology is terse, clear cut, and expressive, lending itself admirably to the production of such severely condensed writing as this. The book may be described as a bird's-eye view of each book of the sacred Scriptures that can be taken in and apprehended at a glance. We have here the fruits of much patient and skilful study, and to young students of the Word of God we deem the work an invaluable one. It need hardly be said that Dr. Pierson's standpoint is that of the strong evangelical in matters of doctrine, and the pre-Millennialist in matters of prophetic interpretation. An introduction, on the best methods and principles of Bible study, will be found of great service. At recent Northfield Conventions Dr. Pierson gave some of these Bible studies in a more amplified form than that of the book, and they were heard with remarkable interest. We cannot doubt that in this permanent shape they will prove even of greater value. We give as specimens the brief introductory notes to the Prophets and the Gospels:—

THE PROPHETS.

Here begins the third and last division of the Old Testament. A prophet is not necessarily one who predicts, but one who speaks for God—an inspired teacher. Prediction was one form in which the divine seal and sanction were set upon the prophet. The prophetic and historic books are closely related. The Hebrew nation is always the centre of both, and other nations are viewed only as related to this central subject and object.

There are seventeen prophetic books: five belong to the major and twelve to the minor prophets; but these terms refer to length, not to comparative importance. They are not in chronological order; four or five of the minor prophets antedate Isaiah. The period covered by these books spans over four centuries, from about 870 to 440 B.C., and is marked by three divisions: Pre-Exile, Exile, and Post-Exile. It is of great importance to study the prophecies in relation to the period which they cover, as the history will often interpret the prophecy.

The Hebrew is the central figure in prophecy, first in the national or organic aspect; secondly, in the ecclesiastical or spiritual, with reference to the believing remnant; and thirdly, in the personal or Messianic. These are so intermingled as often to be indistinguishable. Predictions relate either to Judah or Israel, or the nations by whom they were oppressed. Whatever judgments are foretold, a promise of restoration relieves the darkness; the believing remnant survives to become a blessing to all people.

Two expressions abound in prophecy, "The Last Days," and "The Day of the Lord." The first covers all that series of events associated with the period bounded by our Lord's First Advent and by the Final Judgment. The Day of the Lord is the dark aspect of judgment seen in connection with those last days, and marks the crisis and catastrophe.

Some principles of interpretation should be observed. Prophecy often presents at first an outline or profile of coming events, which successive prophecies fill out and complete; so that only by combination and comparison the whole picture is seen. Again, prophetic perspective often foreshortens the future. Events are seen in outline, and in series or succession, without regard to intervals between, or comparative proportions or dimensions. One outline may correspond to different events; a prediction, apparently fulfilled, may still await a grander accomplishment. Later prophecies will often be found to expand previous predictions, and analyse and separate what was before vague, confused, and general. The horizon enlarges as it is approached.

The key to all prophecy is the Kingdom of God; its rise, progress, conflicts, and final triumph; from first to last, however various its aspects, in essence and principle one and unchangeable.

THE GOSPELS.

This fourfold story of Christ's life is proven genuine by its harmonious testimony and undesigned coincidences. Each presents the subject from a different point of view, and the combination gives us, like a series of concentric mirrors, not an outline picture or a mere image, but a Divine Person reflected, projected before us, like an object with proportions and dimensions.

Matthew wrote for the Jew, and shows Jesus as the King of the Jews, the Royal Lawgiver, the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Mark wrote for the Roman, and shows Him as the power of God, the Mighty Worker, the Ox for service and sacrifice. Luke wrote for the Greek, and shows Him as the wisdom of God, the human Teacher and Friend, the Man Christ Jesus. John, writing to supplement and complement the other Gospels, shows Him as Son of God, as well as Son of Man, having and giving eternal life, the Eagle soaring to the Sun, undazzled by its splendour.

These Four Gospels are the counterpart of the Four Living Creatures of Ezekiel, Daniel [?] and the Apocalypse. Marvellously joined, intertwined with coincidences, yet separated by differences, they face different ways, yet move in one direction, as one Spirit guides: wing with wing, wheel within wheel, full of eyes, the scope of their rings dreadful, and their speed like that of lightning.

These are not Gospels of Matthew, &c., but one Gospel of Christ, according to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. The first three present the person and work of Christ from the outward, earthly side; the last, from the inward and heavenly. In the beginning of each Gospel we find emphasised—in Matthew, Christ's genealogy; in Mark, his majesty; in Luke, his humanity; in John, his divinity. So in the close of each: in Matthew, his resurrection; in Mark, his ascension; in Luke, his parting benediction and promise of enduement; and in John, the added hint of his second coming.

JEWS IN SPITALFIELDS.—Mr. Israel I. Aschkenasi, missionary to the Jews, is receiving considerable encouragement in his work in connection with the Spitalfields Gospel Mission. The services and Bible-classes for adults are well attended, and the Sunday-school for children is proving a useful feature of the work. Some nine meetings are held each week, and Mr. Aschkenasi has been gratified by seeing fruit of his labours.

ST. ETIENNE, FRANCE.—Dr. Hastings Burroughs, who is in charge of this branch of Mr. McAll's Mission, writes: We have a solid band of a hundred Christians who walk together in harmony and in love. Many others come nightly to listen to the preaching of the Gospel. The dispensary is receiving large patronage from poor patients; lately I decided on making it self-supporting; each patient pays five sous, so that the expenses of the medicine are thus defrayed. Any person unable to pay that small sum is received nevertheless. Through the kindness of Mrs. Robertson, New Testaments are given to the new comers. The Asile de Nuit is affording nightly shelter to thirty poor wayfarers.

A VERY PRESSING NEED.

IN a village in the West of Ireland, a Scriptural School has been carried on with much success for many years. It has been maintained by the personal efforts of the family of the resident proprietor, whose means, under existing circumstances, do not admit of his rebuilding it. The School is attended by over 40 children, who are daily instructed in the Word of God, but the School House is in a state of irreparable decay, the walls being held together by props. A new building is absolutely necessary if a Romish education, without the Bible, for the villagers is to be prevented.

Clarisford, Killaloe, Co. Clare.

I most cordially recommend the Appeal for the rebuilding of Ardrahan School House, the advantages and importance of which I am well aware of.

WM. B. KILLALOE.

I beg fully to concur in his Lordship's recommendation.

HORACE W. TOWNSEND, Clk., M.A.

Contributions towards this proposed new School House will be gratefully received and acknowledged by—

MRS. SMYLY,

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION.

TWO and three teas a week have been given to the unemployed since October last. Our lay helpers have taken great delight in giving the poor men a small piece of cake at the close of each tea.

Above 30 men have been brought to Jesus.

We rejoice at every remembrance of the good work done in Melbourne Hall, Leicester, by this laborious worker, and we are glad to see that Mr. Meyer is likely to be useful with his pen, as well as useful with his tongue. CLOTH BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES	3s. 6d.

"It is impossible to speak too highly of this volume, which is the result of immense labour and consecrated talent. To the Bible student, the Sunday-school teacher, or local preacher, its aid is indispensable, for it is the most able condensation of larger and numerous works, which places it within the reach of all who aspire to become mighty in the Scriptures.
The Christian Age.

"For those who aspire to have a thorough knowledge of the Bible, this volume will be an invaluable help."—The Sword and Trowel.

"In a compact form, the work contains more valuable and varied information as to the Word of God and its connective teaching, than we have seen in any volume of a like size. We would earnestly urge every lover of the Word to procure and carefully read the book."
Word and Work.

"SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES is a scholarly, accurate, suggestive, and wise work on the study of the Books of the Bible; how best to get at their teaching, and how best to turn their teaching to practical account. Preachers and teachers will find it a treasury of thought, beautiful expositions, and fruitful suggestions. It is nicely got up, and is suitable for a prize or a present. The author has rare analytical skill, a profound knowledge of the book, and a graceful literary style."—Oldham Chronicle.

"This book, written by a well-known Biblical student and scholar, will be found of very great help to all who wish to know the Word better. The books of Scripture are chronologically arranged. There are brief but lucid introductions to each book, and much interesting information. The book is cheap, and worthy of being in the hands of every Bible-reader."—Presbyterian Messenger.

CURE of CONSUMPTION in ADVANCED STAGE.—The CASE of a YOUNG LADY at BIRMINGHAM. Communicated by Rev. CHAS. JOSEPH, B.M.

"DEAR SIR,—I have recommended your medicine in many cases with the most gratifying results. In cases where recovery has not taken place, I have always seen the sufferer soothed and relieved. In many cases, pronounced incurable by the medical men who have attended them, I have witnessed extraordinary cures. One of the most surprising was the following:—

"The daughter of a gentleman holding a responsible position in this neighbourhood was at the point of death. Her father obtained advice from the best local doctors, who declared her to be suffering from Consumption in an advanced stage, and that life could only last for a few weeks at most. He had heard me speak of your treatment, and came to see me. Your medicine was administered according to your instructions, and from the very first there was a marked change observed, after which steady progress was made until perfect health was realised.

"The young lady is now alive and well, and I shall be quite willing to give full particulars, privately, to any inquirer.—Yours very truly, C. JOSEPH, 100, Grange-road, Small Heath, Birmingham."

QUEEN VICTORIA OR THE POPE?

DR. WYLIE'S new work on Popery* is calculated to attract a large number of readers. The subject is one upon which much has been written, but at the same time it is one on which few can write with the knowledge and power of this author.

The argument of the book, in brief, is: That our fathers in the Revolution of 1688, placed our constitutional liberties on the only basis on which they believed those liberties could be secure and lasting; that we have abandoned this basis, and, by concessions to the Papacy, compromised British liberty as secured by the famous Settlement; and that, by following this mistaken policy, we are encouraging the advance of a foreign power, which, under a spiritual guise, is marching—through the destruction of our laws, the subversion of our institutions, and the corruption of our nation—to the establishment of a spiritual supremacy and a temporal dominion in Great Britain.

The book is full of valuable information, replete with timely instruction. The aims of Rome are laid bare; her spiritual professions are put alongside her political practices. Canon law is explained; Papal pretensions are exhibited; the condition of Ireland and the dangers impending upon England and Scotland are dealt with at length. Among some quotations from Cardinal Manning's writings, Dr. Wylie gives the following well-known sentences respecting the English people:—

> I shall not say too much if I say that we have to subjugate and subdue, to conquer and rule an imperial race. We have to do with a will that reigns throughout the world, as the will of old Rome reigned once. We have to bend or break that will which nations and kingdoms have found invincible and inflexible. Were heresy conquered in England, it would be conquered throughout the world. All its lines meet here, and, therefore, in England the Church of God must be gathered in its strength! (p. 213).

The words may well be pondered by those who are infected by the "heresy" specified.

Dr. Wylie's book should wake up some Protestants. It conclusively shows that if "always the same" needs any qualification with regard to Rome, the qualification must be to the effect that in arrogance and wickedness the Papal system becomes "worse and worse." Let Dr. Wylie speak on British concessions to Rome during the past half century:—

> Securities and privileges which our fathers won in the battle of the patriot, or at the stake of the martyr, have been in our eyes but of small price, and we have been ready to part with them. The story is wearisome from its very monotony of demand and concession, demand and concession, in endless iteration. First, we opened the doors of Parliament to the Romanists; second, we established Maynooth; third, we endowed it; fourth, we purged our Statute Book of some forty enactments which hindered no honest and lawful business, but which stood in the way of projects fondly cherished, but which dared not be avowed. Next, we permitted the popish bishops to appoint chaplains in our prisons, next in our workhouses, next in our reformatories, and then in our navy. Next, we permitted them to build convents and monastries, and to dot our country with little colonies immediately and directly governed by Papal law, and reft, as regards both acres and persons, from the protection and control of British law.
> Then, when we had done all this, we opened the National Exchequer to them. We thought that "money would do it." And verily we were not sparing of our gold. Our yearly payments, not to the starving people, but to the greedy priests, rose rapidly from thousands to ten of thousands, from tens of thousands to hundreds of thousands, and from hundreds of thousands to a million, and now it stands some two hundred thousand above a million.

The division of England into dioceses, the publishing of canon law, and the erecting of courts of spiritual and temporal jurisdiction, whereby Romanists are governed in the name of the Potentate of the Vatican, are described, and the manner in which the Irish hierarchy has made claims, which one after another have been conceded, is set forth in detail:—

> All offices in the United Kingdom, two excepted, we have thrown open to the nominees of the priesthood... And, finally, to expedite the advance of this enemy to the throne, whence he may absolutely govern us and make all the three kingdoms as full of darkness and as full of wretchedness as Ireland is, we have abolished the oaths of the Royal Supremacy and the Protestant Accession. And, as if we wished to point out beyond the possibility of mistake to an ambition which verily needs nothing to excite or inflame it, the chair in which we should like to see it ultimately enthrone itself, we have prepared for its chief a seat where meanwhile he may sit and display his own and his master's power. We have said to the man who exchanged the English lawn for the Roman purple, and demitted the title of the rector to assume that of cardinal: Come up here, and sit on the right hand of the Queen. And there verily he sits, the nobles and prelates of England at his feet. We wonder they don't toss their coronets from their head and disdain to wear honours from which the glory is departed.

Dr. Wylie makes it abundantly clear that the word Protestant has a distinctive political signification. He denies to no one freedom of religious opinion, but he maintains with great force that adherents of the Papacy can bear no allegiance to our sovereign and yield no submission to our law, but they are subjects of a foreign prince, whose throne is in the Vatican, and whose country is the "Church." Retracing our steps—returning to the "old paths," is strongly urged.

*WHICH SOVEREIGN—QUEEN VICTORIA OR THE POPE? By J. A. WYLIE, LL D. 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

OBITUARY.

REV. A. LAMB, MELTON MOWBRAY.

WE regret to announce the death, last week, of this pastor. He was converted under the preaching of Richard Weaver, and for some years laboured as an evangelist before becoming pastor at Melton. He was especially earnest in work amongst the poor and needy, and will be greatly missed.

DR. R. R. KALLEY.

This veteran missionary, formerly of Madeira and Brazil, fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of January 17, after a few hours' illness. He was born in 1809. For some years he practised medicine in Kilmarnock; but, his heart being stirred up to go and work amongst the Chinese, he relinquished his practice early in 1838. On account of health, he was compelled to give up the hope of work in China and to go with his family to Madeira. He felt that he could improve his stay there by working for his Master amongst the poor people of that island, ministering to their bodily sufferings, and at the same time speaking to them of the great love of God for sinners manifested in Jesus. The Lord blessed this work, and thus his servant was enabled to preach the glad tidings to thousands.

In 1843, the work aroused the enmity of the adversaries, so that many of the believers suffered much persecution. In the month of July the Doctor himself was cast into prison, and there he remained till the following January. Still the Word of God continued to be taught to many, both in the prison and outside. During 1844 the persecution became fiercer, so that the Doctor required great caution to avoid being separated from his flock. In this extremity God sent Rev. W. Hewitson to work together with Dr. Kalley. He arrived early in 1845, and for a year worked diligently in the Gospel, while the former labourer devoted himself more specially to the treatment of the sick, and to personal dealings with their souls.

In May, 1846, Mr. Hewitson left the island. The sufferings of the converts increased, till the passions of the mob, stimulated by the Romish priests, resulted in a determined attack on Dr. Kalley's residence. He had a narrow escape from the island, but God watched over him, and preserved him from the hands of his enemies. During the next months over one thousand persons left the island for conscience' sake; many of their descendants are now living in Trinidad, and in Illinois, and other places.

In 1855, Dr. Kalley went to Brazil, and was enabled to found the Igreja Evangelica Fluminense in Rio de Janeiro in 1857. In 1873 he went to Pernambuco, and formed the Igreja Evangelica Pernambucana, in connection with which some of Mr. Grattan Guinness's students are now working for the Master. Eleven years ago the Doctor was obliged by failing health to retire from Brazil, and since then he has resided in Edinburgh.

The funeral service was conducted on Tuesday last, by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and the interment was in the Dean Cemetery. J. G. R.

Letter to the Editor.

POOR JEWISH IMMIGRANTS.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to say a few words on the subject of your paragraph about persecuted Jews who seek shelter (if only temporary) in England. There is considerable misapprehension as to the effect which their presence has on the employment of our own working people. Many of these Jews work for and with English Jews in trades which Jewish enterprise has kept from leaving for the Continent. But for the Jews, cheap tailoring (like making of ladies' cloth jackets and mantles) must have gone to Germany, because our workers do not work for the wages that Germans accept. A class of ladies' shoes, till lately imported from abroad, is now made cheaper in London by foreign Jews.

Again, many support themselves by dealing in small wares such as Englishmen do not meddle with. With very small profits they manage to rise, because they are not only thrifty, but sober. When they become shopkeepers they bear their share of our rates and taxes, and they contribute largely to all our charities. At last year's Hospital Sunday collections the Jews with their small community stood fourth on the list (which was headed by the Church of England with £28,565), giving £14,595 odd, while their average of each collection stood highest of all.

Jews do not, as Germans do, carry our trade away to the Continent. Instead of undermining us, they become loyal, peaceable citizens, who promote British interests to the utmost of their power both at home and abroad. Whole streets in the East-end that were squalid, disorderly, and disreputable, are transformed into decent, quiet, respectable abodes of law-abiding Jews whose sober habits enable them to live where others only supported the drink-shops.

Fierce persecution by nominal Christians drives Jews to England. Let us beware how we deal with these outcasts. In succouring Jewish refugees we need not injure our own poor. The vast majority of Jews do not compete with our people in their industries. Let us help them in getting work that does not interfere with our people. Our Jewish authorities in London work in this way. Besides keeping all poor English Jews from becoming paupers or burdening our parish rates or workhouses, they deal with refugees by the same admirable system of relief; and they have found homes in America and elsewhere to which they have removed tens of thousands of Jews, and with wonderful skill they open up new industries for others.

But the work is too vast for even the wealth and benevolence of the Jews. Nor should it be left to them, for the persecutors abroad are nominal Christians. We rejoice to have been enabled to deal with at least some of the heart-rending distress silently endured by these Jewish strangers in our midst. Some of those found in the fogs and wretchedness of our streets, homeless and perishing, have been fed and warmed, some clothed, some set up with tiny stock of wares, some enabled to get away to friends in America. In no one case have the industry or comfort of our poor English Christians been prejudiced. These things have been done—a minute portion of the vast work—"in token of Christian sympathy."

(MRS.) E. A. FINN, Sec. Syrian Colonisation Fund.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—Mr. John H. L. Christien, assisted by friends, has been holding mission services in Sermon-lane, Islington. Seven meetings were held last week, and a number of women were present, gathered from the district around. The various gatherings were addressed in faithful but affectionate terms by various ladies and gentlemen. Many of the poor women listened with the greatest attention. Similar services to the above are being held throughout London during this month.

MELBOURNE EXHIBITION.—In view of the great importance of taking every opportunity to spread the Gospel, Christian workers thinking of going out to the forthcoming exhibition at Melbourne, are invited to communicate with Rev. N. L. Bluett, La Grande Borde, Lausanne, Suisse, in order to facilitate united effort in the formation of a missionary conference to be held (D.V.) at Melbourne, and other schemes of evangelistic work. As time presses, friends are requested to respond to this invitation with as little delay as possible.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. and Miss Parker, from England, have concluded successful evangelistic services at South Amboy, N.J., and Freehold, N.J. They were next to hold union meetings at Salem, N.J.

Lancashire.—A week's evangelistic services, conducted in Bethel Chapel, Bury (Lancs.), by Rev. P. Sutton, of Openshaw, Manchester, have been instrumental in leading many to decision.

Mr. G. C. Norrish, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting a three weeks' mission at Creech, Somerset. Large numbers attended the meetings. Christians have been quickened, and not a few have professed to find liberty in Christ.

Mr. Samuel Mackenzie, evangelist, has concluded a series of successful meetings at Sighthill Free Church, Glasgow. A large number of inquirers had the way of salvation pointed out to them, and professed to find peace in believing. Christian workers were stirred up to prayer and effort.

Nottingham.—Rev. Dr. Morris has conducted a mission to believers at St. Ann's Church, in this town. The work has been thorough, definite, and deep. The pointed and searching addresses of Dr. Morris were richly blessed to many believers. The Bible to many Christians will be a new book. At the last service over 500 partook of the communion.

Greenock, N.B.—Since September last Gospel and other services have been conducted in the Music Hall, Hamilton-place, with much encouragement. Helpers have heartily come forward to aid those in charge of the work, and friends from various places have addressed the large assemblies. The fruits of these efforts are chiefly seen among young men. The workers are all voluntary and unpaid, and the expenses of the Mission have been met by contributions from various friends.

Dublin.—A very successful mission to men has been held in Dublin in the Gregg Memorial Hall. The Archbishop, and the Dean of Christ's Church took part in the opening services. The addresses on each night of the week, and the concluding sermon, were given by Rev. W. E. Burroughs, of Kingstown. The large hall was crowded every evening by young men, and the services have been blessed to many. The keenly practical addresses have been well calculated to appeal to those who needed some such loving invitation to lead them to spiritual decision. It is to be hoped that this mission is only the first of a series; the missioner is eminently able to present the truth as it is in Jesus.

POOR IN POPLAR.—On Tuesday week a dinner was given to two hundred unemployed mechanics and their wives at the Brunswick Hall, Poplar. It was really sad to learn the tales of woe and sorrow told by those present. After dinner short stirring Gospel addresses were given. Any help towards this work will be welcomed by Mr. George Fuller, superintendent, Welcome Hall, Culloden-street, Poplar, E.

MR. ARTHINGTON'S OFFER.—The offer of £15,000, made by Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, for the establishment of a mission to the Indians of North Brazil, has been alike declined by the Foreign Mission Committee of the Free Church of Scotland, the London Missionary Society, and the Baptist Missionary Society. The Free Church committee point out that the region Mr. Arthington is desirous to see entered upon is within reach of the Episcopalians, Moravians, Methodists, and American Presbyterians, who already occupy Central America.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a special mission at Cirencester, from Jan. 29 to Feb. 5, to be conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes.——For blessing on evangelistic services at Hawick, N.B., to be conducted by Mr. Richard Weaver, commencing Feb. 12.——For blessing on special services by Mr. Opie Redway, at Baptist Chapel, Eastcombe, near Stroud, from Jan. 30. Also, for a week by Mr. Redway, in the Wesleyan Chapel, Westonzoyland, near Bridgwater, to commence on Feb. 3.——For blessing on a ten days' special mission at Gospel Hall, Axminster, commencing on Jan. 29, to be conducted by Mr. Herbert Veasey, of Torquay.——For blessing on a mission now in progress at the Hope, Merton, Surrey, conducted by Mr. John McAuliffe, and praise for much blessing at Poole, Dorset.——For blessing on mission work at Helensburgh, N.B.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

MR. McALL has opened, at St. Germain, Paris, his one hundred and thirteenth station—the tenth or eleventh within the last three months.

A CHRISTIAN LADY is providing at her own expense a home for poor women, at Belleville, Paris, similar to one already existing for poor men.

PORTUGAL knows and tolerates no other religion besides the Roman Catholic, except among foreign residents, who may worship privately in their houses, but not in a church.

PARIS.—It is said that some Americans are about to build three large chapels in different parts of Paris for the use of those who now regularly frequent the popular mission halls.

INDIA.—Reports have come from Poonah, Madras, and Calcutta, telling of much blessing in connection with the special mission of the Church Missionary Society in different parts of India.

HAVRE.—We have good reports of the evangelistic work among Bretons here. Well attended meetings are held in the Rest, the use of which is kindly granted by Lady Beauchamp, and a new meeting has been begun in the suburbs where Bretons abound.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S MISSION IN AFRICA.—Writing from Vivi, Congo, on October 12 last, Bishop Taylor says:—"During the past three months we have founded and manned five new stations between Vivi and Isangola. We have built a steam waggon that hauls at one time up those steep, stony, crooked Vivi hills one hundred man-loads, or two tons."

HARVARD UNIVERSITY.—As a result of Professor Henry Drummond's recent visit to America the Christian students of Harvard University have rented the Globe Theatre in Boston, and arranged for the holding of Sunday evening services to be conducted by college preachers. The students have been personally distributing the tickets in the workshops of the city.

WEEK OF PRAYER.—In Brussels the meetings were presided over by the different Protestant pastors in turn, and were conducted alternately in French and Flemish. If the numbers attending were fewer than last year the life and cordial brotherhood were not less. In Berlin the interest increased day by day; encouraging meetings were also held in different parts of Switzerland.

MADAME DALENCOURT'S REPORT gives an exceedingly interesting account of her Mission in Paris for the benefit of working women. The new part of the work is a school for girls. Four classes for different stages of efficiency in needlework are held, the most proficient being rewarded with a baby doll in the shape of a prize. Some measure of neatness, cleanliness, and order is thus acquired. Other valuable departments in the work are referred to in the report.

INTOLERANCE IN RUSSIA.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily News telegraphs:—"Religious intolerance here is likely to assume dimensions which have been hitherto unknown. It is asserted on competent authority that the Government has decided that in future only persons of the Greek faith shall be appointed to public offices. The numerous Lutherans and Catholics now occupying such posts will not be dismissed, but their promotion will be made difficult, or perhaps impossible."

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN PALESTINE.—The Jerusalem correspondent of The Record writes:—"From your correspondence we learn that Miss Lloyd is coming out to establish another Medical Mission in Jerusalem. Probably if she had consulted anyone here she would have been told Jerusalem is the last place for a Medical Mission, as it is already overdone. If such a Mission as is proposed is needed here, a band of nurses would help it on far better than a lady doctor. Nurses are needed, doctors are abundant. There are many places in the country where a Medical Mission would be a great boon, for instance Hebron, where there is no mission work, and where the people are begging for a doctor."

AN INTERESTING COLONY.—As an instance of how kindly relations are fostered between employers and employed, we have read with much interest the history of a colony of French workmen, who were taken to the Grand Duchy of Baden in 1865 to produce mirror glass. To-day the colony consists of 340 families, each of which has a comfortable dwelling, to which is attached a large piece of land for flower and vegetable cultivation. Schools are provided to which the children must go until they are fifteen; libraries are established, and there is a hospital supported by the company. The old people speak French, but the young ones German—and it is not unusual to find three generations, grandfather, father, and son working side by side.

ABYSSINIA.—Prayer is requested for the Swedish missionaries at M'Kullo (three miles from Massowah) where the Italian army now has its headquarters. This mission was begun in 1866, and several stations were founded among the tribes north of Abyssinia, which, however, it has been necessary to give up, owing to the insalubrity of the climate and the enmity of the Abyssinians and Mahommedans. Sixteen of the missionaries have died of different diseases, and three have been murdered. Now the mission is chiefly confined to M'Kullo where there is a commodious mission-house surrounded by the huts of native converts, and schools for boys and girls, most of them liberated slaves. The Italians have shown our Lutheran brethren much sympathy and kindness. Pray that our tried missionaries may be preserved, and have wisdom and courage given them, and that the impending war may lead to the opening of Abyssinia and the Galla countries for the Gospel.

G. S. LÖWENHIELM.

Stockholm.

THE AMEER OF AFGHANISTAN is described as exactly the reverse of the typical Asiatic despot, being a grave, careful man and sovereign, the persistent enemy of aristocratic usurpation of the rights of the people and a wonderfully clement and discerning friend to the humbler classes in his kingdom. He receives everyone personally, gentle or simple, who has a petition to present, and relies on no intermediary officials.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE in America have issued a letter suggesting that in each city, town, and neighbourhood, pastors of all denominations, and such laymen as they may select, be invited to meet and carefully study the needs and problems of their special locality. This may include such organised visitation as shall give a certain knowledge of those who do not attend religious services, and as far as possible the reasons which keep them away. It is especially desirable to devise plans for winning the confidence of working people. Such visitation can readily include a knowledge of the sick and deserving poor, the number and location of saloons and places of ill repute, and all the evil influences that affect the moral character of the community. Such study will draw Christians into closer sympathy, and will so reveal needs as to stimulate earnest and united action, by which alone the desired work can be effectively done.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Last year's fines for the adulteration of beer exceeded £10,000.

The new Bishop of Guildford elect is said to be an ardent abstainer.

It is stated in The Watchword that "the bogus clubs of Cardiff are practically annihilated."

The Glasgow Y.M.C.A. has protested against the recent election of two drink-sellers to the office of magistrate.

Dr. B. W. Richardson suggests that for Bank Holidays systematic efforts should be made to provide healthy recreation for the people.

The Bishop of Salisbury, writing to the diocesan organising secretary, C.E.T.S., prays "earnestly for a blessing" upon the secretary's labours in "the noble cause" to which he has devoted himself.

Mr. W. Aronsberg, J.P., writes to the Mayor of Manchester, urging that the social clubs in various parts of the city are mainly used for "drinking, betting, and gambling" after licensed hours, and ought to be brought under more complete police control.

The Act enabling the authorities in Scotland to close public-houses at ten o'clock is being largely taken advantage of. The arrangement has been enforced in Forfarshire, Perthshire, Fifeshire, and Aberdeenshire, and also in the burghs of Perth, Montrose, and Arbroath. Unfortunately it does not apply to the localities where it is most needed—to places having over fifty thousand inhabitants.

A conference of the committee of the London Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance with the committees of the various Local Option Unions of the Metropolis (comprising some twenty-two organisations and nearly four hundred members of the various committees) was held last week, to consider the advisability of adopting and circulating for signature among the electors of all the London constituencies a pledge in favour of the direct veto over the issue of liquor licences. The subject was fully discussed by various representatives from all parts of London, and there was a general concurrence as to the importance of taking steps to secure an early advance in favour of the direct veto form of local option, both in and out of Parliament.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 29.—EZEKIEL XXXIV.

2. — The shepherds of Israel. — Although "shepherd" is mostly used in the Old Testament to describe the kingly office, it would seem here to include all who were responsible for the care, and guidance, and direction of the people—prophets and priests, as well as kings.

11.—Behold, I, even I! — "Jehovah is the shepherd of his people (Ps. xxiii,). He will do all which the shepherds should have done, and did not."—S.C.

17.—I judge between cattle and cattle, between the rams and the he goats.—Better in R.V., "I judge between cattle and cattle, as well the rams as the he goats." The judgment is not one of discrimination between rams and he goats, but between both, and the rest of the "sheep," as the following verses show. The rams and he goats are identical with the fat and the strong in ver. 16. This is the foundation of our Lord's parable of the sheep and the goats (Matt. xxv.), where the goats are loveless professors, as distinguished from real Christians possessed of "faith which worketh by love."

23.—My servant David.—David means "beloved." Here evidently "The Beloved" (Eph. i. 6): "The root and offspring of David" (Rev. xxii. 16).

MONDAY, JANUARY 30.—EZEKIEL XXXV.

Edom was one of the nations against which Ezekiel prophesied (xxv. 11—14). The doom of Edom, here again predicted, serves to bring out in brighter contrast the future blessing of Israel. Comp. the first fifteen verses of the next chapter (xxxvi.) with these fifteen verses.

5.—Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred.—"Edom was ever distinguished for its bitter hatred to Israel."—S.C.

10.—These two nations, and these two countries.—"Judah and Israel. The words, 'Whereas the Lord was there,' are not those of Edom, but of the prophet. They point to a great flaw in the reckoning of the Edomites. Whoever appropriates God's portion to himself will ever be a loser."—Hengstenberg.

13.—Ye have boasted against Me.—The Lord regards what was spoken against his land and his people as spoken against Himself. See Zech. ii. 8.

14.—When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee desolate.—The time when the whole earth rejoiceth is when the Lord cometh (Ps. xcvi. 11—13). This also is the time of the great judgment upon the Edom of Isa. lxiii. 1—4, which seems there to mean the professing Church—the vine of the earth (Rev. xiv. 18). Jewish writers regard Edom as typifying Rome, which has been the great enemy of Israel during the whole dispensation.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 31.—EZEKIEL XXXVI.

Ver. 16 to the end of the chapter is a continued prophecy of a most glorious kind, setting forth first Israel's pollution of their land while they dwelt in it, and their profanation of the Lord's name among the heathen when cast out of it. Then (21) the principle of grace is firmly established as that on which alone God will deal with them in the future. "Not for your sakes, but for my holy name's sake" (22), and then follows their restoration to their own land (24), their forgiveness and cleansing (25), their renewal by the Spirit (26, 27), and re-establishment in their own land, and blessing there (28—30), and consequent humiliation on account of their past sins and evil ways (31—32); but before the close it is intimated that, first, "the Lord will be enquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them."

25.—Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, &c.—The reference seems to be to the purifying "water of separation," which removed pollution arising from contact with death (Num. xix.). This is referred to in Heb. ix. as typical of the cleansing effected by the blood of Christ, which no doubt is the real element of purification here spoken of, though expressed in figurative language.

26.—I will give you an heart of flesh.—Though this is a promise to Israel to be fulfilled in their national conversion hereafter, yet it is one of "their spiritual things," of which believing Gentiles, along with Jewish believers, even now partake. See 2 Cor. iii. 3.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1.—EZEKIEL XXXVII.

9.—Prophesy unto the wind.—"The same Hebrew word is used for "wind," "breath," and "spirit" (5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 14), just as in like manner the same Greek word stands for "wind" and "spirit" in John iii. 5—8. Our Lord doubtless had this passage of Ezekiel as well as that in the last chapter (xxxvi. 25—27) in his mind when He said to Nicodemus, "Art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things?" He should have known that even in the sphere of "earthly things" (to which Israel's conversion belongs) water—the element of cleansing—and breath, or spirit—the element of life-giving power—must combine (according to Ezek. xxxvi., xxxvii.) to bring about the regeneration of Israel. The "water" of Ezek. xxxvi. points to the death of Christ (see Heb. ix. 13, 14) as the true cleansing element (the flesh cannot be cleansed, it must die), and the "breath" of Ezek. xxxvii. to the Spirit of God (14) as the true life-giving power. These two must combine to effect regeneration now in any soul individually, as well as in Israel hereafter nationally.

13.—Brought you up out of your graves.—An anticipation in figurative language of the truth of Eph. ii. 1, "You hath He quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins," as applied to Israel's conversion to God.

23.—I will save them out of all their dwelling-places.—This expression much perplexes commentators. Perhaps 2 Cor. v. 1—4 is the best key to unlock the difficulty. If the "dwelling-places wherein they have sinned" be the bodies of sin and death in which Israel will be on earth, even during the Millennial blessedness (Isa. lxv. 20), then this passage gives the answer to the question, "What will become of Israel after the Millennium?" and describes "the deliverance of Israel from the Canaan of this life to the glorified new and eternal Canaan."—Kliefoth. See the words, "Dwell therein ... for ever" (25), which go beyond the Millennium, and describe the "new heavens and new earth" (Rev. xxi. 1).

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2.—EZEKIEL XXXVIII.

2.—Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal.—Better in R.V., "Gog of the land of Magog, prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal." The Hebrew word for "chief" is Rosh, and this the LXX. render as a proper name as above. Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal point to Russia, Muscovy, and Tobolsk. This great northern power, "in the latter years" (8), leads a confederacy of nations (5, 6) against restored Israel. But whether this is the post-Millennial attack upon "the camp of the saints and the beloved city" (Rev. xx. 8) is a difficult question. Mark the expressions, "in the latter years" (8), "it shall be in the latter days" (16), and the fact that, as in Rev. xx., fire from heaven is the (22) instrument of their destruction.

14.—In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely.—This would seem to describe Millennial times, and therefore the coming forth "out of the north parts" of verse 15 may possibly be post-Millennial. The difficulty of such a rebellion occurring at the close of the thousand years' reign of Christ and his saints over the earth is met by Rev. xx. 7, where Satan, loosed out of his prison, becomes the instigator of the revolt of "Gog and Magog."

20.—The mountains shall be thrown down.—This "great shaking" may be parallel to the introduction of the new heaven and earth of Rev. xxi. 1.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3.—EZEKIEL XXXIX.

6.—I will send a fire on Magog.—Comp. Rev. xx. 9, "Fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them."

12.—Seven months shall the children of Israel be burying of them.—The immense number of those slain by fire corresponds with what is said, Rev. xx. 8, "the number of whom is as the sand of the sea."

22.—From that day and forward.—This great deliverance would seem to be the final lesson whereby God's reception of his people Israel to their close relationship to Him is impressed upon them and the nations then upon earth.

23.—And the heathen shall know, &c.—From this to the end of the chapter is a recapitulation of the general subject of Israel's restoration to their land, and final reception, and that for ever (29), into the everlasting favour of their God, of which the outpouring of his Spirit upon them, nationally, is the earnest and pledge, as it is now to the believer individually (Eph. i. 14).

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4.—EZEKIEL XL.

The last nine chapters of Ezekiel (xl.—xlviii.) contain a magnificent vision of "a rebuilt Temple, a reformed priesthood, re-organised services, a restored monarchy, a reapportioned territory, a renewed people, and, as a consequence, the diffusion of fertility and plenty over the whole earth."—S.C. The interpretation of this vision is one of the great difficulties of Scripture. The principal solutions may be classified thus: (1) Ideal, viewing the whole as symbolical of spiritual blessings in Christ. (2) Real, and fulfilled more or less in Zerubbabel's Temple. (3) Real, but conditional on Israel's repentance (xliii. 11), failing which the promise has lapsed. (4) Real, and to be fulfilled hereafter literally in the Millennium. Against which lie the following objections: (1) Unsatisfactory in view of distinct promises elsewhere of future earthly blessing to a restored Israel. (2) Inadequate to be considered a fulfilment. (3) True as against 2, but Israel's future repentance is overlooked, which fulfils the condition. (4) Most natural interpretation, and most in accord with language used, and with position following prophecies of Israel's restoration and conversion; but it involves the great difficulty of the restoration of literal sacrifices, which, in the light of Heb. x. 18, seems well-nigh insurmountable. A combination of 3 and 4 offers an escape from the difficulty. The promise of the prophetic vision may have lapsed owing to Israel's non-fulfilment of the condition. When hereafter made good on Israel's God-given repentance, it may be so far modified in its fulfilment as the new and better covenant brought in by Christ's death has abrogated the first (Heb. viii. 13). The difficulty, however, of literal sacrifices during the Millenium is not so great as might at first appear if the difference be borne in mind between the heavenly calling of the Church of God and the future earthly position of converted Israel. In Col. ii. 20 it is being "dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world," which gives freedom from earthly ordinances, and being "raised with Christ" (Col. iii. 1) which entitles one to "set their mind (R.V.) on things above, not on the things that are upon the earth." In Heb. iii. 1 those addressed are called "partakers of the heavenly calling." Surely these privileges are peculiar to "the Church of the firstborn" (Heb. xii. 23) by reason of their being one with Christ. This is the distinctive glory of "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife," and not of restored and converted Israel. We cannot, therefore, argue from present Christian privileges as to what must be Israel's position during the Millenium, nor can we ignore the distinction clearly pointed ont as hereafter to exist even "in the dispensation of the fulness of times," between things "which are in heaven and which are on earth" (Eph. i. 10).

2.—Set me upon a very high mountain, by which.—Marg. "upon which"; R.V., "Whereon." An important correction, showing that the city is "upon a very high mountain," which recalls Isa. ii. 2 and Micah iv. 1, and connects the ultimate fulfilment with the latter days.

Sunday Afternoon, February 5.

THE TRANSFIGURATION.

MATT. XVII. 1—13. Golden Text: Luke ix. 35.

EXPLANATIONS AND SUGGESTIONS.

The time.—"After six days," i.e., six entire days, and so exactly one week after He had foretold his own death, &c. (Matt. xvi. 21—28). The dark shadow of his coming sorrows and death had begun to darken the sky. It was then that a glimpse of his glory and majesty was granted. "I will be with Him in trouble." "When earth saddens the Saviour or the saint, Heaven draws nigh to cheer." Ask for Scripture examples, such as the Hebrew youths in the furnace with their mysterious Visitor, Stephen at his trial (Acts vi. 15), and in his dying (Acts vii. 55 and 56), and Paul and Silas rejoicing in prison.

Also, this glory was seen after, not before, Peter's confession of faith. God's order is first faith, then feeling. Show the children that we must wait for no wonderful feeling, or vision, but take God's Word as true, and trust and obey it, leaving God to give us bright and glorious views of Jesus, just as He wills.

The Transfiguration—What and How?—Taken by itself, the word means simply change of form or appearance; but we are accustomed to apply it only to such changes as are wonderful and glorious. In Christ transfigured was seen the perfection of beauty, nobleness, and sublime majesty. Further, it took place in the presence of disciples, and while they were looking on, for both Matthew and Mark were careful to state, "He was transfigured before them." Imagine their wonder and joy. What was the source of the glory-light—heaven? or Christ Himself? Doubtless, the latter: the light shone from, not upon, Him.

The Transfiguration of the Lord Jesus was the fulfilment of the promise, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, until they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom" (Matt. xvi. 28). It was the outshining of the inherent glory of the Christ; and a foreshadowing of the day when He shall come in his own glory, and of the Father, and of the holy angels (Luke ix. 26).

The body both hides and partially reveals the mind and spirit of man. Lovely faces may mask black thoughts and wicked hearts; or the very beauty of holiness may hide behind a most unsightly face. But, as years roll by, characters show themselves more and more in face and figure, the bad disfiguring the brightest beauty, and holiness glorifying the plainest face. The faces of very good people and of dying saints have often astonished those who saw them. In the other world, this shining forth of the spirit is perfected. Men there are as great and glorious in appearance as they actually are in mind and heart. Perhaps this throws a little light on the Transfiguration. It may be that it was the visible outshining of "that splendour which is natural to holiness," which, in the other world, is always seen where holy ones are. Teachers may apply this, urging the importance of the beauty of character (1 Pet. iii. 1—5), that it is eternal, and will be fully seen in the next world.

Why did the disciples ask about Elias?—Probably, because his appearance reminded them of Mal. iv. 5 and 6, and led them to hope that perhaps he might soon come, and "restore all things," so that opposition would be overcome. and Jesus would not die. Christ's answer suggests that while Malachi's prophecy was in some sense fulfilled in John, who came in the spirit and power of Elijah, the perfect fulfilment will take place just before his Second Coming. Similarly, Joel's prophecy, Acts ii. 16—21, was only partially fulfilled at Pentecost. The perfect fulfilment is yet to come.

LESSONS.

This scene attests the Godhead of Jesus.—(1) So the witnesses themselves felt through all their after life. "We beheld his glory," said John; but Peter's reference to this scene (2 Pet. i. 16—18) is specially to be noted; (2) Both the law and the prophets were full of references to Christ; but here we have Moses, the representative of the law, and Elijah, of the prophets, living men, holding visible and audible intercourse with Jesus; (3) The glory-cloud. This was the acknowledged symbol of the presence of God; (4) The voice out of the cloud. "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye Him." Hear—not Moses, nor Elias—but Him, first and always.

It teaches that Jesus must be always first.—Peter would build three tabernacles, or booths—as though the Master and his glorified servants were nearly on a level. But the solemn, awful cloud of Divine glory came and overshadowed them, and the voice said, "Hear Him." The servants were taken away, and they saw "Jesus only." God would have us love and honour his servants, but we must always put Jesus first. Yet do we? Children sometimes care more to please and obey some parent, teacher, friend, whom they love, than Jesus their Lord.

It gives us a glimpse of the life of God's people after death.—They are alive, in full activity, not asleep. They are blessed and glorified. They talk with Jesus face to face. "They shall see his face." "To be with Christ which is far better." Though wondrously changed and glorified—how much Moses must have grown in godlikeness during his 1400 years' residence in glory—they were still recognised. They were the same persons still. We shall know our friends in heaven.

It teaches us to think far more of plain, daily duties, than of wonderful visions.—Peter wanted to stay on the mountain, he cared not how long. But that could not be; Christ's people must fight in this world. To very few does the bright vision come, and very seldom. Our care should be to do the will of the Father. The best proof of Christ-life is, not happy feelings, but faithfulness to please Christ in all things.

ILLUSTRATION.

An old legend tells how a godly monk, praying in his cell, was astonished by a vision of his Lord. He lay prostrate before it for a while in rapturous joy. Then came the jarring note of a bell, calling him away to some lowly task. It filled him with conflict. Ought he to go and leave such a visitant, such glory, behind? Never again might he see the same. At last conscience won; he went, did his task, and returned, sadly expecting to see a cold, dark cell. But no! the glory was still there. His Lord smiled on him, and spoke: "If thou hadst not gone, I should not have stayed."

A CORRECTION.—For "a hundred square yards" in a note in our last issue, relating to the licensing of public-houses, read "a space a hundred yards square."

THE AFFLICTED POOR.—A dinner to about 400 halt, maimed, sick, blind, and otherwise afflicted and indigent poor was given last week at Bloomsbury-hall, Meard-street, Soho, by Mr. Wm. Harrison, on behalf of Mr. T. Holt. On leaving the hall each man received a Cardigan jacket, and each woman a warm shawl.

REV. JAMES CHALMERS IN NEW GUINEA.—The Welcome for February contains the first instalment of Mr. Chalmers' journal of his life and adventures in New Guinea since his arrival there in September last. Mr. Chalmers—though warned he would be killed—visits the natives unarmed, and bids them lay down their arms, and make peace with their enemies and the Government. He has still the old charm and influence over the people, and they do as he advises. The Moveaveans further promise to rebuild their village, now that "Tamate" has come back. With characteristic modesty, Mr. Chalmers refrains from treating this bit of heroism as other than an ordinary incident of missionary life. The account of his reception and work on the island is most interesting, and full of happy augury for the future of British New Guinea.

"NO CROSS, NO CROWN."

WISER than I, He planned this life for me,
Mapped out my course, and bade these things to be;
And dare I even think to ask from whence
So many trials come, such long suspense.
No light beyond the present time is given,
Unless by faith I gain a glimpse of heaven.
The future lies before me unrevealed,
The pages of my life-book closely sealed;
The Guiding Hand seems hidden from my sight,
Though I may wholly trust its leading right.
I cannot see, nor even guess the way.
Wilt thou, O Father, lead me day by day?
Hold Thou me up, yea, take me by the hand,
Till 'neath heaven's gleaming portals I shall stand;
And give me faith more firmly to believe
Whate'er is for my good I may receive.
Grant me such faith that I may ever see
All, all that Thou hast done is well for me.
"No cross" borne here, "no crown" awaits the brow
The victor THEN, is he who suffers NOW.

MYRTLE.

FRIENDLY LETTER MISSION.—Miss Skinner, of Bath, has had a message from the Queen of Sweden. Her secretary writes:—"Her Majesty had already heard of your Mission-work, and is much interested in it; she would, with much pleasure, see it carried on in Sweden and Norway."

VILLAGE WORK IN INDIA.—My daughter and Miss Adam are well, and out in their tent work among the Santhal villages. The man who was saved three years ago, and baptized while they were out tenting, is going on nicely, and earnestly working with them now as an evangelist, and has been the means of bringing some to Christ. Praise the Lord; it cheered my daughter to find him standing well and intelligent in prayer.

Cardiff. CECILIA HOLLYER.

GIRLS IN SPITALFIELDS.—A most interesting gathering took place last week at Artillery-lane, Spitalfields, being the first anniversary of a work amongst rough girls. The use of a room at 5, Artillery-lane has been gratuitously granted one night a week, and the girls value this boon very much. Through the beneficence of a lady, a good dinner was provided on this occasion for about ninety girls and teachers. Prizes of warm and useful garments added to the happiness of several members of the sewing class. This humble effort is carried on by Mrs. Ellen E. Sowerbutts, whose five years' work amongst rough girls of Kent-street, Borough, has given much cause for rejoicing.

THE PENNY DINNER MOVEMENT is spreading in Dublin, and arrangements are being made to open rooms on the northern side of the city. It is said that the arrangements pay when over 120 dinners per day are supplied, the weekly expenses being under one pound. We would heartily commend the movement as a means of assisting the poor without running the risk of demoralising them. At the well-known Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, day by day a crowd of respectable poor people partake of a noonday meal of an excellent bowl of soup and a quarter of a loaf for a penny. This movement, we may add, is under the superintendence of Mrs. Charles Martin, 12, Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

EVANGELISATION OF LONDON.—An interesting conference on this subject was held last week at the Shrubland-road Congregational Lecture-hall, Dalston; convened at the instance of the Christian Instruction Society. Rev. T. C. Udall, Pastor of the Church, read a paper on "The Religious Condition of London," in the course of which he offered some useful suggestions as to reviving the aggressive spirit of the churches. A deeper concern must be felt for the perilous condition of those outside the Gospel. Sunday-school teachers should visit the homes of the children. Earnest invitations should be given to the careless. Bands of Christian workers should go forth. Welcome should be given in the churches to strangers. More help should be given to the temperance movement. Well-conducted missions, with competent missioners, should be held. Conferences should be called together about Christian work and suggestions adopted as to the mode of evangelistic operations amongst the people. Every large suburban church should link itself with one or more of the struggling churches in the poorer neighbourhoods and help them by means of finances and personal work. Mr. Flower, Dr. Wickson, Rev. Dr. Evans, Rev. E. Austin, Rev. James Townley, Mr. Abbott, and other speakers followed, mostly agreeing with and adding to Mr. Udall's plans.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A branch of the Church Army has been inaugurated at Aberdare.

A strong desire is expressed by many that the Bishop of Ripon (Dr. Boyd Carpenter) should be the first Bishop of Wakefield.

At St. Werneth's, Oldham, a twelve days' special mission has been held. There were general services nightly, and separate services for men, women, and children. The mission-preacher was Rev. H. Guildford Sprigg.

The Council of the Church of England Parochial Mission Society are still in search of a suitable successor to the late secretary of the Society, Rev. S. W. Darwin Fox, who was recently appointed to St. Paul's, Maidstone.

A branch of the Trinity College (Oxford) Mission has been opened at Stratford. The Mission district includes the Great Eastern Railway Company's works at Stratford central station, where from four to five thousand men are employed.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Congregational Union of England and Wales will hold its next Autumnal Meetings at Nottingham.

Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, of East Finchley, is giving a series of Sunday evening discourses on "The Papacy: in Scripture, in fact, and in the future."

Professor Elmslie is delivering his course of lectures on "The Early Chapters of Genesis," in the lecture hall of Abney Congregational Church, Stoke Newington.

The Sunday-school in connection with Albion Church, Southampton, recently provided a dinner for two hundred poor children, and subsequently a tea to over three hundred more.

Rev. G. S. Barrett, Norwich, was recently presented by his congregation with a cheque for 300 guineas and a beautifully illuminated address, on the completion of his twenty-one years' work as pastor of the church.

Mr. C. Sylvester Horne, of Mansfield College, Oxford, has been invited to accept, at the close of his college career, the pastorate of Allen-street Church, Kensington, vacant by the resignation, some months ago, of Rev. Colmer B. Symes.

The ladies of Airdrie Church have formed a "King's Daughters' Society," and meet one evening in each week to make clothing for the poorer children of the congregation. Subscriptions for material, coal, &c., are given by a circle of "King's Sons."

About two hundred of the unemployed of Sheffield were present on Sunday week at the service in Broom Park Congregational Chapel, when Rev. H. H. Oakley preached on the practical ministry of prayer. A dinner ticket was given to each of the men on leaving.

Rev. Robert Balgarnie has concluded a week's mission at Kipping Chapel, Thornton, near Bradford. The attendance has been large. On Sunday afternoon a united service was held of the Wesleyan, Methodist Free Church, and Congregational Sunday-schools. During the mission eighty-six persons remained to be conversed with as anxious inquirers.

Rev. Arthur Hall accepted the call to Craven Chapel, W., conditionally on certain improvements being made in the building. This was promptly done, and the new pastor entered on his work a year ago. God has greatly blessed this work. During the year the congregation has considerably increased, and there have been many conversions, and between eighty and ninety admissions to the Church. The Sunday-school, with 600 children, is well maintained, the mothers' meetings largely attended, and various benevolent agencies are in active operation.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Thain Davidson's sermons to young men have been translated into Welsh, Norwegian, French, and Hindustanee, and others.

Rev. Dr Alex. Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, preached a special sermon to the students at Edinburgh University on Sunday afternoon last.

Most of the churches of Aberdeen are uniting in a series of evangelistic services to be held in that city, commencing on Sunday, February 5, and continuing for five weeks.

Since the opening of the new halls in connection with Bonnethill Free Church, Dundee, the young men's Bible-class has increased to a membership of nearly 200, with an average attendance of 150.

An aggressive home mission movement has been commenced in the densely populated neighbourhood of Bow, under the direction of Rev. W. M. Smith, pastor of the church in Bow-road.

Rev. William Miller, LL.D., principal of the Free Church College, Madras, and for over twenty-five years a missionary in India, who is at present in Scotland, is spoken of as the Moderator of the next Free Church Assembly.

The Countess of Aberdeen was present recently at a meeting, in Bell-street U.P. Church, Dundee, of the Ladies' Union, which exists in that town for furthering the interests of friendless girls, and delivered an admirable address on women's share in Christian work.

Rev. W. Balfour, of Edinburgh, has given notice in the Edinburgh Presbytery of an overture to the Assembly to the effect that the presbyteries be empowered to censure such books or pamphlets by Free Church ministers as contain anything contrary to the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of the Church.

A meeting of the Students' Missionary Society of the English Presbyterian Church was held on Monday, last week, when Dr. Monro Gibson delivered a most interesting and suggestive address on "The Relation of Home to Foreign Missions." The secretary stated that the Society had been permitted to send deputations to four churches in London Presbytery, to plead for funds in aid of the Medical Mission work of the Church in Formosa, and twelve other churches had promised to receive deputations.

SALVATION ARMY.

Miss Eva Booth is slowly recovering, and is now able to get out in an invalid chair.

A holiness convention, similar to that recently held at Exeter Hall, is to be held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on Monday and Tuesday, next week.

News has been received of the death of Captain Hannah Franks, one of the missionaries in India. a portrait and sketch of whom appears in last week's War Cry.

New barracks are being erected at Oxford, Southend-on-Sea, Borough-Green, and Ramsgate. Work has been commenced at Wilsden, and at Dudley a building has been secured.

Two stories given in last week's War Cry entitled, "Dubby," and "The Infidel's Story," are full of thrilling incidents, and prove that none are too far gone in sin and misery, to be saved.

METHODIST.

There are now six hundred members in the men's Bible-class at Old Market-street Chapel, Bristol.

New features of interest are developing in connection with the West London Mission. Two spacious rooms have been taken, in which workgirls can meet during the evenings.

An important Wesleyan Home Mission Convention was held last week in Nottingham, in which Revs. J. Ernest Clapham, Mark Guy Pearse, Hugh Price Hughes, Peter Thompson, S. F. Collier, and others took part.

For some time members of the lawless classes have indulged in threats to burn down every place of worship in Canning Town. The Wesleyan and the Primitive Methodist chapels have both been destroyed by fire.

Great interest in foreign missions is being created in different parts of the country by the address of Rev. G. Mackenzie Cobham, of Trivellore, Madras, and of Gnanmuttu, one of his fellow labourers in the missionary cause in Southern India.

At a revival service, Friday, January 20, at Smeed-road, North Bow, a touching scene ensued after an address by Rev. J. F. Porter. A boy about ten years old came out as a penitent. He had scarcely knelt down at a chair in front of the platform before he was joined by his mother and his grandmother. It was a joyous sight to see three generations of one family besieging the mercy-seat together.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

There seems the prospect of revival in Swansea meeting, where, owing to a variety of causes, it had almost ceased to exist. At present a spirit of earnestness and hope pervades many. Help and prayerful sympathy are needed.

Brighton Y.M.C.A. has just shown its appreciation of the valuable services rendered so long by its president, Marriage Wallis. The members have presented him with a portrait of himself, which, we understand, is to be placed in the Association rooms.

The Christian Worker, of Chicago, tells of great activity among Western Friends. In reports "from the field" many series of meetings are described, and conversions and renewals prove the success of repeating "the old, old story," to weary and sinful hearts. The door is wide open among the settlers from the Eastern States, and Friends are welcomed everywhere.

Henry Stanley Newman attended South Wales monthly meeting, at Neath on the 12th inst., and gave an able address on Palestine, in the Town Hall, to a large audience, dressed as an Arab Sheikh. Passing through Swansea, and attending a social tea there, he went to Cardiff, where he had excellent service and good meetings on Sunday the 15th. His visit will be pleasantly remembered.

Bristol and Somerset quarterly meeting was held in Bristol on the 16th and 17th inst., and was well attended. Joseph Storrs Fry gave a thrilling account of his American tour, and of the Friends' and Peace Conferences held in Richmond. Elwood Scott, of Indiana, proclaimed the doctrines of the Gospel very powerfully, and looks to extended service in England, and Ireland, the Continent, and Asia.

BAPTIST.

The British Weekly says there is some doubt as to whether the annual conference of the Pastors' College will be held this year.

Rev. T. Lardner, pastor of Battersea Park Tabernacle, is speedily recovering from the late severe accident, and is expected to resume his duties shortly.

A lecture hall, to seat 450 persons, which will be used as a place of worship prior to the erection of Highgate Archway Chapel, has been opened at Holloway.

During the past year there were ninety-five additions to the membership of the church at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, of which Rev. F. B. Meyer has now resigned the pastorate.

Mr. Spurgeon receives cheering words of approval of his recent action from prominent men of all denominations, in many instances accompanied by large gifts towards the Tabernacle institutions, such as the College, Orphanage, &c.

Rev. George Rogers, for many years principal of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, and who is now more than eighty-eight years of age, preached a Sunday or two since at Norwood, displaying wondrous vitality and vigour of mind and speech.

The Quarterly Reporter of the German Baptist Mission, founded by Pastor Oncken, of Hamburg, notes the opening of new chapels in Berlin; Buda-Pesth, Hungary; Grandenz, Prussia; Mosejuwka, Russia; and Schmölln, Saxe-Altenburg.

A committee of the Baptist Union recommend the constitution of a distinct mission, to be designated the Irish Baptist Home Mission. To this new committee will be transferred the direction, control, and general management of such departments of the work, and such portions of the funds of the British and Irish Home Mission, as exclusively relate to the work in Ireland.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A goodly number have professed conversion during a series of Gospel meetings recently held on the Castlederg Methodist circuit.

The Church of Ireland Temperance Society has added to its roll during the past year sixty-one branches and 8721 new members.

Rev. Charles Inwood, Methodist Conference evangelist, has concluded an eight days' mission at Carlow, and is now successfully at work in Newry.

As several Jewish families have recently come from Russia and other Continental countries to reside in Dublin and Cork, special services in their interests, with encouraging results, have been held in each of these cities by Rev M. Wolkenberg.

The late Mr. Isaac McKinstry McNiell, of Crew, Glenavy, has left the bulk of his property, amounting to eleven or twelve thousand pounds, to be equally divided between the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society and the Moravian Mission Society.

The annual meeting of the Belfast Town Mission was held last week in Belfast. The mission has seventeen agents, who have been actively employed during the year, and through whose efforts, 141 families, hitherto unconnected, have joined the different churches.

Rev. J. A. Smith, Presbyterian chaplain to the Cork garrison, is recovering from his recent severe illness. The high estimation in which he is held by the general public was evidenced when he was very low, by prayers being offered up for his recovery in six or seven of the Protestant churches in Cork.

A series of evangelistic services was held last week in the Protestant Hall, Glenavy, Co. Antrim, by Mr. Michael O'Toole, of Dublin. There was a large attendance night after night, but especially on the last night, when Mr. O'Toole narrated the story of his own conversion from Romanism. At the close several stood up to testify that they had been led to Jesus during the meetings.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. James Pearse, Mansfield, pastor of Silver-street Congregational Chapel, Trowbridge, Wilts.—Rev. W. Fox, of the Congregational Church, East Dereham.—Rev. W. H. Hull, a devoted evangelical clergyman, and formerly vicar of Billinghurst.—Rev. John Hazleton, for thirty-six years pastor of the Baptist Church, Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell. — Rev. W. Fox, pastor of the Cowper-street Congregational Church, East Dereham.—Rev. James Knowles Harrison, vicar of Bridgerule, Holsworthy, North Devon. — Alderman Sir Robert Carden, well known for his interest in the work of Ragged Schools.

Mission Appeals.

Old Christmas Cards.—Captain Knox, R.N., writes to ask for Christmas and New Year's Cards for his Bible albums. He has used the greater part of those kindly sent him two years ago. They can be sent—by parcel or book post—to 36, Seymour-street, Portman-square, W.

Craven Chapel, W.—In repairing the building and making it attractive and comfortable, £2494 was laid out. Towards this the congregation subscribed £913; £1581 remains as a debt, which, under the special circumstances, is a heavy burden and discouragement. Contributions will be thankfully received by the pastor, Rev. Arthur Hall, 1, Oval-road, London, N.W.

The School of Evangelisation at Marseilles, which gave four evangelists to France last July, and has at the present time nine pupils, is just now in financial difficulties. The school fund is not only exhausted, but the director has not yet been able to meet the expenses of the foregoing month; 6000 francs (£240) are wanted to get through the present scholastic year. Nevertheless, he feels sure that God's children will help him to carry on a work which is so necessary to France. Contributions gratefully received by Rev. S. J. Richard, Director, 75, Rue Saint-Jacques, Marseilles; Mr. W. J. Berger, Villa Talbot, Cannes; Rev. Grattan Guinness and Mrs. Guinness, Missionary Institute, 3), Bow-road, London.

THE EMPEROR WILLIAM, in a letter thanking the Red Cross Societies for their New Year's congratulations, says:—"Trusting to God's omniscience, I indulge in the hope that for the sake of the whole Fatherland the time may be far distant when serious work will devolve upon the Red Cross Societies."

THE SCRIPTURES IN INDIA.—In the course of a paper on "The Bible in India," read at the last Calcutta missionary conference, Mr. Ball said:—"The most cheering thing in our work to-day is the demand for the Scriptures. A Hindoo doctor bought 100 copies of the Gospels recently to distribute among his friends; and a still more extraordinary fact is that a Hindoo priest has bought some Bibles and given them away. The missionaries who have attended melas this year report an unprecedented sale of Bibles.

EAST AFRICA.—In 1881 and 1882 an attempt was made by the Swedish East African Mission to enter the Galla country (where Rev. John Houghton and his wife were murdered last year). Two missionaries and five native assistants left Massowah and reached Fanaka in safety, by way of Suakim, Berber, and Khartoum. The opposition of the Egyptian Government, and an attack of illness, made the efforts of the band futile, and two of them lost their lives. In 1885 and 1886 another attempt was made to enter the vast region by way of Taggiurra, but the hostility of the king again barred the way. A third attempt is now being made, through Aden and Zanzibar.

MR. E. J. MATHER,

Founder and Director of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

IF it be true that more evil is done from want of thought than from want of heart, we suppose it is equally true that much good is left undone from lack of knowledge. And yet the same want of thought may be the parent of our ignorance. How many years have passed since England's hardy sons began to reap a perennial and perilously won harvest among the finny treasures of the North Sea, we know not. One thing we do know—that any effort to realise their condition and to relieve their pressing wants, temporal and spiritual, is but a thing of yesterday. Our present purpose, however, is not to dwell on the shortness of vision or the slowness of foot of the Christian Church. A much more pleasant task it is to tell, in brief, a truly wonderful story of mission work—one of the most gratifying, we think, that this century of missions has seen.

Many great movements have sprung from apparently trivial causes, and it was a casual question asked some six years ago that led to the founding of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, which has now eight mission ships actively and steadily engaged in their blessed work of help and healing among those isolated sons of toil.

(From a Photograph by Mr. Thomas Fall, Baker-street, W.)

It was in the autumn of 1881 that Mr. E. J. MATHER learned of the existence of "a floating population, numbering upwards of twelve thousand, year in and year out tossed on the wild North Sea, too far from land to run for shelter, and compelled to ride out the heaviest gales or founder." To the skill, endurance, and daring of these men, unseen, and so long unthought of, London owes a large proportion of its constant fish supply. The London citizen buys his fish, pays his bill (often with a grumble), and thinks no more of the matter. Mr. Mather confesses that he did the same until his eyes were opened to the true state of the case, and he saw that "beyond the price demanded by the fishmonger there is another price rigorously exacted and duly paid." In the pathetic words of Lady Nairne—

> They're no brought here without brave darin'...
> Wives and mithers, maist despairin',
> Ca' them lives o' men.

If that be true of the fishermen of Eastern Scotland, who nightly go in search of herring spoil in the summer season, much more is it true of those thousands of men who frequent the region of the Dogger Bank, all the year round, not excluding the wild winter time, when the stormy winds do blow, and the sea runs mountains high. Further inquiry showed Mr. Mather that the spiritual interests of these men were entirely overlooked, and he at once resolved that something must be done. First of all, he would ascertain for himself exactly how matters stood. So, in the company of a sympathising friend and fellow-worker, he took a trip to the North Sea in one of the fish-carrying steamers, visiting the "Short Blue" fleet, stationed some 300 miles from the Thames. It consisted of 200 fine smacks of from fifty to eighty tons burthen, and employing 1500 hands. This visit vividly brought home to Mr. Mather's mind the stern realities, vicissitudes, and perils of the North Sea smacksman's life. He witnessed the distribution, from the carrier, of the empty fish boxes, and the still more dangerous process of ferrying the fish and placing them on board the London steamer. This latter he describes as "the most perilous part of a smacksman's calling." In one large fleet thirty-five men, on an average, lose their lives every year in boarding the fish, not to speak of the many other fatal disasters occasioned by storms and accidents. Seeing that there were nineteen fleets at work in the North Sea last summer, some idea may be gained of the price, in "lives o' men," that London pays for its deep-sea fish.

Mr. Mather found that in this "Short Blue" fleet there were "perhaps twenty-five or thirty professing Christians, but the great majority were utterly careless and Godless." It was encouraging to find a little band who had remained true to God amidst so much to hinder the Christian life, and who were greatly rejoiced at the thought of something being done for them. One said he had been praying for thirty years that God would interpose and provide them with some means of grace, and this Mr. Mather accepted as a token that success would crown his efforts. In addition to the soul destitution of these floating communities, he was not long in discovering that their physical needs were almost equally great. Bodily injuries through accident were of frequent occurrence, and there was no readier resource in such cases than transporting the wounded man by steamer to London, where he was sent to hospital. He had thus to endure at least two days' suffering, aggravated by the discomforts of the sea, before he came within the circle of medical or surgical aid.

But this was not all. As if the dangers incident to their perilous calling were not enough, these men were exposed to another peril from which we might have expected them to be free. Although Christ's messengers had been slow to recognise their duty towards the far-away smacksmen, the devil's servants had been quick enough to see and to seize their opportunity. The isolated life and hard lot of the deep-sea fisherman makes the soothing weed seem an almost indispensable adjunct, not to say a coveted luxury. This may be a circumstance of which it is not easy for the strictly trained landsman to recognise the necessity; though plenty of them (and high-placed Christians too) indulge in the habit without the same excuse. However, it is a fact that must be accepted, and one that the "coper" at any rate had not been slow to accept and act upon. The "coper," be it understood, is a Dutch trader, who, knowing the demand for tobacco, has in past days made haste to supply it at a price about two-thirds below that for which English duty branded tobacco could be procured. At the same time he carried on board an ample supply of strong drink, with the results that anyone can easily anticipate. For upwards of fifty years, says Mr. Mather, these foreign traders have visited the English trawling fleets, and though ostensibly there for the supply of tobacco, they have been nothing more nor less than floating grog shops. As we have said, the results can well be conjectured. Drunkenness, fraud, theft, suicides, loss of smacks, and consequent loss of life, not to speak of the ruined homes and broken hearts on shore—those, with many other ills and sorrows, have tracked the course of the "coper." Mr. Mather rightly calls them "the devil's mission ships," and every honest smacksman admits that they have been the curse of the fleets.

Such, in bald outline, was the situation that revealed itself to the subject of our sketch, on his first visit to the Dogger Bank. His soul was stirred within him, and well it might be. He determined that something must be done, and he entered on his new crusade with all the ardour of a Paul moved to action at the sight of Athenian idolatry. To the landsfolk, on his return, he told his story and formulated his cherished project. Said he:—

> Let a fishing smack be equipped for missionary purposes, with a medicine chest, a Christian skipper and crew, and a special cabin for any missioner who may be prepared to volunteer his services.

Much interest was expressed in the suggestion, but those to whom he communicated his ardent desire, had not, like himself, seen the field, and he found it no easy matter to translate the project into actual fact. The months went by, and his faith was much tried; but Mr. Mather had long before then learned, in every matter, and especially in every difficulty or trial, to "take it to the Lord in prayer."

And here we may fittingly break the thread of our story for a moment to relate an instance, in his life history, of God's clear and marked interposition, the remembrance of which must have sustained him at this critical stage of his chosen undertaking:—

> During the winter of 1874 Mr. Mather contracted an illness, so serious that his life was despaired of. In the following spring he was placed under fresh treatment, but even then little hope of his recovery was entertained. It was at this time that a very remarkable incident occurred. There had been a consultation of London physicians, and it was felt right to inform the invalid that the verdict was unfavourable. He desired to be left alone, and there, in the quiet of his sick room, commended his loved ones to his heavenly Father's care.
> While thus engaged, the 17th verse of Psalm cxviii.—
>
> "I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord,"
> was brought so vividly to his mind as almost to appear as if audibly addressed to him. From that day there was marked, though very gradual, improvement, and after a further period of six months on the sofa, followed by three months' use of crutches, the patient finally took leave of his doctor, who remarked on going, "If you live to be ninety, you will always be subject to attacks of pain."
> Thirteen years have elapsed, and the verse of the Psalm has been blessedly verified; but the doctor's prophecy has also proved true, for repeatedly when engaged in active Christian work Mr. Mather has been stricken down by spinal neuralgia, so severe as at times to induce delirium, the attacks coming on without the slightest warning, and as suddenly terminating, the intense suffering being succeeded by utter prostration, lasting for several days. He has often remarked, when telling the story of the M.D.S.F., "It has occurred to me that possibly all that intense suffering may have been sent to me in order that I might learn to sympathise with the smacksmen in their deep and unalleviated distresses."

Space would quickly fail us if we attempted to tell, in any detail, the way in which Mr. Mather's prayers in this matter, joined to those of others, have been graciously heard and answered. We regret this the less since the whole story has been told circumstantially by our earnest friend in his fascinating book, NOR'ARD OF THE DOGGER, the publication of which we noted some weeks ago. We can only indicate the main facts of the remarkable success which, under God, has attended Mr. Mather's efforts to supply the great needs of those brave fellows, who for the benefit of us landsfolk reap the harvests of the North Sea at such peril and discomfort to themselves. The first answer came close on the back of a little prayer-meeting that Mr. Mather had in his office with two North Sea skippers. A friend lent £1000 to purchase a smack to be fitted up as a trawler and mission vessel combined. Within three weeks the Ensign was ready for sea; it left Yarmouth amid the benedictions of a host of interested well-wishers; though there were still some who expressed doubts as to the ultimate success of the scheme. Events have falsified these doubts in a marvellous way. The Ensign speedily proved its utility, not only as a little floating hospital and surgery, but as a centre of spiritual blessing. "The work of healing for body and soul progressed side by side." The effects began to appear in the improved condition and behaviour of the men, and the practical sympathy of the owners of the fleets was awakened. Messrs. Hewitt & Co., of the "Short Blue," who had heartily favoured the movement all along, became regular subscribers to the funds of the Mission, and others followed suit. So the blessing grew and multiplied. Further unmistakable answers to prayer were experienced, resulting in the addition, by way of loan, of three other mission vessels. It became evident before long that the cherished idea of the smacks paying their own way by the fruits of trawling was untenable, and after much anxious consideration, the trustees of the Mission, with the help of Christian friends, became registered owners of the four vessels. Mr. Mather devoted his whole time and energy to the rapidly growing work, and yet other vessels were gifted to the Mission, to meet the great demands for increased facilities. It may be well, however, to remind the public that every new mission ship means a very considerable addition to the current expenses of the work, as the maintenance of the vessels is a very costly item.

It became a serious question—what ought to be done to circumvent the baleful tactics of the "coper." The men would have tobacco, and if it could not be conveyed to them apart from the temptations of the "grog shop," these temptations would remain. Mr. Mather manfully faced the many perplexities of the situation: in the result he has been able to surmount difficulties that at one time seemed absolutely to bar the way, and now the coveted weed being supplied to the men on very low terms, the "coper's" occupation in many of the North Sea fleets is almost gone. Moreover, the International Conference that recently met at the Hague, has driven the last nail into the coffin of the floating hell, by the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the North Sea; an edict that will doubtless receive the legislative sanction of all the countries concerned. If the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen had done no greater service than help to bring about such a consummation, it would have justified its existence and operations a thousand times over. The joy that has come to the hearts of the many Christian and well-disposed men in the fleets may be expressed in the words of one fisherman, who wrote:—

> The copers that formerly always used to be with the fleets, doing a good trade, now seldom show themselves. Praise the Lord for that! May the time soon arrive when we shall see a mission vessel with every fleet in the North Sea, and when the abundance of the sea shall be converted to God.

This is the point at which Mr. Mather and his tried friends (of which he now has many, from the Queen on the throne downwards) are aiming; it is one which every reader of these lines will surely pray may soon be reached. It is a question that concerns all who share the benefits of these men's toil, and in estimating "the price of fish" we cannot leave out the most important factor of all—the conditions and surroundings of the fisherman, who carries his life in his hand, so to speak, on those wild and dreary wastes of water, in order that we may be fed. As we have already remarked, the fishing harvest is a perennial one, and cannot be relinquished in the winter season, when the dangers are the greatest. Mr. Mather's latest project is the establishment of a floating hospital, for the relief and care of those wounded in the prosecution of their daily toil. We cannot doubt that this most desirable scheme will in due time come to full fruition. We believe it only needs that the Christian public in these islands should know the facts, in order to have this need also met in a way adequate to the occasion. Much good is being accomplished, not only by the preaching of the Gospel, but by the supply of good and interesting reading. Our lady friends have their special department of work in ministering to the comforts of the men exposed to such vicissitudes of wind and weather. These and all other matters relating to this truly admirable Christian effort, may be learned by a perusal of Mr. Mather's stirring volume. Therefore our last word of advice is to get the book: if you do you cannot fail to read it, and to help on the work of which it tells.

Mr. Mather, we regret to say, is at present suffering from the strain of over work, through excessive devotion to the interests of the Mission which he has founded, and which he now directs, with the help and counsel of the influential body of practical men by whom he is surrounded. He is sojourning for a brief period in the South of Europe; he will return to his post, we trust, fully restored in health, and with large plans for the further development of one of the most blessed and remarkable Christian endeavours of modern times.

Those who have studied Mr. Gray's "Topics for Teachers," and "The Class and the Desk," will readily accord to him the assurance that he has rendered great and efficient service to instructors of the young in religious truth. But his efforts have not stopped here, for already The Biblical Museum has won an honourable place on many a preacher's table as an important aid in the study of God's Word. It only needs to be consulted to establish its position, and a few extracts will speak with more eloquence than a page of commendation.

The work consists of a running comment upon almost every verse, accompanied by explanatory allusions to manners and customs of the East, with here and there a "sketch," showing how to treat the subject under consideration, whilst illustrations in abundance, now in verse, now in anecdote, provide ample material for thoughtful consideration and development. Wise sayings and lucid expositions are quoted from a variety of Bible students and writers, and the reader is provided with the choicest fruit of their labours.

For example, he must indeed be a dull preacher who could not give a helpful discourse with such a start as this:—

A BIBLE STUDY.

Gen. i. 4. I. The light God has made. ("God saw the light, that it was good.") (1) Physical light—"good"; light, sweet; pleasant. Sun, the emblem of many things; cheerful, revealing. (2) Mental light—"good"; hence, in some parts, an idiot is called "dark." (3) Gospel light—"good"; the light of the story of God; light that shined out of darkness to enlighten the Gentiles; Christ, the Light of the world, the Sun of Righteousness. (4) Spiritual light—"good."

II. The law by which it is governed. (1) Not mixed, but separated. ("God divided the light from the darkness.") (2) Sons of light must have no communion with darkness. (3) Churches should be lights in the world. (4) Truth not to be mixed with error.

Learn—(1) Love the light. (2) Walk in it. (3) Enforce the law concerning it.

"God's speaking is his willing, and his willing is his doing."—Bp. Hall.

Then again in Gen. xliii. 26—28:—

(27) I. The great prince thinking of his shepherd-father. A hint to young men who get on in the world.

II. A brother interested in his brethren's welfare.

FRIENDLINESS IN ADVERSITY.

"As it is with the deer that is hunted, when the huntsman goes into the park, he rouses the whole herd, and they all run together, but if one be shot, and they see the blood run down, they will soon push him out of their company. Or, as a man being in his travel upon the road, and there being a sun-dial set up in the way, if the sun shine, he will step out of his way to take notice of it; but if the sun do not shine, he will go by a hundred times and not regard it. So, let but the sun of prosperity shine upon a man, then he shall have friends more than a good many; but if a cloudy day come, and take away the sunshine, he may easily number his acquaintance. And, so when a man goes on in the credit of the world, he shall be welcome into all companies, and much made of by everyone; but if he come once to be shot, and disgrace put upon him, then he shall soon perceive a cloud in every man's face, no one as much as regarding him" (Spencer).

Then, to teach a different lesson, Mr. Gray gives the following nugget from A. Warwick:—

"He gives not best who gives most, but he gives most who gives best. If then I cannot give bountifully, yet I will give freely, and what I want in my hand, supply by my heart. He gives well that gives willingly."

From Lev. x. 1—7 some beautiful lessons are educed, the comments on the texts being also useful:—

Ver. 1.—Nadab...Aaron, see Exod. xxiv. 1—10; censer, fire-pan; and...thereon, frankincense was sprinkled over coals of fire to yield a pleasant, fragrance; Strange, i.e., not taken from the altar which...not, probably referring to Exod. xxx. 9.

Ver. 2.—Went, &c., punishment, prompt, signal, terrible.

Ver. 3.—Said, &c., Moses explains the meaning of this visitation. Aaron...peace, striking example of submission in a father who at once had lost two sons (Job. i. 22).

Ver. 4.—Mishael, &c., Exod. vi. 18—22; Brethren, kinsmen; strictly, they were their father's cousins.

Ver. 5.—Coats, long white linen tunics.

THE SILENCE OF AARON.

Of the silence of grief there is no example more renowned than that of Aaron. This was truly the silence of grief, and no reproach of insensibility can be attached to him. I. The impressions and the conduct of Aaron cannot be usefully estimated without a knowledge of the event. The slaying of his sons was a necessity; they had profaned God's holy ordinances. II. It is a case of humility to be thus silent in the bosom of an irreparable loss, of a profound affliction. III. In this mute sorrow there is also more than wise humility; we must see there also acquiescence. He cannot hide from himself that his sons merited their fate. IV. It is just to recognise in this conduct lowly and firm resignation. Rebellion speaks, resignation holds its peace.

"The fire which had just before sanctified the ministry of Aaron as well-pleasing to God now brought to destruction his two eldest sons because they did not sanctify Jehovah in their hearts, but dared to perform a self-willed act of worship; just as the same Gospel is to one a savour of life unto life, and to another a savour of death unto death."—Keil.

"Patience is the ballast of the soul, that will keep it from rolling and tumbling in the greatest storms. He that will venture out, without this to make him sail even and steady, will certainly make shipwreck and drown himself; first, in the cares and sorrows of this world; and then in perdition."—Hopkins. Lay by a good store of patience, but place it where it will be easily found.

RESIGNATION.

Pain's furnace-heat within me quivers,
God's breath upon the flame doth blow
And all my heart in anguish shivers
And trembles at the fiery glow.
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And in his hottest fire stand still.

He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
On the hard anvil, minded so,
Into his own fair shape to beat it
With his great hammer, blow on blow;
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And at his heaviest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and beats it;
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er, and heats it,
And lets it cool, and makes it glow;
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And in his mighty hand hold still.

Why should I murmur? For the sorrow
Thus only longer-lived would be;
Its end may come, and will to-morrow,
When God has done his work in me.
So I say, trusting, As God will!
And, trusting to the end, hold still.

He kindles, for my profit purely,
Affliction's glowing, fiery brand,
And all his heaviest blows are surely
Inflicted by a master hand.
So I say, praising, As God will!
And hope in Him, and suffer still.

Ver. 6.—Eleazar...Ithamar; See Exod. vi. 23—25. Uncover...Heads, literally, make not your heads loose: an uncovered head is a sign of mourning. Neither...clothes, another sign of sorrow. Lest, &c., they were not to manifest any symptoms of dissent from the Divine procedure. Bewail, &c., they were to mourn over the sin which had incurred so fearful a punishment.

Ver. 7.—Shall...Door, &c., the event was not to hinder the discharge of their official functions.

PERSONAL GRIEFS AND PUBLIC DUTIES.

I. Why public duties should be discharged. The benefit of the many, &c. II. Why the private grief should not be indulged openly. Aaron might seem to side with his sons, or pronounce an opinion upon their punishment. "Let the dead bury their dead," said Jesus. There are times, then, when private sorrows must be kept in abeyance for the public good: nor can it be right that private griefs of high officials should be long permitted to interfere with the duties of office.

"The Christian ought to examine what operation, what influence, his religious performances have upon him. Prayer, hearing, reading, and such-like duties do naturally tend to enlighten the mind, purify the heart, increase our love, strengthen our faith, and confirm our hope; and, therefore, where this is not the effect of them, we may conclude that they are not discharged in that manner, and with that sincerity they ought."—Lucas.

FLEEING FROM SIN.

We often say, "Flee from sin, as from the face of a serpent." Perhaps few of you know how a man feels when, for the first time, he finds himself, as I remember finding myself, within a few inches of a serpent—when he sees the cobra de capello rearing its head ready to strike, and knows that one stroke of those fangs is death, certain death. That moment he experiences a varied passion, impossible to describe; fear, hatred, loathing, the desire to escape, the desire to kill, all rush into one moment, making his entire being thrill. Now, take two men: one is in the face of that serpent, the other is in the presence of the old serpent called Satan, the devil. One is in danger of the sting, the other is in danger of committing sin. Which of the two has the most reason to flee? Oh, thou that art tempted to sin this day against God, flee from sin as from the face of a serpent—a far deadlier serpent is that old serpent the devil than the other. Fear every sin—"abhor it." The Apostle's word is not "dislike it," "disapprove of it," "have a distaste for, an aversion to it"; it is not even the ordinary word "hate," but a word much stronger than any of these—a word which in the original is never used except this once in the whole of the New Testament. The literal meaning of it seems to be, Hate it as you would hate the River Styx; and to the people to whom he wrote, the idea conveyed was, Hate it as you would hate the way to hell. So it is the way to hell. Hate it always as you would hate the way to hell.

The demands upon our space prevent out giving further extracts, but we have quoted sufficient to show that, as a commentary, this work is of immense value, and the cheap edition just issued will greatly enlarge the scope of its usefulness.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

VII.—THE FULNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

(Concluded.)

(1) Excite holy desire by considering what the Fulness of the Spirit means.—We cannot expect to have it, if we are quite content to live without it. Our Father is not likely to entrust this priceless gift to those who are indifferent to its possession. Where the flame of desire burns low, there can be no intelligent expectation that the Holy Spirit's fulness shall be realised.

And it is not enough to have a fitful and inconstant desire, which flames up to-day, but will remain dormant for months and years. There must be a steady purpose, able to stand the test of waiting, if need be, for ten days; and to bear the rebuff of silence or apparent denial.

And yet the flame of desire needs fuel. We must nurse before that fire can burn. And it becomes us, therefore, to stir up the gift that is within us, by a quiet consideration of all that is meant by becoming Spirit-filled.

There is no book which will so move us in this direction as the Acts of the Apostles. It is perfectly marvellous to see what this fulness did for those who first received it. Cowards became brave. Obtuse intellects, which had stumbled at the simplest truths, suddenly awoke to apprehend the Master's scheme. Such power attended their words that crowds became congregations; Christ's murderers became his worshippers and friends; councils of clever men were not able to withstand the simple eloquence of indisputable facts; towns and countries were shaken, and yielded converts by the thousand to the unlearned but fervid preachers of the Cross. And all this was simply attributable to the power which had become the common property of the whole Church. And there is not a fragment of reason why it should not do so much for us. And, as we contrast that triumphant success to our halting progress, shall not we be filled with incontrollable longings that He should work similar results by us? We may still further secure the same results by studying the biography of saintly men, belonging to recent centuries. Happy the man within reach of a library, the shelves of which are well lined with books of holy biography. He will never be in want of additional stimulus. He will not envy or repine, but he will constantly lift eye and heart to Heaven, asking that as much may be done through himself.

And moreover, the promises of the Scripture are enough to incite us to the uttermost. That rivers of water should flow from us. That we should never need to be anxious about our words, because they would be given. That we should be taught all things and led into the whole circle of truth. That we should know Christ, and be changed into his image. That we should have power. All this is so fascinating, that it is impossible not to glow with a holy desire to be charged with the Holy Spirit, as a jar with electricity. And, if needs be, we shall be prepared to bear the test of long waiting, as the faithful few did in the upper room.

(2) Seek this blessed Fulness from the right Motive.—God will not find water for us to turn our own water-wheels. He will do nothing to minister to our pride. He will not give us the Holy Spirit to enable us to gain celebrity, or to procure a name, or to live an easy, self-contented life.

If we seek the Holy Spirit merely for our happiness, or comfort, or liberty of soul, it will be exceedingly unlikely that He will be given. His one passion is the glory of the Lord Jesus; and He can only make his abode with those who are willing to be at one with Him in this. "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" But if you are actuated simply by the desire that the Lord Jesus may be magnified in you, whether by life or death; if you long, above all, that men should turn away from you to Him, as they did from John the Baptist; then, rejoice, because you are near blessing beyond words to describe. If your motives fall below this standard, trust in Him to enlighten and purify them, and offer Him a free entrance within. It will not then be long ere there shall be a gracious response; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, and He shall sit as a refiner of silver, that the sons of Levi may offer an offering in righteousness.

(3) Consider that Holy Scripture is his special Organ.—A subtle danger besets the teaching of this most helpful doctrine, and one that we need to guard against. Some earnest people have magnified the inner light and leading of the Holy Spirit to the neglect of the Word which He gave, and through which He still works on human hearts.

This is a great mistake, and the prolific parent of all kinds of evil. For directly we lay aside the Word of God we lay ourselves open to the solicitation of the many voices that speak within our hearts, and we have no test, no criterion of truth, no standard of appeal. How can we know the Spirit of God, in some of the more intricate cases which are brought into the court of conscience, unless our judgment is deeply imbued with the Word of God?

We must not be content with the Spirit without the Word; or with the Word without the Spirit. Our life must travel along these two, as the locomotive along the parallel metals. The Word is the chosen organ of the Spirit; and it is only by our devout contact with it that we shall be enabled to detect his voice. It is by the Word that the Spirit will enter our hearts, as the heat of the sun passes into our chambers through the beams of light that enter the open casement. We need a widespread revival of Bible study. These mines of Scripture, lying beneath the surface, call loudly for investigation and discovery: and those who shall obey the appeal, and set themselves to the devout and laborious study of the inner meaning of the Word, shall be soon aware, that they have received the filling that they seek.

(4) Be prepared to let the Holy Ghost do as He will with you.—The Holy Ghost is in us, and by this means Christ is in us, for He dwells in us by the Spirit, as the sun dwells in the world, by means of the atmosphere vibrating with waves of light. But we must perpetually yield to Him, as water to the containing vessel. This is not easy; indeed it can only be accomplished by incessant self-judgment, and the perpetual mortification of our own self-life.

What is our position before God in this respect? We have chosen Jesus as our Substitute, but have we also chosen Him, by the Holy Spirit, as our Life? Can we say, like the Apostle: "Not I, but Christ liveth in me"? If so, we must be prepared for all that it involves. We must be willing for the principle of the new life to grow at the expense of the self-life. We must consent for the one to increase, whilst the other decreases, through processes, which are painful enough to the flesh. Nay, we must ourselves be ever on the alert, hastening the processes of judgment, condemnation, and crucifixion. We must keep true in our allegiance to the least behest of the Holy Spirit, though it cost tears of blood.

The perpetual filling of the Holy Spirit is only possible to those who obey Him; and who obey Him in the dotting of an i, and in the crossing of a t. There is nothing trivial in this life. By the neglect of slight commands, a soul may speedily get out of the sunlit circle, and lose the gracious plenitude of Spirit-power. A look, a word, a refusal, may suffice to grieve Him in ourselves, and to quench Him in others. Count the cost; yet do not shrink back afraid of what He may demand; He is the Spirit of love; and He loves us too well to cause grief, unless there is a reason, which we should approve, if we knew as much as He.

(5) Receive Him by Faith.—"As you received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in Him." Faith is the one law of the Divine household. And as once you obtained forgiveness and salvation by faith, so now claim and receive the Holy Spirit's fulness.

Fulfil the conditions already named; wait quietly but definitely before God in prayer, for He gives the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him; then reverently appropriate this glorious gift; and rise from your knees, and go on your way, reckoning that God has kept his word, and that you are filled with the Spirit. Trust Him day by day, to fill you, and keep you filled. According to your faith so shall it be done to you.

There may not be, at first, the sound of rushing wind, or the coronet of fire, or the sensible feeling of his presence. Do not look for these, any more than the young convert should look to feeling as an evidence of acceptance. But believe, in spite of feeling, that you are filled. Say over and over, "I thank Thee, O my God, that Thou hast kept thy word with me. I opened my mouth, and Thou hast filled it; though, as yet, I am not aware of any special change." And the feeling will sooner or later break in upon your consciousness, and you will rejoice with exceeding great joy; and all the fruits of the Spirit will begin to show themselves.

There is, of course, more in the doctrine of the Holy Spirit than is at all realised by the writer of these feeble lines. The fiery baptism of the Holy Spirit may be something far beyond. Let us then not be content to miss anything possible to redeemed men; but, leaving the things that are behind, let us press on to those before, striving to apprehend all for which we have been apprehended by Christ Jesus. And if we persevere, we shall realise possibilities in our lives that shall recall the days of the Apostles, and enable us to understand what Jesus meant when He spoke of those greater works which should be wrought by them that believed in Him since He went to the Father.

Y.W.C.A CHANGE AND ADVANCE.

The London Y.W.C.A. publish their report containing a list of the working Associates, the various branches, the Bible-classes, and other meetings. The reader will find here a complete compendium of everything needing to be known with respect to boarding-houses and restaurants, convalescent homes, institutes, &c. The membership has increased during the year to 13,500; fifteen new branches have been formed, and the entire income of the Society amounted to upwards of £6000. The development of the "Travellers' Aid" is a marked feature of the year's work; many girls have been rescued from the clutches of the designing women who haunt the railway stations in order to entrap the ignorant. Among the art students it is hoped that many have given their hearts to God. The Servants' Home is much appreciated, and a steady growth and increasing spiritual interest have marked the progress of the various institutes. This is true of the "Public-house Visitation;" two hundred of these resorts are under the visitors' care, as well as two large music-halls and the Aquarium. In connection with the Factory Helpers' Union, a more extended field of operations is contemplated.

Friends in the country are requested to give young women, coming to houses of business in London, letters of introduction to the "resident superintendents" near the district in which they will be located, or write to Miss A. Ely, 16a, Old Cavendish-street, W.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE CONFERENCES.—The newly-formed Christian Evidence section of the Edinburgh University Missionary Association is at present holding a series of extremely interesting meetings. Discussion is allowed, and many secularists attend and have an opportunity of stating their views and objections, which are answered by the lecturer. The meetings appear to be popular, and are likely to be productive of good.

DR. CLIFFORD ON "THE SACRAMENTS."

A lecture by Dr. Clifford has just been published treating of the true place and significance of Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The subject is of so much importance, and bears so closely on questions now rife in the public mind, that such an utterance on it, from the pen of the Vice-Chairman of the Baptist Union, has special interest for many beyond the bounds of his own community.

Six aspects of the theme are dealt with; the undoubted appointment of both institutions by our Lord at the outset of his ministry on earth; their permanent obligation on the Churches of to-day and of all coming time; their connection with the present dispensation as "severely spiritual" in its character; their value as the oldest historical monuments of Christianity; their corruption by the admixture of Gentile sacerdotalism; and their indissoluble relation to Jesus Christ, as the Sole Redeemer, and Sole Legislator of his Church.

In the first division, the Saviour is represented as accepting baptism at the hands of John, "as the sign of his cordial welcome to the Baptist's message, joy in the hopes, and choice of the responsibilities, of the national movement towards the rule of God and righteousness, which the bold and daring reformer had inaugurated." This is true so far as it goes, but it is a very insufficient exposition of the baptism of Jesus. The baptism of our Lord in Jordan was much more than this; it was the confession, on the part of the Sinless One, of the sins of the people, as though they had been his own. Paul wrote to Philemon, "If he have wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that to my account, I will repay thee." Jesus, in subjecting Himself to the baptism of John ("after all the people had been baptized," as Luke significantly says), definitely and officially entered upon the work which God had given Him to do. He then confessed our sins, saying, as it were, "Put them to my account: I will repay Thee." And on the cross He discharged the awful debt, when He "put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

All who came to John's baptism, came "confessing their sins," hence John's demur to baptize the Holy One. But as the promised Sin-bearer the Lord Jesus now took the first step in fulfilment of Daniel's prophecy, that He should "bring in everlasting righteousness," and therefore answered the Baptist, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." This was the beginning, as his death was the finishing, of his redeeming work. By sharing the Divinely-appointed immersion, He foreshadowed his own death and resurrection as the sinner's substitute, being thus symbolically introduced to men as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

In view of this, Dr. Clifford's explanation of Christian baptism, as appointed by Christ, while true in its statements, falls short of the whole truth it is designed to convey. "Baptism," he says, is "the picture of an entire devotion to a supreme and all-sufficient Master." It is also "an identification of the disciple with his Master in aim and experience, in separation from sin and death, and in ascent to newness of life and experience." But it is also a sign of the believer's identification with Christ in the vicarious aspects of his death and resurrection. In his death we died; in his resurrection we were raised; in his ascension we were made to sit together with Him in the heavenly places, in Christ Jesus (Rom. vi.; Col. iii. 1—4; Eph. ii. 6). The practical outcome is well stated by the lecturer; the underlying basis on which it rests, the source from which it springs, must, however, be as clearly discerned and as unequivocally asserted. Our baptism is not only "into the likeness of his death and ascension from the grave, to his new and conquering life at the right hand of the Father," but also into the fact of his death as having "died for our sins, and been raised again for our justification." The Lord's Supper equally proclaims this twofold aspect of identification with Christ.

The spirituality of both ordinances, as distinguished from mere form and ceremony is emphatically set forth, and the paganised type of them called Ritualism and Sacramentarianism is shown to be directly traceable to heathen corruptions and materialistic conceptions utterly at variance with the genius of Christianity. The sublime simplicities of these ordinances as instituted by Christ, have indeed been overlaid with the traditions and dogmas of men, and object lessons designed to promote spiritual life have thus been made to minister to priestly pretensions and degrading superstitions.

The following protest is as timely as it is true:—

> "Washing," according to Tertullian, is the door by which the heathens are initiated into the wide-spread worship of Isis and Mithras. Murder and other crimes could be expiated in these and other religions by certain processes of cleansing with water and blood; and so the rite of baptism first becomes the occasion of the remission of guilt, then it is tied up with it, and at length it is inseparable from it. Men "are born again for ever" by it. "Waters become healing through religion." Cleansing is conditioned upon a purely material act. Then, surely, there is every reason why infants and "the dead" should share in it, the former in their own names and immediately, and the latter by proxy. Why should so great a good, so easily accessible, be delayed? for as Keble says:—
> What sparkles in that lucid flood
> Is water by gross mortals eyed,
> But seen by faith 'tis blood
> Out of a dear friend's side.
>
> A few calm words of faith and prayer,
> A few bright drops of holy dew,
> Shall work a wonder there
> Earth's charmers never knew.
> Well, indeed, may the question be asked, "Can there be a more striking instance of the survival of those material conceptions in religion which we designate as heathen, than the belief that God's wrath with an infant a few days old will be turned into favour by the sprinkling of a few drops of water and the recitation of a Scripture phrase? How long will spiritual Christianity cling to these beggarly elements of old Gentile cults?" How long! How long, indeed! Is this anti-Christian teaching never to cease? Having begun in the Spirit, are we always to try to make ourselves perfect by the flesh? Will men, who love a spiritual and New Testament Christianity, for ever persist in supporting an organisation that by this Pagan dogma strikes at the very root of all spiritual religion? At least we may rejoice that in non-sacerdotal communions the theory of what Canon Liddon calls "the great Sacrament of our Regeneration" is being displaced by the healthier and more spiritual doctrine that the baptism of an infant is only declaratory of the privileges of children in the redemption of Christ, and does nothing whatever towards its "regeneration," or "grafting into the body of Christ." May it not be long before we understand that it is more in accord with the mind of our Lord to "dedicate" our children to God in the presence of his people, and then to leave them the joy of expressing by their own act in baptism their loyalty to Him as consciously their only Master and Lord!

The most striking part of Dr. Clifford's argument is that which discusses the means by which the sacerdotal element is to be purged out of modern ideas on the sacraments of the New Testament. The "three reliable tests" he propounds are admirably worded, and furnish the only safe ground to go upon. They are these:—

"(1) Do the institutes spring from the express appointment of the Founder of the Christian religion? If not, they are none of his. (2) Do they enshrine the central ideas of his religion, and none other? If not, they are 'of men, and not from heaven.' (3) Do they give pure and genuine aid in realising his spirit and continuing his work? Otherwise, how can they be according to his mind?"

It follows that "it is an infringement of the rights of the King Himself to add to the number, or change the significance of the New Testament rites."

Valuable also are the paragraphs, in which it is shown that the ordinances of Jesus "enshrine the substance and significance of his religion," and "are the fitting organs of his thoughts and ideas, revelations, and service." Forcible also are the warnings against the notion that ordinances can in themselves, apart from the spiritual and experimental nature of their observance, be a means of grace. But in this division, as well as in the first, we could wish the objective side of truth connected with the symbolism of Baptism and the Lord's Supper were as fully stated as the subjective. Its bearing on the substitutionary nature of the work of Christ is surely as important as its influence in the formation of a Christlike character.

Denominational Baptists will hardly relish the statement by one of themselves that "in the New Testament baptism has no assigned relation to a local and particular church," and, again, that "it is not itself the qualification for church membership;" John Bunyan being quoted to support the assertion that "the Word nowhere testifies to its being the entering ordinance of Church communion." Brotherhood among the regenerate is said to be so much the governing principle of the teaching of Christ as that "nothing is to be suffered in connection with these ordinances which affronts the spirit of fraternal affection and co-operation."

The general purport of this lecture is, so far as it goes, so good, that we would fain avoid anything like carping criticism; but we cannot refrain from regretting the Doctor's mode of referring to our Lord as coming for baptism "to his cousin John," a style of reference which painfully reminds us of his description of Christ in another work as "the unique young man of Galilee." Such phrases, to say the least, are offensive to good taste, and minister to an irreverent spirit prevalent in theological circles, which it is surely desirable to repress rather than promote. In this instance it forms a blot on what is, when regarded as a whole, a really effective and timely protest against a pernicious but advancing sacramentarianism. G.

BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.

The annual report of this work is most encouraging, and but for the lack of funds the work might now extend indefinitely on all sides. Notwithstanding the fierce opposition of the priests, there have been twenty-two members added to the little church at Tremel, during the past eighteen months. The priests have assumed the aggressive, and much suffering has been undergone by the indefatigable colporteur-evangelists by whom the work is carried on, and by the converts who have usually to fly for their lives. Conflagrations have been made of the copies of the New Testament purchased by the poor Breton peasants of the colporteurs out of their very scanty means. But in not a few cases the truth had, previous to the discovery of the books by the priests, entered and found a permanent lodgment in the hearts of the people.

The progress of the year includes the opening of new branches at Jersey and Havre, the latter being very prosperous; and the erection and installation of the much-needed school for girls at the chief station for Tremel. Help is greatly needed in every department. M. Lecoat pleads for assistance in the erection of a modest place for worship in the Breton language, at Brest, where the land and a nucleus for building is in hand. He says he would not have the slightest difficulty in gathering four hundred for worship had he a building. Mr. Joseph Wates, 2, Princess-road, Lewisham-hill, London, is secretary. W. L. Lang.

SOUTHSEA MISSION.—There is much distress in Portsmouth, through the large discharges from the dockyard and other causes. Numbers out of employment; homes without fire and food, and children without necessary clothing to keep them warm, are frequently coming under my observation, and the sad tales one has to listen to are very painful. In order to relieve the distress a little I have, many weeks past, given soup suppers, bread, &c. Large numbers have eagerly received what we have been able to provide. They willingly have stayed to a Gospel service, and listened attentively. I am most anxious to continue this if help is forthcoming. John Denning.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVITIES IN INDIA.

BY MRS. A. S. DYER.

It had been a matter of speculation with our little party, as we travelled from place to place, spending a few days in one city, and a week in another, as to where we should find ourselves at Christmas. But our heavenly Father, who guides us' step by step, had so arranged our pathway that on December 22 we arrived at the home of some good missionaries in a country district, who warmly invited us to stay with them and see how the native Christians spend Christmas.

It was difficult to realise we were anywhere near that festive season. Abounding sunshine, trees as green as in England in July, roses and green peas, did not seem to connect themselves naturally with holly and plum-pudding; to say nothing of their frequent accessories of frost and snow.

Our friends are connected with the American Methodist Mission, and have a district assigned to their care containing hundreds of villages, with about two millions of inhabitants, great numbers of whom have never heard the Gospel preached. Our friends are the only foreign missionaries in the district, and although they have a faithful band of native helpers, they are few indeed in comparison to the immense population around. A great portion of the cooler part of the year is spent in camping out among these villages. The missionary and his wife take their two little children and pitch their tent in the midst of a group of villages, and go from one to the other telling the glad tidings of salvation from sin. While the missionary addresses the men, his wife gathers in the women, sometimes using a magic lantern to illustrate the subject she is talking about. The people usually listen so eagerly to the good news that they would gladly spend all their time in this way if it were possible. But they are also father and mother to the little community of native Christians, among whom they dwell, and Christmas finds them at home.

The mission bungalow is situated in a beautifully wooded district, laid out with nice roads, about a mile from the native city. Adjoining is a boarding-school for girls, the daughters of native Christians. Those who show by their lives that they have really accepted Christ as their Saviour are trained as Bible-women, and teachers, and a useful sphere of life is found for each. Another department of work is the large Sunday-schools of Hindu and Mahommedan boys (the children of heathen parents), carried on in the city and some of the nearer villages. These were to have a grand méla, or fête, at Christmas. Christmas Day falling on Sunday this year, the festivities were held on Saturday instead.

About eleven o'clock in the morning, all the boys, to the number of about eight hundred, had assembled in a grove near by, the appointed place of meeting. Like the boys at home on similar occasions, they took care not to be late. Then a procession was formed. The missionary walked first with his large cork hat, and umbrella up to protect him from the sun. The band came next, a native band hired for the occasion. I am afraid I cannot describe either their music or their instruments; they must be heard to be appreciated. The boys thought it perfection, no doubt, but to our unaccustomed ears it sounded as if each were trying to play a tune of his own composing, independently of the others. Then came the boys, two and two, of all ages from eighteen to five; and every grade of life seemed to be represented, from the young Mohammedan of the first rank in green silk dress and scarlet tunic, embroidered with gold, to the Coolie boy with a few rags around his body. The diversity of dress made the scene picturesque. No two were dressed alike, and, as they use as many bright colours as possible, they looked very gay. Many carried banners, too. One very pretty one had "Victory to Jesus" in Hindu characters. Another in Urdu, "Masih se Najat" (Salvation through Christ); another "Bara-din" (the Great Day), being their name for Christmas. After the boys, came the girls of the boarding-school before mentioned. They looked very nice in their clean white chuddahs. Between the boys and the girls, I should have said, came an elephant, on which the gentleman of our party was mounted. The ladies were to have had one too, but a howdah, the proper appurtenance in which ladies ride on elephants, could not be obtained, so we brought up the rear in an ordinary conveyance.

After marching through the native city the procession arrived at the large tent, which had been erected under the shade of some noble trees. The floor was spread with carpet for the children to sit upon, with just a few seats at one end, where was a small table piled up with books for prizes.

All being seated the proceedings of the day commenced. One lad of the native Christian community recited the golden texts of the whole year from the International Sunday-school Lessons. One of the girls did the same. A Mohammedan lad read an essay of his own composing on the advantages of speaking the truth. Another, a Hindoo, read an essay advocating total abstinence from all intoxicants, including opium and native drinks, as well as English liquors. Other essays and recitations followed, interspersed with singing. The verses of the Hindi hymns are mostly in couplets. The chorus comes first, and nearly every line is repeated over and over again. One of the most musical of those sung at the méla, commenced, "Jai Prabhu Yishu" (Victory to Jesus). Another favourite, we have heard so much that it is getting to be quite familiar to us; it has for chorus:—

Kyún mana bhula hai, yih sansárá
Mana mata de, tuka kera le guzera.

I inquired the subject of this. It is a genuine Hindi composition on the unsatisfying nature of earthly things, and a faithful transcript of life's experience, concluding with the thought that in Christ alone is peace to be found.

After the recitations, &c., one of the visitors gave a short address, and then the boys came forward to receive their prizes. Their names sounded strange to English ears: Juggernath, Brahma, Budri, Ganesha, &c., interspersed with the Bible names of the Christian boys. Four boys received a Bible each for having passed an examination on the first ten chapters in Matthew's Gospel. Others had books and pictures for various degrees of proficiency and regular attendance. Surely this Scripture teaching must bear fruit in after days. More than one hundred prizes were given. The girls sang "God save the Queen" in Hindi, and the proceedings, as far as the inside of the tent was concerned, were at an end.

Outside, under the trees, were several native sweetmeat dealers busily weighing out a liberal quantity of sweets for each child. A leaf was dexterously fashioned into cup-shape, and fastened by a large thorn; into this each child's portion was put. We did not remain to see the end of the distribution, but hastened back to the mission bungalow to prepare for the next event on the day's programme.

This was no less an event than a double wedding. Silas, one of the schoolmasters, was to be married to Grace, a Christian widow. It was a satisfactory arrangement. They were both still young, and Silas was also a widower. The other, however, was the most interesting affair. One of the servants of the house, a respectable young man, about nineteen years old, wanted a wife. A suitable girl could not be found on the spot, so he and his mother had started early in the week to a city about a hundred miles away, where there is a large orphanage for Christian girls. Before they started, the mother armed herself with all the information she could obtain about these girls, being especially careful to take the names of a few who had earned for themselves an unsatisfactory reputation, so that she might avoid the mistake of choosing one of these. Mother and son had returned from the expedition that morning, accompanied by the bride-elect, seemingly well satisfied with their choice; although it was rumoured that her complexion was not so fair as they would have liked, white being their ideal of beauty, and this young person's was about the blackest type seen in India. However, her character was good, and that was more important than her complexion.

Carpets were spread on the grass in front of the mission bungalow, within a semi-circle of beautiful trees. Nearly the whole of the native Christian community were present, the girls and women seated on the ground on one side, and the men on the other, with a row of chairs at the end for the missionary and visitors. The ceremony appeared to be the same as used at other Christian marriages, except for the language. Immediately it was over, brides and bridegrooms turned their backs to each other and went their several ways, the women to sit among the women, and the men among the men.

Then another curious ceremony took place. A native preacher, a widower with five children, was publicly betrothed to the head teacher of the girls' school. They knelt on the carpet a short distance from each other, repeated a few sentences and exchanged presents. The lady received a ring, and the gentleman a Bible, a pocket-handkerchief and five rupees.

Meanwhile the wedding dinner had been all day in course of preparation. Two immense brass pots had been simmering on separate fires a short distance off, and now large dishes of putao (meat and rice cooked together) were passed around, and scooped out plentifully into the bright brass panikins held out to receive them; curry from the other pot was added. Knives and forks were dispensed with. Each mixed his portion up with his hands, and put it in his mouth in the same way. Flat cakes of bread, something like our pancakes in appearance, completed the meal. Sweetmeats were distributed as a sort of desert, then all dispersed to meet again in the church at six o'clock to an entertainment, to which all the native Christians were invited.

A guava tree, condemned because it bore no fruit, had been cut down in the mission garden the day before. This was set up at the end of the church, and did duty excellently for a Christmas tree. The scene was very pretty, home-like, and yet strange. The girls of the boarding school were arranged on one side of the room, the rest of the people on the other. The majority of the girls wore a broad red badge with an inscription in gilt letters. This was to show that they belonged to a society to prevent quarrelling among themselves. The president of the society read the rules during the evening. The first part of the entertainment consisted of singing and recitation by the girls. They sang Hindu versions of some of our favourite Christmas hymns and carols. Five of the tiniest sang together very prettily—to the tune so familiar to English children at home. One anthem was sung in English by the older girls, and another bright little lass about twelve recited in very good English:—

Hark! the glad sound, the Saviour comes.

Others recited portions of Scripture. After about an hour, profitably passed in this manner, the gifts from the Christmas tree were distributed. There was something for everybody. A concertina for the chief Bible-woman, to help her in her village work. Useful books, towels, and handkerchiefs, with here and there a garment for the older people, kites for the little boys, dolls for the little girls. Large bags of coloured paper filled with popcorn, parched rice, sweets, and cakes for nearly everybody. Cards and picture-books to fill up. Everybody seemed happy, their faces shone with delight, and one little girl, in making her salaam for the evening, said it had been indeed "a great day" with "Kushi par Kushi" (pleasure upon pleasure) all the time.

Sunday was a quiet day after the festivities. We attended the morning service and Sunday-school in the native church. The native pastor, Nabi Baksh, who is almost entirely supported by the congregation, gave us a sermon from one of the Christmas texts which adorned the walls —"Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, and goodwill to men." We regretted that we could understand so little of it.

In the afternoon the missionary's wife had her mothers' meeting in the corner of the verandah. About fifteen women were present. Many of the older women cannot read; others, although really interested in the story of the Cross, are very ignorant and need constant teaching, line upon line, here a little and there a little, to enlighten their dark minds, and ground them in the principles of Christian truth. Three of those present had accepted the Gospel only very recently. Their appearance was a remarkable contrast to that of the others, and bore a striking, if indirect testimony to the elevating and softening influence of the Gospel of Christ.

In the evening we attended the service for English soldiers in the barracks, which is also under the care of our friends. Miss Collins spoke. It was an interesting occasion, though few were present.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers writes:—I have been holding a twelve days' Mission for children, at Ealing, n the Y.M.C.A. Hall. We had twenty-one services, and the interest was fully sustained throughout. Three hundred of the children made portfolios to contain the hymn sheets, music hand-bills, and picture leaflets. The hymns and tunes from Gems of Praise were much appreciated; that book ought to be better known.

Hutchinson and Sayer, Palestine-place Schools, Cambridge Heath, Feb. 14—17.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, February 5, John i. 40—51; Monday, February 6, John ii. 1—12; Tuesday, February , John ii. 13—25; Wednesday, February 8, John iii. 1—13; Thursday, February 9, John iii. 4—24; Friday, February 10, John iii. 25—36; Saturday, February 11, John iv. 1—14.

"PEACE AND GOODWILL."—The current issue of this serial records the doings of the various Peace Associations throughout the country. A thrilling speech upon the horrors of war, by one who was present at the siege of Paris, will be read with real interest. Several new "peace tracts" are announced; also an "Appeal to Women Everywhere"; these may be had gratis on application at the depôt, at Wisbeach, Miss Wade, manager.

GENERAL GORDON.—The recurrence of Gordon's death day reminds us all of the duty incumbent on each of us to live as Gordon lived, ever in the conscious presence of God, and to work as Gordon worked, ever with the tenderest compassion and sympathy for "the least of these my brethren." Simplicity of soul even as of a little child, tenderness exceeding that of a woman, combined with single-souled sincerity to make him an ideal for us all. Courageous he was as a lion, patriotic if ever Englishman was, but the element of his character which appealed most to the popular heart was the combination of all these heroic virtues with a passionate sympathy for the poor and the oppressed, and an absolute self-sacrifice in the service of the weakest and the most helpless of human beings. He, too, sought to seek and to save those which were lost. And therein in death, as in life, he has helped to bring men nearer their Divine Exemplar. —Evening Paper.

LOSS OF LIFE AT SEA.

Sir,—You have always shown an interest in saving the lives of those imperilled by the sea. The magnitude of some recent disasters leads us to inquire: Might not these have been prevented? When a vessel is in her final peril she must put her passengers into the boats: what sort of boats ought they to be? When a vessel has been wrecked and has passengers still on board, a lifeboat is often the only means of rescuing them: of what sort should the lifeboat be?

There are mainly two sorts of lifeboats:—(1) Those that are flat in the water, and low over the water: the main feature of these boats is that it is impossible to sink them and almost impossible to upset them. (2) There are those that are deeper under water because they are sharper, and are much higher over the water: the main feature of these boats is that in case they upset in deep water they will right themselves again, and that they have a considerable wind-draught, being high out of the water. So great indeed is the wind-draught that it is almost impossible to pull them against a heavy gale.

It was an unlucky day for seamen when self-righting lifeboats were invented! Far better invent a boat that will not want self-righting, because it won't capsize. Such are the lifeboats made by Messrs. White, of Cowes; such was the lifeboat which, in 1864, under the intrepid management of Captain Kearney White, carried her crew in safety through a tidal wave that would have swamped a man-of-war, at Valencia, off the West Coast of Ireland. Yes, the low, irreversible lifeboat is bound to supersede the high, self-righting boat.

There are, besides, two serious objections to the high, self-righting boats. In the first place, the reason why they resume their natural position, if upset, is because their ends are so high that they cannot remain balanced floating up-side down, or on their sides. But these high ends present a target for the wind and waves. The seamen at Valencia, co. Kerry, take one of their own ordinary whale boats in preference to the self-righting lifeboat, if they have to pull out against a heavy sea.

Will you, sir, then allow me to make a suggestion. Let statistics of what each type of boat has accomplished be collected, and let the opinions of men who have had experience of each or of both types of boat be invited, and let an effort be definitely made to improve the British lifeboat; for the recent disasters to shipping clearly show that there is room for improvement.

Again: renewed and continuous effort might be made to employ human ingenuity in improving and simplifying the boat-launching apparatus of vessels, by the offer of liberal money prizes.

Again: in The Times of Feb. 23, 1876, there was a very interesting article upon White's lifeboat bridges. This is a contrivance whereby the ordinary bridge of a vessel is constructed so as to consist of a detachable lifeboat raft, capable of being released when required, from a sinking ship, and capable of saving 200 or 300 people. It takes up no extra room in the vessel, as the bridge must be there in any case, and yet because it costs a trifle it has not been generally adopted. Public opinion and public influence might be profitably brought to bear upon this great question.

When we remember the horrors of a wreck, the melancholy features of a death by drowning, the broken hearts that are left to weep over the gallant dead, we shall not regard our best efforts to improve Great Britain's apparatus for saving life at sea an effort thrown away.

Your obedient servant,
J. Townsend Trench.

DOWN GRADE AMONG THE JEWS.

Speaking to an enthusiastic audience in the Free Trade Hall, at Oldham, on Sunday, Jan. 22, Herr Cohen maintained that the Down Grade amongst the Jews is as evident as amongst the Gentiles. The traditional Jew is always looking forward to the coming of the Messiah, and his only hope, consolation, and prayer is that, previous to his death, he may visit and die in Jerusalem; and in order to accomplish this object he is ready to spend all he possessed. On the other hand, the modern Jew of the English type has no desire to go to Jerusalem, because there he could not dispose of his jewellery, open a pawnshop, or become a money-lender. To such an extent have the Jews fallen away from the old traditions that we actually see Jewish proprietors of large pork and bacon establishments. This is an article which amongst the orthodox is the most abhorred of any in the world. In the East there is no greater prophylactic against pickpockets and petty thievery, than for a person to be known to carry a piece of pork or bacon.

WORK IN EAST LONDON.

While a vast amount of practical good is being done outside the limits of the denominations, there are not wanting many instances in which an organised church is seen throwing its energies into philanthropic labours with a zeal worthy of its object, with the pastor also doing the work of an evangelist. Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, in a pamphlet bearing the title, "Fighting Poverty and Sin in East London," shows that at the present moment the outlook is appalling; that the fangs of starvation are driven deeply into multitudes of men and women, and that exaggeration is scarcely possible. Mr. Hurndall sees in the abounding misery and crime an ever-increasing danger and menace, and suggests by way of remedy or alleviation Government help, Gospel preaching, and temporal aid.

Among the numerous forms which his mission work takes, are the visitation of the poor, finding situations, dinners for children, suppers for unemployed, saving homes from brokers, taking things out of pawn, literature, preaching from room to room, open-air and temperance meetings, free Sunday evening services, with special aid to widows and aged persons, and many other such things. To accomplish this, house to house visitation is done by nine missionaries, who with the aid of voluntary helpers call regularly and systematically on over 6000 families, finding out and supplying their needs. Three more missionaries will be added to the staff when the requisite funds are provided.

One of the latest departures in effort has been a special mission to barbers and coffee-house keepers. Out of thirty-five barbers in the district, only one closes all day on Sundays. Many are ruined by gambling, which evil practice obtains largely among them.

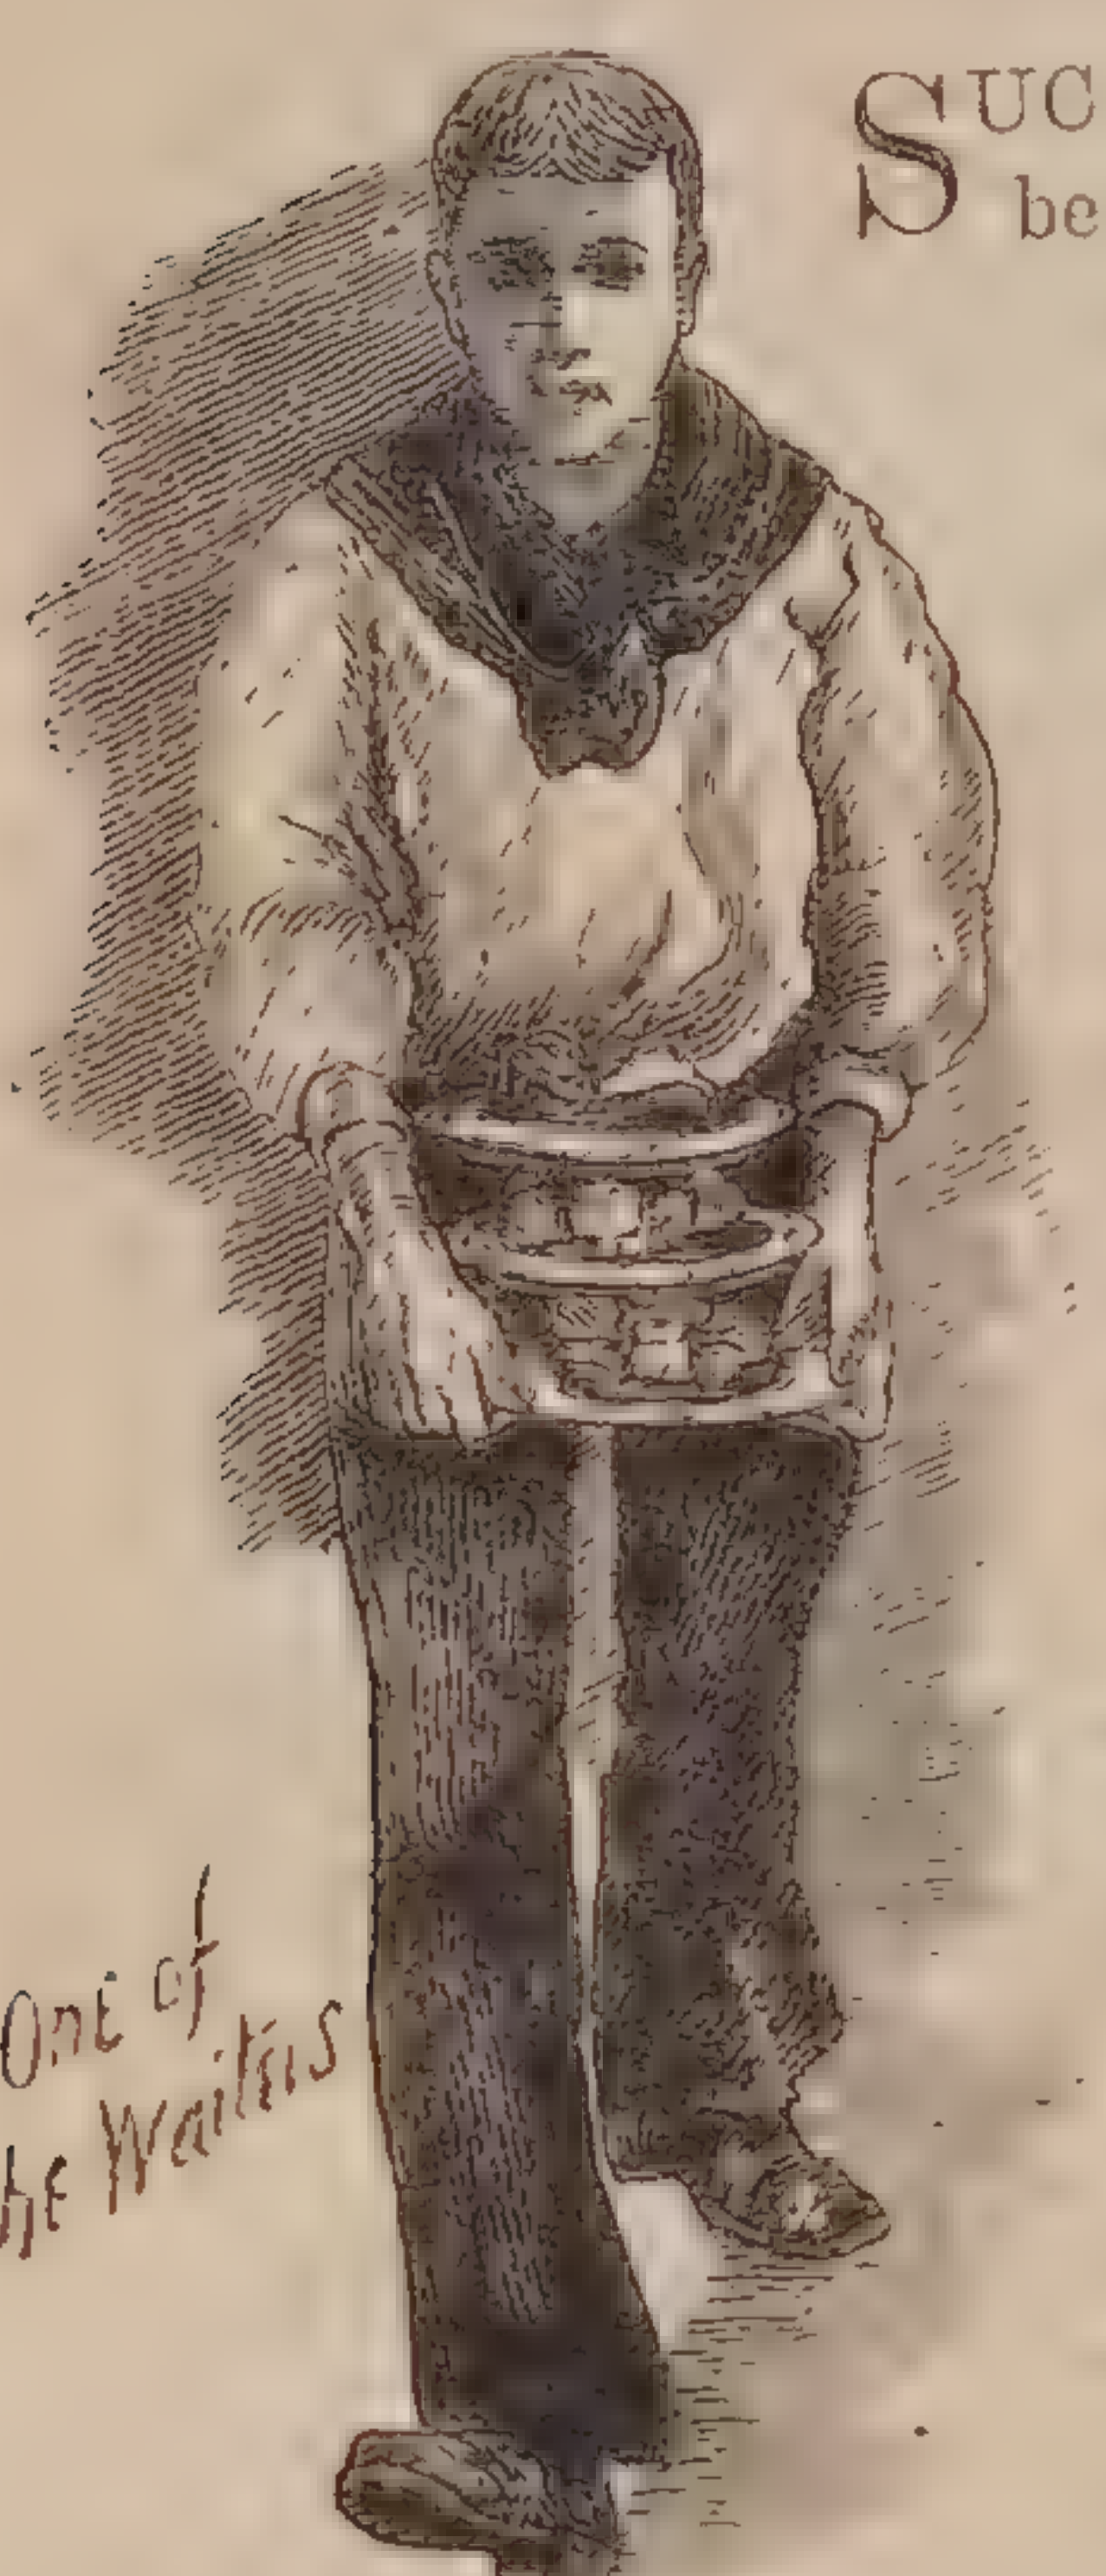
On the "Sad Statistic" page there is a revelation of terrible neglect of religious worship on Sabbath days. In several districts less than one-fifth of the adult population attend any sort of church, chapel, mission-room, or other place of worship.

The new projects comprise a crêche, a flower show, baths, and other efforts.

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS.—The removal of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home last Saturday from its old quarters in Leman-street to the new building, near West India Docks, was inaugurated by a meeting to ask God's blessing upon the effort. A number of sailors and Scandinavian friends were present. Pastor Grondahl (Norwegian) offered prayer, and Pastor Snellman (Finnish) referred to the immense importance of the work among sailors. Miss Hedenstrom will hold Gospel meetings twice a week, continuing her work also at the Strangers' Rest. The formal opening of the Home, conducted in English, will take place at the beginning of March.

TWO REMARKABLE GATHERINGS.

I.—"NO MAN HATH HIRED US."



One of the Waiters

SUCH might well have been the motto of the 1200 guests who assembled at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, on Tuesday, January 17. The ticket of admission passported "Unemployed men, not under twenty-five years of age, rejected that morning at the dock gates," and the appearance of the crowd indicated that the tickets had "gone to the right address." The sight of so many squalid forms and toil-hardened faces was enough to melt the ice of selfishness which encrusts too many hearts when the claims of others come up for consideration. There had been an unexampled rush for the tickets that morning among the disappointed crowds who stood outside the dock gates, and even while the favoured guests were discussing their viands, the buzz of a throng of ticketless applicants might still have been heard coming in from the street. Most of the guests seemed to be in the prime of manhood. The gusto with which they attacked the admirable dinner of beef, potatoes, bread, plum pudding, and a cup of tea, spoke volumes for the boon which the dinner constituted. After dinner there followed some excellent music, consisting of hymn solos by Miss Goodhew, the audience taking up the chorus, organ and cornet solos, band pieces, and selections by the little handbell ringers, who were cheered to the echo.

Speeches, or rather conversational addresses followed, the men proving themselves the most attentive of auditors, even though dissent was occasionally expressed to some of the views advanced. Dr. Barnardo was warmly welcomed, and though he proceeded to tread upon some obviously tender corns among his hearers, was listened to with courteous attention. His assurance of the deep sympathy of Christian people generally with their unemployed brethren, was accepted with an honest and hearty cheer that if it meant anything it meant that there is a narrower gap between "classes" and "masses" than some persons imagine. Proceeding amidst the closest attention to a little talk about remedies, he decried some of the theories of Socialism, notably on the subjects of community of property and the nationalisation of the land, and showed how property, like snow, if it lay level to-day would be blown into drifts to-morrow. "Socialists" ascribe most of the evils from which the community suffer to purely legislative causes. But, alas! many of the wrongs that call for redress are due to moral causes; they demand reform in the individual heart and conduct rather than in the civil constitution. Dr. Barnardo put it plainly to his guests whether they would not have been better off to-night if they had always been sober, thrifty, and frugal, and had never given way to vice and dissipation? ("Yes! Yes!") At the same time he strongly asserted that no one, whatever may be his position, has a right to live upon the misery and degradation of others. Dr. Barnardo concluded a brisk and telling address by advocating emigration for, at least, the younger men present.

Ned Wright secured the attention of his hearers at once, by making an object lesson of himself. "I know what it is to stand at the dock gates waiting for a job. I've stood four days without earning a penny." Then the lesson of beginning better things from the heart outwards was preached with all faithfulness and loyalty to the Saviour; but with all the quaint, personal touches that have made Ned a power among working-class audiences. Dr. Harry Guinness followed up the advantage which had been gained, and preached Christ fervently to an audience that was attentive to the last syllable, albeit it was now past ten o'clock. After a few words from Mr. C. C. M. Baker this remarkable meeting came to a close at a late hour. The men filed out in quiet and orderly fashion, but to the seeing eye a sad and sombre crowd. "I hain't done a stroke of work for five months, mate," said one of them in conversing with a neighbour at the gate, "and the missus and four little 'uns are pretty nigh wore out with it."

II.—GREY HAIRS AND EMPTY POCKETS.

Last Friday, the Edinburgh Castle witnessed another turn in the kaleidoscope of destitution. The guests upon this occasion consisted of old men and old women, gathered from the byways of London, none of them under fifty-five years of age. Far and wide the tickets had been sown, and the result was a motley throng, in which obvious destitution and old age were the only two common factors. In the majority of instances it could be seen that the guests were of the respectable, as contrasted with the vicious or criminal, poor. These pale-faced men and sad-eyed women could have enlightened even our frequent friend, "the social reformer," as to several much debated hows and whys. There were representatives from England, Scotland, and Ireland, and of very many counties in each. On one bench, cheek by jowl with an illiterate carman, born and bred in Whitechapel, sat an Irish weaver whom bad trade had sent over from Belfast to pick a precarious living in London. An elderly man with a fine head was no way backward in admitting that he had once been a solicitor's clerk, earning £350 a year; but—but—it was drink, of course, that did it! A begging letter writer boasted that he was once "the head of his purfession; but there ain't the grub in it that there wor." And so the hall full of "ageds," as one of them dubbed the gathering, represented the whole varied elements of lower London life. Quiet, decent, struggling poverty, upheld by the ambition of "making both ends meet," with which all who know the East-end poor are familiar, was conspicuous only by its absence; for the majority were manifestly among those who had abandoned, and been abandoned by, Hope.

Dr. Barnardo had an admirable programme, after dinner had been served, and hugely enjoyed to all appearance. There were the boys' band, the little Scotch pipers, some sacred solos, admirably sung by Miss Rich and Miss Goodhew, winding up with the "Village Chimes" of the little handbell ringers.

Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard felicitously and cheerily welcomed everybody. Mr. T. A. Denny, in a wise little speech of blended humour and pathos and Gospel fervour, told the audience how God loved them, and how his service would lighten even the hard times amidst which most of them lived. Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, urged home the message of Divine affection, with stories from Mr. Moody's experience, and Mr. J. B. Wookey followed with a powerful and tender Gospel appeal. Dr. Barnardo told a secret in asking a vote of thanks to the real giver of the feast, Mr. John Howard Angas, of South Australia—a vote which was enthusiastically given. A heart-searching Gospel appeal followed, the Doctor illustrating the deep yearning love of God by a pathetic story of a hearer at one of the Edinburgh Castle services. The good seed fell on prepared ground, and it was under a deep and obvious impression on the part of the audience that the protracted meeting was brought to a close. At the Castle gate the strangely assorted throng quietly separated, east, west, north, and south, carrying with them, it is hoped, "resolves of heart" that will bear fruit in the coming days.

FIRE AT GIRLS' TRAINING HOME.

On the morning of the 16th January, one of our Preventive Homes was TOTALLY DESTROYED BY FIRE, with the loss of the life of one poor afflicted inmate.

The Matrons and all the other inmates escaped in their night dresses, having lost everything but their lives.

The rebuilding must commence as soon as possible; but to reinstate the Home in full working order will probably necessitate an outlay of at least £1,000 beyond the amount of insurance.

This has occurred when our Funds are absolutely exhausted, with OVER 150 GIRLS IN OUR HOMES.

Will not every reader send a Contribution to help at this time of great and dire necessity?

Contributions will be kindly received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott; and the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

HENRY BLYTH 19 & 24 Earl Grey St. EDINBURGH

A VISITOR'S IMPRESSIONS.

Dr. Henry E. Robins, Professor of Christian Ethics in Rochester Baptist College, N.Y., writes to us concerning a recent visit to our shores. As to Bournemouth in particular he says:—

Among the many experiences of which we are glad to cherish the recollection, not the least pleasant is the privilege which we enjoyed of hearing the preaching of Rev. J. W. Rodger, of the Presbyterian Church, to whom we are indebted for the intellectual stimulus and the spiritual quickening which we found in his Sabbath ministrations. Coming from Germany, after eight months' residence among a people of foreign speech, we were hungry to hear in the tongue wherein we were born the wonderful works of God. Not only was this longing gratified, but we were permitted to hear the Old Gospel from the lips of one to whom it is not a matter of the letter merely. He gave us none of the speculations of the new theology. He uttered with no uncertain emphasis the great fact of Christ's atoning death as the ground of the sinner's hope. He seemed to us to represent the better Christian life of England.

You who are keenly alive to the manifest evils of the type of civilisation amid which you live, can only with difficulty appreciate the superiority of the order of life in your happy island over that of almost any other country under the sun. Surely God has wonderfully blessed England for her fidelity, on the whole, to his truth. Judging from the recollections of previous visits, never before, I think, was that truth so potently operative among you as now; never before were there so many Christian enterprises, whose object it is to make the Gospel an uplifting and purifying force in the hearts and homes of your people.

There are dark aspects of the case, I admit. You are contending against grave political evils, against startling doctrinal defections, against enormous social abuses; but you are awake to these. Brave hearts are uttering with courageous voice a protest against them—a protest which makes itself heard the world over. God bless your consecrated soldiers of the cross! Let them look on the dark side, but let them look on the dark side hopefully. It is the part of children to look altogether on the bright side of things. Let no leader of Christ's hosts be guilty of such folly. On the other hand, let no note of despair be heard from those who follow the great Captain, of whom the infallible Word declares, "He shall not fail, nor be discouraged, till He have set judgment in the earth."

CLOUDESLEY INSTITUTE, N.—We have had much spiritual blessing, both amongst boarders and members. We have had the great joy of seeing some brought into clear Gospel light and peace. The Home is in excellent order, and constantly full. We have recently had girls from France, Sweden, India, Scotland, and Ireland, all young, and needing care and guidance. We need material aid. Some of our furniture and fittings greatly need renewing. Susan T. Paton.

27, Highbury place, N.

ODESSA, RUSSIA.—Dear Sir,—Here, amidst many difficulties and much opposition, there is a true work for Christ going on among working people. Coachmen, carpenters, poor peasants, working women, and others, all of them, unlearned Russians, knowing scarcely how to read, meet for worship in their poor cottages or in the drawing-room of a Christian lady. They are closely watched; some of them have been put in prison, sent away to desert lands, even lately. The writer is herself in a deep, deep furnace; but she has discovered that there is no such place for peace and comfort as the furnace with the Son of God in the midst. The Christian is for us an immense help and value. May the Lord bless abundantly the English lady who has sent it to me for seven years. May I ask your prayers for us, lonely and oppressed.

A Russian Sister in the Lord.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S WORK.—2.

By Rev. JOHN E. LINNELL.

If reminded on the Saturday night of the ocean in its restlessness, I seem to see it only, to-night, as its waters throw up "mire and dirt," such are the undreamt iniquities that appear to rise up to view through the whole of our midnight walk from what are still, to many, the hidden depths of life in this great city. It is a little past eleven o'clock when my fearless host proposes to show me the effects of his recent raid on evil houses, and, in the first place, we are to start for "Lady Lake's Grove."

What Mr. Charrington's thoughts are I may not venture to say, but I feel as if we are entering "the valley of the shadow of death." If but a tithe of the stories that have been told about this place are true, many have entered it to find here more than "the shadow of death." So prompt and determined has been Mr. Charrington's action in using "The Criminal Law Amendment Act," that even now there are night-birds who fail to realise that their nests have been disturbed, and who still linger about these old abodes of vice.

But now we are in a worse place still. Here the police themselves have had to patrol the locality in pairs. As the well-known hat and umbrella of my friend have been recognised by some of the unfortunate class who still find harbour in this neighbourhood, the news of our advent is transmitted from place to place by scouts, who are on the watch. Before long, things begin to look so black, that I expect, ere reaching home again, we may both have to exercise a so-called art we each acquired a knowledge of in other days. We have a friendly wrangle, too, between ourselves. Mr. Charrington wishes me to enter an awfully dark place, which commands a view of the neighbourhood generally. I don't like to admit a failing nerve, but I prefer to walk quietly on. Encountering a sympathetic friend on the return journey home, he exclaims, "You have never been there alone!" We have, though, and I whisperingly ejaculate a hearty "thank God," that we have got away with a whole skin.

But more work remains to be done. "The people shall hear and be afraid; sorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestina," says Moses. May we reverently wrest the words of Scripture, to express the effect of Mr. Charrington's work in closing these places of evil report. Through the whole of one night, have handcarts been used to remove the furniture of those who have fled from fine and imprisonment. And those who are left must have no rest; the places must be marked, and the people prosecuted, if these hotbeds of iniquity are to be destroyed. So now we start forth again: but in stronger force to night. We are very soon detected, and "clank, clank, clank," go chains across doors that but a few minutes ago were standing only too open. The labour is not in vain, either. One wretched woman recognises the inevitable, and promises to close her house at once; others who now know what awaits them, will doubtless do the same. One man, who has evidently taken the alarm, comes to watch us from the end of a dark, narrow lane, while another is eyeing us from a bedroom window. A fellow whose brutal aspect but too truly bespeaks his occupation approaches a little too near to one of the party; but an ex-military brother advances, and the other beats a speedy retreat.

It is nearly one o'clock by the time we get home again, and as Mr. Charrington, Mr. Mumford, of "The Railway Mission" (who to-night has been one of our party), and myself, get back to our quarters at Stepney-green, I once more thank God for preservation from peril, but feel more than ever the need of keeping our good Charrington before God in prayer. As fearless a man as I have ever met with, and, physically, very strong, still I can see that the effort by which he has closed about forty houses in two or three months, and ruined wholly or partially the trade of a dozen public-houses that were chiefly supported from these, has told upon him rather seriously. Threatened, insulted, and sometimes assaulted, as he is in his noble work, I feel, together with Divine support, he has need of human sympathy. And returning home I now commend him to the protection of God, and hope next time I may visit London, to find him safe in such gracious keeping, and still more successful in his many labours.

Pavenham Vicarage, Bedford.

FROM THE FAR WEST.

Working as a colporteur for the American Bible Society in Kingsbury County, and visiting from house to house, I get a glimpse into the lives of the people. This part of Dakota is only eight years old, so far as civilisation goes, and very rapid has been its development in that time. Most of the European countries are represented, particularly Norway and Denmark. In supplying the spiritual needs of this mixed multitude, the American Sabbath-school Union has sent out missionaries to plant Sunday-schools wherever an opportunity offered, supplying these schools with cheap lesson helps, hymn-books, &c. The schools frequently develop into Church organisations.

De Smet is a thriving little city, a model of sobriety and order. The prominent citizens when it first settled were sturdy temperance workers, and the county, since its organisation, has enjoyed a prohibitory liquor law, with the exception of six months. Three Protestant churches are established—Baptist, Congregational, and Methodist Episcopal. A formal religion is very popular, but one that cuts at self-life is not so much in request. At Esmond, a small new town, eighteen miles south-west of De Smet, I met with an earnest band of Christian workers. Two churches have been built, and each has a good Sunday-school. I found a spirit of unity and Christian forbearance among the brethren, which in some degree accounted for their prosperity. Rivalry among Christian sects, when taking possession of new districts, has often brought much disgrace upon the cause of Christ. H. Gregory.

De Smet, Kingsbury Co., Dakota, U.S.A.

JERUSALEM.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, writes:—We have opened a night-school and reading-room, the need of which we felt very much. It will prove a great boon both to Jew and Gentile. We are in need of Christian books and periodicals in Hebrew German, Jewish, Spanish, Arabic, &c. Good tracts in these languages will also be thankfully received.

Y.M.C.A., 91, EUSTON-ROAD., N.W.—A most excellent work is carried on by this Association, which is situated in the midst of a district frequented by large numbers of young men. Evangelistic meetings, Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, open-air services, social reception meetings are regularly held, and occasional popular lectures are delivered. A comfortable reading-room and library is provided, and the secretary, and the members of the Association are every ready to accord a hearty welcome to strangers, especially young men newly arrived from the country, when opportunity is afforded for intercourse, and for the forming of helpful friendships. The hon. secretary is Mr. David J. Lewis.

A PROTESTANT PROTEST.—Rev. William Adamson, The Vicarage, Old Ford, E., has drawn up a protest, for which he solicits the signatures of all bishops and clergy of the Established Church, and of all ministers of the various Protestant denominations of the kingdom, to be presented to the Queen and the Marquis of Salisbury, upon the recent mission of the Duke of Norfolk to the Pope. The signatures ought to be an interesting and instructive study. In it the Queen is uncompromisingly reminded of her Coronation Oath; of the enactment under William and Mary, by which the "people of these realms are absolved from their allegiance," should the Sovereign hold communion with the Church or See of Rome; and the danger of playing with such edged tools as the Papal Supremacy.

MOB RULE IN LAUSANNE.

That a fearful but quiet leavening of the lower and darker strata of society is going on, and that nothing yet known can stop the process, until some tremendous upheaving bursts upon the world—is but a trite remark.

In the Swiss towns on the northern and western shores of the Leman, as in the villages above, there is found a certain amount of genuine piety, much church and chapel-going of women, and a goodly show of Pharisaism; while around and below these respectabilities grovels a tremendous mass of sin, a heavy stolid resistance to religion in ordinary, from whence flash out scorn, hatred, and violence, against any effort whatever to break into its deadly ranks with the Gospel. Drunkenness, with its fearful concomitants, binds this mass together, and the liquor-vendors guard the outposts. Christian people sometimes succeed in drawing away, here and there, an individual, but discouragement has for years been the order of the day. The Vaudois character is not self-reliant and energetic; initiative is almost an unknown virtue, and where it appears, it is generally dubbed pride, and eccentricity, and pooh-poohed.

The temperance movement, now commencing its second decade, has manfully braved opposition, and scorn, and rowdyism, and begins to reap the fruit of its Gospel labour, and make its mark. The testimony of rescued drunkards tells upon their comrades in sin, and individuals are saved.

The Inner Mission is brightly doing its best; it moves, however, in the strata above the "dark, dismal swamp," bringing in souls that were hovering around the Gospel doorway; but the roughs very rarely come within hearing of "the joyful sound."

The heart-yearning and cry of those who feel the lack and urgent need is, Who can face the lion in his den? The reply of those who know the times is the Salvation Army. Even the Countess de Gasparin is stated to have recently said, "The Salvation Army is the one only power that can oppose Socialism."

This Army has come; it has tried, and step by step it has prevailed. In each place its advent has unveiled, perchance, unsuspected depths of wickedness; scorn, rage, hatred, malice, murder have arisen, hideous, ghastly, monstrous. Those who trusted to Sunday-school training, and church-going, and cried "Peace and safety," are brought palpably to know somewhat of the volcano seething beneath, and to ignore which is fatal folly.

We have had the good fortune of witnessing the first skirmish of the vanguard in Lausanne. A small band of Salvation soldiers had been gathering by means of private meetings for the last year, and an outpost four miles off at the village of Romanel had been formed. Certain fellows, big in mischief, came under the power of Divine grace, and the goodly change was so conspicuous that the foe must needs create a hubbub, sack the barn in which the meetings were held, turn the village "upside down," bring the police from Lausanne and get the two gentle lasses who led the meetings carried off by gendarmes to their respective homes. Two other officers of the Salvation Army immediately succeeded them, the barn was repaired, the law appealed to, and the work goes on; not a meeting without results of soul-saving. One of the most murderous opposers is now groaning on a bed in the Cantonal hospital, both his feet having been crushed by his falling drunk under a train.

A brave little woman (trust the women for valour!), Roman Catholic by birth, long knocked about a rough world as agent for Singer's sewing-machines; she caught a glimpse of the Salvation Army, and carefully scrutinised every member she met, on the point of unblemished life and walk. She was satisfied, and concluded that they came up to the criterion in her mind of what the true followers of Christ should be. After four years of this careful scrutiny, she realised a little money, and opened a temperance café, to be used for Salvation Army meetings. Upset in one town, she removed to another, till she came to Lausanne, dauntless, to try again. The house is a sort of large workshop, well-supported on three sides by the mountain and large stone buildings; the wooden front facing the wide Place du Tunnel; and adjacent to one of the nests of sin and drunkenness, of which there are more than one in the Athens of Switzerland. The place was soon opened, as a pleasing Café de Tempérance, offered to the Salvation Army for meetings, and accepted. All legal points were secured. The short opening skirmish ran thus:—

On January 10 a quiet holiness meeting of about fifty Salvation Army "soldiers" and friends.

On January 13 a second meeting of the same kind commenced, but an invasion of half tipsy men shouting the tunes vociferously, banging saucepan lids, and other implements found ready to hand in the kitchen, drowned the voice of prayer, exhortation, and singing. The countenances of the modest young officers were closely scanned by quiet people outside the noisy ones, and the approving verdict was given in our hearing: "Ces dames ont du caractère!" (these women know how to behave themselves), with other like favourable expressions.

On January 15 a magic lantern, with Old Testament slides, was shown to about fifty street children, by a friend of the Salvation Army, whose officers were needed at Romanel. Quiet time; children thoroughly interested, grateful, and glad to have another similar treat the next day. When all was over, and the place empty, a band of boisterous roughs forced an entrance, made free with eatables, broke window panes, and ended by a thundering exit.

On January 16, children and mothers came in larger numbers, glad and grateful; when, just as enjoyment had begun, a score of half-drunken men and boys rushed in, and scorned, and mocked, and chattered blasphemies, to the disgust of the parents and indignation of the children, some of whom fairly sobbed their disappointment. The exhibition was interrupted by a hubbub indescribable, and the vociferous shouting of well-known Sunday-school hymns in mockery.

Momentary silence received the flashing texts: "The wages of sin is death"; "After death the judgment"; "Behold, the Lamb of God," &c.; but noise prevailed; the shade was put on, and the disturbers, supposing all was over, reluctantly left, punching each other, smashing the windows, and shouting and pounding upon the doors. When all was locked and barred, the shade was taken off, the children had their quiet time, and the young officers, who had been in an adjacent room unobserved, because shut in by the close-packed roughs against the door, were liberated, and spoke, and sang, and prayed. A young woman concluded to give herself to the Lord.

On January 18 every prudent precaution was taken; police attendance promised; no one admitted without a card—thus constituting it a private meeting legally—and many respectable persons wishing to see what a real Swiss Salvationist meeting is like, availed themselves of the opportunity.

But after sixty had been admitted, and the doors closed and double-locked (no visible police being there), the mob from without made a rush, broke open the premises, smashed the remaining panes of glass, and 300 at least crammed in, some leaping over the others' shoulders to reach the trellised gallery. The Salvationist lads could not pierce the crowd, and were compelled to remain near the entrance, while the two gentle lasses stood upon velvet chairs, placed for them to be a little above the forest of heads, and commenced a hymn. A minute or two of listening was all; the hymn was drowned in laughter, derision, and the shouting of the Marseillaise and other songs. A soft cushion came down from the gallery as a missile, soon followed by every article of clothing and bedding hands could be laid on; two open umbrellas came flying like parachutes, and flakes of horsehair drawn from some sofa, floated over the whole. Aimed at the lasses, these missiles were generally caught on the way, and secured by the nearest friends. Men got astride of partitions, and began to play with the petroleum lamps, turning the flame up and down. One was extinguished. The young "captain" quietly asked the nearest man for a few matches, which she kept in her hand, ready for the fearful emergency of the second lamp being possibly put out. Not the shadow of a policeman appeared during the whole time. Those who should have been there were afterwards found in a café.

A journalist climbed some wooden steps, shouted "silence!" and endeavoured to address the crowd; immediately a stunning outcry was raised, and kept up for several minutes; the lofty iron flue of the stove was shaken and came down with a crash. Petroleum was poured over a bed in the gallery.

Not a momentary cloud passed over the open countenances of the two young "officers"; their faces fairly beamed with perfect peace, as ever and anon they raised their song to God. This was greatly remarked by many, who had not come to mock.

The peril became extreme; ill-mannered ones began to hustle their feet, and two quiet men in front whispered, "Now is your time, follow us close!" They stepped from their chairs and followed. The crowd had become too boisterous to notice their most difficult exit, and when at length they reached the outer door, they met friends, and slipped away without being pursued. The mob then broke up all that could be broken up, and then, but not before, came in two burly policemen turning out the remaining rioters and taking down the names of a few of them.

A hard frost had secured all the stones and gravel, locking them up in the deep rock-like mud; otherwise injuries to life and limb would certainly have ensued. As it was, providentially deprived of their usual missiles, the boisterous stragglers could only indulge in dastardly cuffs and kicks from behind against any who were supposed to be connected with or favourable to the Army. Legal steps are being actively taken by the authorities against the perpetrators of the outrages.

The barn at Romanel resounded on the following Sunday with songs of salvation, and more than one soul bowed in new allegiance to the Saviour. No instruments of music were used.

Now, what occasioned these outrages? (1) The natural enmity and resistance of the "strong man armed"; the lion will roar if bearded in his den; (2) the Demetrius spirit of publicans and liquor dealers; (3) The fatal joining of hands between mistaken Scribes, Pharisees, and even sincere Christian writers and speakers, with the radical press for months past, first stirring up the people to frenzy against the Salvation Army, and then at the very last moment drawing up short, entreating all good people to put the Army into quarantine, to stay away, and boycott it!

Anyone at all acquainted with revolutionary tactics, knows that this is the surest method cowards take to provoke mobs and mob law.

If the poor inebriate tools are punished, how much severer penalty is deserved by the writers and speakers who have spurred them on?

What will be the result of this vanguard skirmish? Read the Acts of the Apostles. Results are in the hand of God; but if we may judge by the past, a glorious harvest of souls will attend the opening of the permanent hall already purchased, but not yet ready for use.

One who stood by the Lasses.

P.S.—I write from the Hirondelles, where I am staying, a pleasant, comfortable, and most reasonable family boarding-house, where English and other Christian friends would find true welcome and accommodation. (Apply to Mdlle. Guye, Hirondelles, Lausanne, Suisse.)

REVIVAL INCIDENTS.—2.

Harry (number 1) was a fine, well-built, intelligent, happy-go-lucky youth, seventeen years of age. He had been sitting listening to me preaching the Gospel, and, with many others, remained to the prayer-meeting that followed. I approached him, Bible in hand, and pleaded hard (as I had done many times before) that he would that night accept the wonderful salvation offered him by our blessed Lord. I could see that he was deeply impressed, but he would not yield. I pressed him to tell me why. "Well," said he, "it only wants a few weeks to Christmas. I have saved up thirty shillings in the penny bank, and I intend to have a spree with it; but I'll start the New Year a Christian." I reminded him of God's, "Now is the accepted time," but it was no use; hardening his heart, he went his way.

Two days after, he was seized with a violent cold, and took a strong dose of sweet nitre; while the pores of his skin were still open, he went out with some companions, was caught in a heavy storm, and came home drenched with rain. Next day he was unable to leave his bed, and on the day following he died—it is to be feared totally unprepared. Under his pillow was found his bank book; and the very money that had caused him to reject Christ, and with which he intended to have a spree, bought him a shroud, and helped to pay the expenses of laying him in a Christless grave.

Harry (number 2) was a poor boy, the son of a drunkard. He had been put out of the meetings over and over again for misbehaviour. One night he was exceedingly troublesome; he would neither listen to the Gospel himself nor allow those sitting near him to do so. The door-keeper at last took him by the shoulder, and, thrusting him outside, said he should not be admitted again for three weeks; adding that he hoped by that time he would have learnt to conduct himself more decently.

Two nights only of the three weeks had passed when the hall-keeper was summoned to another part of the country. Harry heard of it, and said there was no one either to keep him or turn him out of the meeting now. That night he was again present, and the service was certainly one of the most solemn that I have ever been in. I was led to preach from the story of the Prodigal Son, and towards the close of the address spoke of the danger of delaying our return to the Father's house, illustrating it by the foregoing story. At the close I found Harry in deep distress of soul, weeping bitterly. I shall never forget kneeling in prayer with this poor, sobbing lad. While I was praying for him I could hear him, with choked utterance, crying, "O God, have mercy on me; I am a very wicked lad." By and by, when he was more calm, I was enabled to show him from God's Word that our Lord Jesus Christ would save even such as he. Before we parted that night he knew by happy experience the meaning of those precious words, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sins should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed."

At six the next morning he had gone to work with a companion, singing along the road—

My Jesus, I love Thee, I know thou art mine!

A little after seven the varnish which he was using to cover some zinc goods caught fire, and in trying to extinguish it, he himself was soon wrapped in the flames. He was hurried away to the hospital, and a few hours after I was kneeling by his side. As may be imagined, he was suffering excruciating agony in body; but on my asking about his soul, he answered, "I was sure Jesus saved me last night, and I am more than sure now." A few days after we laid him in a humble grave, over which my wife sang—

We shall sleep, but not for ever,
There will be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet to part—no never,
On the resurrection morn.

There were few dry eyes in the crowd of working-men and lads that surrounded that grave, and we had reason to hope that many accepted Harry's Saviour as their own. J. B. W.

MESSRS. FULLERTON & SMITH.

These brethren conducted an evangelistic mission in Reading, from Jan. 7 to 22, at the invitation of the Reading Sunday-school Union. The evening meetings were held mainly in King's-road Chapel; afternoon meetings, twice a week, took place in two other chapels of the town; and song services, meetings for men, and public services were conducted on Saturday evenings and Sundays in the New Town Hall; meetings for women being held on Sunday afternoons in King's-road Chapel. An earnest band of workers found abundant employment in the inquiry-rooms.

Now that the meetings are over, we look back upon them with thankfulness and joy, and ample work has been found for all the churches reached by the mission in the oversight and training of the three hundred inquirers who have been aroused, and led to the Saviour. One characteristic feature of the work of these evangelists is the "Song service." On Saturdays they gather large throngs of men and women by the attraction of these bright services, in which solo and part singing are delightfully blended with pungent and earnest preaching of the truth. The very first of these song services in the Reading mission was blessed to the conversion of some who were present, and they are eminently useful as feeders of the more directly evangelistic meetings.

The services for men only were held on Sunday afternoons in the Town Hall, which was filled on each occasion. The intense and eager interest with which the vast audiences of men hung upon Mr. Fullerton's words was very impressive. The afternoon gatherings were felt to be very refreshing to Christian people. As Mr. Fullerton led his hearers into the "King's Chambers," and displayed before them the "King's Jewels," the King Himself drew near. The closing service in the Town Hall will not soon be forgotten. Crowded to excess, about 2500 persons being present, it was also pervaded with spiritual power.

Many interesting incidents might be told of the good done in these meetings. There are several instances of three members of a family, three servants in one household, four or five members of one Sunday-school class, being brought to Christ. A Sunday-school superintendent had been forced reluctantly to request an elder scholar to discontinue attending the school, as he persistently turned the teacher to ridicule, and so hindered the good work in the whole class. This superintendent went into the inquiry-room after one of the meetings, and the first sight that met his eyes was this young man upon his knees, weeping on account of sin. Several of the ministers of the town took part in the work, and the fortnight has been felt to be a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. From Reading the brethren went to Pontypridd, carrying with them the hearty good wishes and prayers of many Christian hearts. C. A. Davis.

REV. F. B. MEYER.—Under the auspices of the Scottish Evangelistic Association, Mr. Meyer will conduct meetings in Edinburgh from March 6 to 9, and give addresses on "Christian living." Prayer is earnestly asked on behalf of these meetings. All communications for Mr. Meyer should be addressed to Regent's Park Chapel, Park-square East, Regent's Park, N.W.

ISAAC.

By Mrs. SHIPTON.

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. For He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust."—Ps. ciii. 13, 14.

Not within thy heart's best chamber,
In fond memory's fragrant amber,
Hoard the treasure God hath given;
For the moth of time will fray it,
And the rust of earth decay it:
Lay thy loved one up—in heaven.

He who lent it safe can keep it:
While He sees thee over-weep it,
Will He spurn thy sob of sorrow?
Tenderly He bendeth o'er thee;
Forty-fold He will restore thee,
In the cloudless land—to-morrow.

Up the mountain—slowly—slowly,
For the sacrifice is holy:
Doth He call dead hearts to follow?
Nay, but living ones: well-knowing
That the life-tide overflowing
Pays no tribute cold and hollow.

Clings the sick child, faint and ailing;
Doth the mother mock its wailing,
Feeble though the hands that hold it?
Closer, closer to her bosom
Will she clasp the fading blossom,
And in deeper love enfold it.

Lay it down—thy heart's best treasure;
Christ alone the pang can measure.
Doth He count thee an offender,
For the trembling hand that brings it,
Or the sigh when sorrow wrings it,
O'er a love so true and tender?

Through the falling tears, bedewing
All the piled wood of thy doing,
He his loving heart revealeth:
Every silent pang is needed,
Not a tear-drop falls unheeded;
He his sweet acceptance sealeth.

Wilt thou trust Him, though He gather
Back thy loved one? 'Tis thy Father!
And He knows thee sad and lonely.
Up the mount! One standeth near thee,
And thy sorrows more endear thee;
Journey on with "Jesus only."

Wait not: thy warm breath may mar it,
Loving bonds but bind and bar it
From a higher, holier soaring;
Now upon God's altar lay it:
Canst thou trust Him? Will He slay it?
He may prove thee by restoring.

Love, his love, doth mark thy going.
With compassion overflowing;
Hark! He whispers, "I am with thee,
I upheld thy first faint struggle;
Child, I will reward thee double,
And thy treasure back will give thee."

Lay it down! Beyond the river
Thou shalt praise anew the Giver,
Through a life of endless glory;
Trace the path by which He brought thee,
Sing the melodies He taught thee,
Tell to angel hosts thy story.

Faint thy whispered love is spoken;
Ah, thy words sound cold and broken
Unto hearts less fond and fervent.
Christ hath caught the sob that mourned it,
And His smile to prayer hath turned it,
While He saith, "My faithful servant!"

Lay it down! Ah, thou hast laid it;
Richly hath thy love arrayed it!
Yet 'twill fairer be, and never
Shall the dust becloud its sweetness;
But, transformed to heavenly meetness,
Thou mayst call it THINE FOR EVER.

Mr. Spurgeon and the Baptist Union

THE Baptist Union Council passed a vote of censure on Mr. Spurgeon, and in the current issue of The Sword and Trowel Mr. Spurgeon severely censures the Council. It would be deplorable that this discussion should drift into a personal dispute, and we see no good end to be attained by continuing it in print. The public is unable to decide in such a case, because it has not all the facts before it, and, if it had, it is no competent tribunal. We therefore must, for ourselves, decline to enter into it. Surely a few men of God connected with the Union could meet Mr. Spurgeon and a few of his friends, observing towards each other the exhortation, "Be pitiful, be courteous," and might very soon, "forbearing one another in love," straighten out the personal difficulties which have arisen.

Then it would be easy, without fear of Law Courts, to define differences of view. The fact of being brought together in heart would go far to promote unity of judgment. But, even at the worst, if the divergence of doctrine should prove so great as to render continued fellowship in Christian work impossible, it would honour the Head, who is Christ, unspeakably more, that a separation should take place in mutual courtesy and brotherly kindness, than that opposing parties should remain bound together by a tie which was only in name and not in heart.

Our convictions and sympathies are entirely on the side of the older and against the newer thoughts of the Atonement, the Propitiation, of our Lord Jesus Christ. But this subject is too sacred, and too tender to the heart of God, to be handled in any other than a reverent and tender spirit. If the place where the symbolic bush burned, and yet was unconsumed, was holy ground, where Moses needed to take his shoes from off his feet: and if before the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob he trembled and durst not behold: with what reverence and godly fear should we stand before God manifest in the likeness of sinful flesh, the antitype of that burning bush, and in the presence of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ? If the presence of the Captain of the Lord's host rendered the ground holy, so that Joshua, like Moses, must put his shoe from off his foot: is it not meet that we should, like Joshua, fall with our faces to the earth, and worship the risen Captain of our salvation? And if, when asked by Joshua, "Art thou for us or for our adversaries?" He replied, "Nay, but as Captain of the Lord's host am I now come:" does it not become us above all things absolutely to leave the ordering of the battle in his hands? It may be that God Himself will throw down the Jericho of false doctrine, without our doing more than walk round it, blowing with rams' horns the old, old story.

The present controversy, however, is not as between Israel and the Canaanites, but as within the tribes of Israel itself. We may therefore gain instruction from the war of the other tribes against Benjamin, their brother, in the matter of Gibeah. Twice was Israel sorely smitten by Benjamin, before Benjamin was subdued by Israel. Because there was sin in Israel, which must first be judged, before they could be used to judge Benjamin. Only a deeply humbled Israel could overcome a transgressing Benjamin. But under these conditions Israel feels that every blow is a sorrow to itself; every fallen Benjamite is a loss to the Commonwealth of Israel. And after the victory the one concern is the restoration of Benjamin, that one of the twelve may not be wanting when the tribes go up to appear before the Lord in Zion. This is the spirit in which a discussion on the doctrine of Christ should be undertaken and conducted. At present, there is much danger of personal feeling becoming so exacerbated that the real question should be lost sight of.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. W. Stott, Baptist minister, St. John's Wood.

Since our last Mr. Denham Smith has passed through periods of much bodily distress. Some of the symptoms, however, which last week caused his family and friends grave anxiety, have yielded to treatment. He himself feels that he is losing his little remaining strength.

We beg to call the attention of our readers in the North to the Missionary Conference at Sunderland, from Tuesday to Thursday of next week, each day at 10.30, 2.30, and 7.30. The programme, which is of deep and varied interest, and includes representatives of several societies, may be obtained of the Hon. Secretaries, Y.M.C.A., Sunderland.

On Monday evening, at Exeter Hall, Rev. James Neil gave the first of four lectures on Life in the Holy Land, as confirmatory of the Scriptures. The Lord Chancellor presided, and the attention of the large audience was closely riveted by the graphic and instructive descriptions of the speaker. In our next issue we hope to give extracts from the lecture.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., has been visiting Singapore, on his journey round the world, and has written a severe criticism on the work done by Christian missionaries there. He says:—

> The heathen of the Straits Settlements are not much troubled by missionary zeal. How is it, I wonder, that we so persistently neglect the conversion of the heathen at our own doors in our various Crown colonies? Can it be that the specimens of Christianity which form our governing and merchant classes are of such quality that missionaries find it impossible to get the heathen to believe in the religion whose products they are? The existence of 7000 Eurasians in the Straits colonies, the illegitimate offspring of "Christian" fathers, combined with the fact that a "Christian" Government draws the bulk of its revenue from the encouraged vices and degradation of the population, may go far to account for the obstinate preference of a Mahommedan native for a religion which enjoins total abstinence, and forbids the social habits which produce Eurasians? The merchants say the missionaries are idle and worthless; the missionaries retort in kind, and, for myself, I fear that in Singapore at any rate there is truth on both sides.

These words are worthy of close attention. If the "governing and merchant classes" were Christians in deed and truth, they would by consequence be "epistles known and read of all men." But if Christian doctrine is completely neutralised by un-Christian living, the condition of things is deplorable in the extreme. Those who fear the Lord, and think upon his name, would do well to pray that the British "governing and merchant classes" in heathen lands may speedily undergo a change of mind, and not only practise what they profess, but become heralds of the Gospel of the grace of God. Mr. Caine, however, has evidently written with very superficial knowledge of missions and missionaries.

Some excellent words were spoken by Mr. Phelps, the American Minister in London, at a recent meeting in the Birkbeck Institution, on occasion of a prize distribution to students. Young people who wish to make the most and the best of their lives, will do well to study these weighty utterances:—

> The young man who presents himself modestly at the beginning of his career in some calling or profession, thinks the world does not need him. "Really the ranks are so full; there are so many better men, more experienced, better instructed; they are occupying the field, there is no room for me." Now do not make such a mistake. The world is waiting; it always was waiting and always will be waiting for the men and women who can do first-rate work in any of its callings or industries; not because there are not such men now, but because they are always too few. There is always room in the upper story; it is the lower stories that are full. The great crush of competition is among the crowd of men and women who can do pretty well what almost anybody can do. There is no competition to be afraid of among those people who can do what most people cannot do. Therefore, whatever your calling may be—whether it is conspicuous in the world's eye, or in the modest and happier obscurity of private life—be sure of one thing: the world is waiting for you if you can do first-rate work.

Prince Krapotkin lectured at Harrow on Monday on "The Moral Effects of Prisons on Prisoners." Having described from experience the prison systems of France and Russia, he gave it as his opinion that the effects were such as made prisoners return to prison after liberation, for a repetition of their offences:—

> There are a great many causes of demoralisation in the prison itself. One of the causes is that the work imposed is debasing and demoralising. A good deal of the work done by prisoners is simply fit for slaves. In the case of ordinary prisoners, they receive no impressions at all except those of the regular life of prison discipline. That leads to the loss of mental energy, nervous energy, and also bodily energy. The consequence is that when the prisoner is liberated he is surrounded by thousands of temptations which he has not the will to resist. The remedy suggested by the Prince was that more assistance of an individual kind should be given to prisoners on leaving gaol, though he fully recognised the efforts of societies in that direction.

From Prince Krapotkin's remarks it is clear that social reformers and Christian philanthropists have yet much to do in and about the prisons of this and other countries.

We have sometimes had occasion to notice the absence of charitable bequests in the wills of those who have had much wealth at their disposal. The late Mr. John Fulton, of Edinburgh, has made his name worthy of remembrance by the munificent legacies he has bequeathed, amounting in all to £39,000, free of legacy duty. The Edinburgh University head the list for £5,000, and the colleges and schemes of the Free and the United Presbyterian Churches and the National Bible Society of Scotland share the remainder between them.

The missionaries in the province of Shantung, China, are just now suffering from a violent panic of hostility which has been excited amongst the people. This seems to be directed chiefly against the Roman Catholic missionaries. A riot has recently occurred in the district of T'an-chèng, to the south of the province, in which their chapel, which was in course of erection, was destroyed. This riot arose out of a dispute concerning some property purchased by the priests for the purpose of building this chapel. For the foreigner to secure property is a great source of vexation to the natives. They hate a foreign building above everything, more than the foreigner, and much more than the foreigner's religion. They consider it an outrage when their prejudices in favour of the conventional national form of building are not satisfied.

A wise missionary will yield to native prejudices in everything but Christian essentials, and such a prejudice as this ought not to be disregarded, since it does not affect Christian faith or Christian life. A new and commodious hospital, in connection with the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland mission at Monkden, erected entirely, so far as its external appearance, after the Chinese plan of architecture, has just been opened in the presence of the leading mandarins of the city, and with the approval of the native community. It has been built under the direction of Dr. Christie, who will be its controller, and who is to be congratulated on its successful inauguration amid general approval.

There is a call from Kandy, in the centre of Ceylon, for a lady missionary who will devote herself to winning the confidence of the Buddhist women in their homes. "To please the women" in the matter of religion has become a proverb in Ceylon, and the most effective way of spreading Christianity there is by converting the women. Not long ago the Hon. Mr. Sharpe, a Government agent, who had whilst at Kandy taken an interest in Mission work, wished to ascertain how the many lads who had passed through Trinity College there, in his time, had stood by their Christian teaching. He found there had been many defections, which, in almost all the cases investigated, were due to the influence of their wives, who were Buddhists. The Kandyan girls are as yet practically unreached. Schools have been tried, and fail through national custom and prejudice. Their homes are much more accessible to the missionary than the private dwellings of Hindu, Mohammedan, or Chinese. Rev. J. G. Garrett, of the C.M.S., writes:—

> The visits of the missionary would be welcomed by all; the climate is really delightful for the tropics, while the civilisation of the chief of Crown colonies makes residence in this lovely country quite comfortable. About £150 a year would supply the necessaries of civilised life.

Who will accept that call?

We are not of those who greatly lament that the scheme for building a cathedral in Liverpool has fallen through for the present. In our day such costly edifices are not essential to worship. We hope Bishop Ryle may be able to spend such sums as are placed at his disposal to much more useful purposes. Even the testimony of Canon Gregory as to the value of St. Paul's does not alter our opinion. He is reported to have said:—

> The music attracts people who are not in the habit of going to church, and as they come again and again, they eventually learn to say their prayers, and now the reredos is there, as a friend remarked, it will teach the people what to believe.

The whole question of methods for attracting people to church, chapel, or hall, as well as what they are taught when they have been got there, seems to us to require reconsideration, in the light of New Testament doctrine and example, and of the power of the Holy Ghost.

Pleas for attendance at theatres and music-halls have called forth a letter in The Nonconformist, from a gentleman in Edgbaston, Birmingham, who for more than half a century has been a superintendent in one of the largest Sunday-schools, has been a visiting justice for twenty-five years, and has been for thirty-six years on a committee in charge of the police. He says music-halls in Birmingham are vast tap-rooms, and that the four theatres there have their licences to sell beer, wine, and spirits on the premises. He testifies, as a magistrate, that hundreds of prisoners have confessed to him that the beginning of their ruin was attendance at places where there were stage-plays.

The official record of the Tenth Synod of the Old Catholic Church in Germany has been printed, from which we learn that with profound seriousness and forbearance a discussion took place on the question of a liturgy in the language of the people. Dr. Reinkins argued for this, and the important change was carried with only two dissentients. When we recall the effect in England of changing the Latin services for the vernacular, and turning the people from being spectators into worshippers, we cannot but anticipate from this action a serious blow to priestly assumptions, and advance among these old German Catholics.

An excellent and learned paper appears in The Record on the Structure of Genesis, by the Principal of St. John's Hall, Highbury. It argues that the eleven "generations," beginning with Gen. ii. 4, mean the history and outcome of the subject matter, and are not fragmentary but a continuous record: that the name Jehovah was not unknown to the patriarchs, as some scholars contend, but that, according to Exod. ii. 2, 3, God manifested Himself to them not by that name but by that of El-Shaddai, the Omnipotent God. He, therefore, dismisses the opinion which has obtained with many that the Elohistic and Jehovistic passages were by different writers, and claims for the whole Book, which varied with the records of the generations, one authorship.

An evening contemporary has stated that, whereas the death-rate in the district of St. George's, Bloomsbury, is only 15 per 1000, in another London district, that about Shelton-street, Drury-lane, it is 53½ per 1000. The excessive mortality in the case of the latter is due to overcrowding, and it would seem, therefore, that, in addition to being so important a factor in the production of immorality, the "one room" system is equally powerful in multiplying the sad records of untimely death. Some day our rulers may come to recognise the value of human life, and then we may hope to see the question of the housing of the poor taken up again, and in earnest. That time will not come, however, until our legislature becomes more imbued with the Spirit of Christ.

In a letter on this subject of the Housing of the Poor, which appeared in The Standard a few days ago, Rev. F. Thorne, rector of Holy Trinity, Gray's Inn-road, asks if it is too much to hope that something may be done in regard to the matter during the next session, and points out that whilst in 1884-5, "there was quite a flutter about the matter," the interest appears to have died out. He goes on to say he is convinced that "it seems almost futile to try and bring religion to bear upon the masses while they are so crammed together." The illustrations taken from an afternoon's visitation in Mr. Thorne's parish are exceedingly painful. Surely, as Mr. Thorne says, the people "have not house-room enough to be either healthy or decent." Yet he can testify to their wonderful patience with their lot, and to the touching instances of neighbourly kindness among them. Will not some of our Christian members of Parliament take up the subject and keep at it until something is done beyond the mere issuing of a Blue Book.

The Dublin University Professor of Ecclesiastical History, who is also vicar of one of the suburban churches, recently said:—

> My idea of Christian preaching is not to speak smooth things to the people, but to tell the truth, and under such conditions alone will I, at least, ever exercise it.

There are, perhaps, few of our readers who will dissent from this view of the duty of the preacher. The circumstances under which the declaration became necessary seem, however, to point to the truth of what Dr. Stokes has asserted, that "congregations take with great complacency and approval reproofs directed against their opponents, while they resent bitterly any allusions to the shortcomings and defects of themselves and their friends." It would appear that the preaching, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, of a sermon on "The Responsibilities of Existence," a sermon with weighty words to those who are wasting life in the pursuit of pleasures, and those even not of a very refined kind, gave so much offence in certain quarters as to necessitate an explanation from the preacher that he had no intention to be personal or to refer to some "recent events."

The excavations now in progress at Sidon are likely to throw considerable light upon the Old Testament Scriptures. Already eighteen sarcophagi have been discovered, some being of very large size and in perfect preservation. One of them contains the body of a man and a large amount of jewellery. The features and body were intact, with the teeth perfect. The inscription on the lid is in seven and a half lines of Phœnician characters, with also some Egyptian hieroglyphics, the stone being black basalt from Egypt. The date is as yet only conjectured, but it is thought to be between 800 and 1500 B.C. The writer of a letter from Syria asks, "Who is he? What if he should be Ethbaal, 'King of the Sidonians'!"

The stupendous armaments of war in Europe appear to overshadow every other end of the human family. This last week one's breath has been taken away by the announcement that the German Empire purpose to increase the army by 700,000 men, at an additional cost of fourteen millions sterling.

It is to be hoped that the letter recently written to The Times by the honorary secretary of the Emin Pasha Relief Committee will allay the anxiety which has not unreasonably been felt at the absence of news from Mr. Stanley. He explains that the delay is reasonably accounted for by the time required for communication with Major Barttelot's camp; that news of the expedition may be expected about the end of February, and that in the meantime "there is no cause to apprehend unfavourable news."

CHRISTIANITY & MAHOMMEDANISM

(Concluded from our last.)

LARGE numbers of Mahommedans are under British rule, and they enjoy full liberty to change their religion as often as they please; so they practically do in parts of Africa and in some islands, but there is no such liberty in Turkey, Palestine, Central India, Persia, Afghanistan, Arabia, nor was there in Egypt till its occupation by British troops. At the Mildmay Conference in 1878 it was stated that there had been up to that time only some three converts from Mahommedanism to Christianity at Constantinople, two at Cairo, and three at Jerusalem, and at the same conference it was stated that of three converts in Egypt one had had to flee to Scotland, a second into Italy, the third alone had remained unmolested. There are, and have for a long time been, Christian missions in several of these Mahommedan countries; but, as relates to adults, they are chiefly to the Copts, Nestorians, Armenians, and other corrupt Christian Churches. The youth of the Mahommedans of both sexes come in considerable numbers to our mission schools and there learn the truths of Christianity; but they have no liberty to embrace it, though the belief in their own religion is rudely shaken.

Interpretations of prophecy are so numerous that I hesitate to adduce any reason for work amongst Mahommedans from any exposition of prophecy which may not be shared by all your readers. But there is a remarkable consensus of opinion as to the little horn of Dan. viii. being the Mahommedan power, and that this is now about to fall. But if we regard history that is now being enacted, it is impossible to do so intelligently without observing the great part that Mahommedan countries are playing in contributing to the history of the period; and no one who sees God in history can fail to notice that God has apparently at this time a special purpose with Mahommedanism, apparently to break the yoke of that apostasy. It is of the greatest importance to the peace of the world that our statesmen should recognise the fact.

Have not all the unrest and disquietude of many past years been in the countries connected with Mahommedanism? On the north we have Morocco forcing itself upon attention. Algiers, Tunis, Tripoli: one after another create alarms, and are coming under foreign protectorates. Bulgaria and Turkey are in chronic unrest. On the West we have Palestine, Persia, Central Asia, Afghanistan, causing uneasiness, and threatening to embroil European nations. From the mouth of the Congo to Zanzibar we have a remarkable movement, commercial and missionary, cutting off Mahommedanism on the South. As for Afghanistan, our Government has several times had to invade that country without effecting what appears to be God's purpose, opening it up to the Gospel. The policy of Great Britain has the effect, however unintentional on the part of our Government, of hermetically sealing it against the Gospel, and of keeping its inhabitants in the darkness and sensuality of Mahommedanism.

We believe the Bible to be the key to the whole of the Eastern questions; and any settlement of them which props up Mahommedan powers without taking adequate security for the dissemination of the Gospel and for liberty of conscience, must be fraught with danger, at least to the nations that prop them up, if not to the peace of the world. If these countries, now closed to the Gospel, are not opened up, by diplomacy, probably it will be done at the point of the sword, with a vast expenditure of precious life and treasure. The peace of Europe thus offers an additional inducement for taking interest in and furthering missionary work amongst the Mahommedans.

The facts being as stated, the practical question arise: What steps are to be taken to advance the cause of Christianity amongst Mahommedans? The first step appears to be for Christian people to realise what Mahommedanism is? what are the barriers to the advance of Christianity amongst the Mahommedans? and to bring the matter before the Lord and ask Him to remove these barriers. Some years ago it appeared almost impossible that Italy, Spain, and other Roman Catholic countries should be opened up to the spread of the Gospel. Much and incessant prayer was made, and the walls that hedged in Roman Catholic superstition and shut out the Gospel, fell, and great was the fall thereof. Great, too, will be the fall of Mahommedanism as soon as Christians realise what it is, and are earnest in prayer and effort for its downfall.

The second step appears to be to press upon our Government the necessity for exacting from Governments such as Persia, Afghanistan, &c., concessions similar to those arising from the Sultan of Turkey; further, to take care that they are not allowed to become a dead letter, and for those who become cognisant of any authenticated breach of them, to bring it promptly to the notice of our Government.

The third step is for the Christian world to take up Missions to Mahommedans on an extensive scale, either by the formation of a distinct society for the purpose, or by the enlargement of the scope of existing societies. The proposed Missionary Conference in June presents a suitable opportunity for taking some definite action in the matter, and the time between now and the Conference may well be employed in spreading information, in correcting mistakes, and arousing interest in the matter.

A Peter the Hermit is required to preach another crusade; not now with the merely sentimental object of obtaining possession of stones and mortar, and sites, however hallowed, but for the far more practical object of gathering living stones for that great spiritual building, of which Jesus Christ Himself is the Chief Corner Stone. He did not exclude Mahommedan countries from the operation of his last command, and He never gave a command that could not be carried into execution. With the effort will come the opening up of the way. The obstacles which Mahommedanism presents to the advance of Christianity will surely be made to remove so soon as adequate effort is made. It only remains, therefore, for the effort to be made in downright earnest, in faith, with much prayer, and in firm assurance of success, remembering that obedience is obligatory, and not optional.

MISSION AT WEST BRIXTON.

REV. AUBREY C. PRICE writes describing the twelve days' mission just held in Immanuel Church, West Brixton. All the workers were greatly blessed; many who had made no profession have yielded themselves to the Saviour.

There has been no unhealthy excitement, though there has been intense earnestness. The after-meetings have been peculiarly solemn times, and the presence and power of the Holy Spirit have been manifest to all. The preachers have all been members of the Evangelisation Society—viz., Messrs. J. H. Lydall, William Taylor, J. Weatherley, Oscar Owers, General Anderson, and Captain Carey Brenton. The individuality and ordinary life work of each evangelist has been apparent in his presentation of God's truth, but there has been no discord. The old Gospel of God's grace, without any additions or subtractions, has been preached throughout the mission, and God has wonderfully blessed it.

WEST LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.—Twelve young ladies, daughters of Wesleyan laymen, have devoted themselves as a sisterhood to work among the poor. They are bound by no vows, and can leave at any time, but in their work they wear a distinctive dress. They are attached to the Wesleyan West Central Mission. No one can doubt that there is an abundance of work waiting their attention in that needy locality.

DR. WHYTE ON DOLEFULNESS.

DR. ALEXANDER WHYTE, of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, is delivering a course of lectures on John Bunyan's "Grace Abounding," at the Tuesday evening prayer-meeting held in that church. As his texts for last week's lecture, Dr. Whyte took Isa. xiii. 21, "Their houses shall be full of doleful creatures," and the following extract from the eighty-seventh paragraph of "Grace Abounding"—"I counted man as unconverted, the most doleful of all the creatures." He said that outside of the Bible and some half-dozen little-read books they seldom got anything like this. In the language of the English Prayer-book they called themselves "miserable sinners," but they did not believe it. When they read David and Paul they gave a gingerly assent to what they say, but they did not believe it for all that. David might say—"My sin is ever before me," and Paul might say—"I am sold under sin," but only a few here and there believed such things. They did not carry that belief about with them in a spiritual understanding, or a sanctified imagination, or a broken heart. A writer has well said, "Most professors play at their religion." Bunyan said God did not play with him when He was convincing him of his sin, and that he did not play with his religion when he lay as in the bottomless pit.

"Grace Abounding," said Dr. Whyte, is not a playing book, but a book for men and women in dead earnest. The first thing to be noticed in the paragraph he read, and the source of its sadness, is the thought of man's original nobility. "Man," said John Bunyan, "is the most noble by creation of all creatures in the visible world; but by sin he has made himself the most ignoble." Talk about books dealing with the nobility of man! Where are there any that can equal those written by the Puritans and Calvinists? Divines debate as to what the image of God consisted in, but the doleful soul, searching in his heart for the remnants of his original nobility, knows better than the divines what the image of God is. Such a man will never think he has risen from beneath, and sprung from the brutes; he will feel that he is like a dethroned son of the King, with some far away memory of that from which he fell.

Then this paragraph contains a hint of the mutability of man's noble origin. Men and angels were both made of the same brittle stuff, though not in the same way. They both sinned; but man's sin did not come from the walls of the body; it arose from the soul, and made the body unclean. There was something in man's make of which he took advantage, and then turned against his God. In their very constitution somewhere the mischief was done; and until the will is cleansed there is no stability in us. So keenly did Bunyan feel the greatness of the contrast between the original nobility of human nature, and the dolefulness of its fallen state that he felt sorry God had made him a man. He would rather have been a beast, born in the lowest condition, and have stood where God put him, than have been born in the highest position and have sinned. Bunyan counted it a doleful thing to have been born a sinner.

Darwin has told us in his autobiography how he used to watch his little children, in order that he might try to prove from whence they came. But Christian parents do not need to make any experiments to see where their children came from. The child is a beautiful object, and it is dear and sweet and winning to have children about; but that man must be a born fool who can gaze upon children and not have his heart moved. Even Christ, who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," had also said, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Is it not a doleful thing to be told that it would have been better for us not to have been born at all, if we are not born again?

CHILDREN'S MISSION at NEWCASTLE.

MR. EDWIN ARROWSMITH, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has concluded a successful work in this town among the children and young people at home for their holidays. The Principal of the Durham College of Science, Professor Garnett, and Mrs. Garnett, attended the services at Scarborough last summer, and were greatly interested. They invited Mr. Arrowsmith to give an account of the work in their drawing-room, and arrangements were made for a visit in the Christmas vacation.

A goodly band of Oxford and Cambridge undergraduates accompanied their friend, and threw themselves heart and soul into the work. Every morning they held special services for boys, and in the afternoons went with them to the football field and entered into the game with unflagging spirit—proving to the lads that vital Christianity is no foe to innocent manly amusement. On Saturday paper chases took place; on one occasion over eighty boys started, and nearly two hundred sat down to a sumptuous tea in the Banqueting Hall of the Corporation, the whole expense being defrayed by the mother of one of the undergraduate helpers. The Mayor (Mr. Stephens) gave a brief address to the boys, expressing his great delight at seeing a band of young men engaged in such a noble work, and wishing them God-speed in their endeavours to win the boys for Christ. Another mode of reaching them was by the evening meetings in the drawing-rooms, offered by some of the most influential residents in the town. These were well attended, and fruitful in spiritual results. Many had the joy of knowing that their houses had become hallowed ground, as one after another could say of their drawing-rooms, "He blessed me there!" It is, indeed, a cheering sign of the times to see University men willing to give up their well-earned rest to devote themselves to a work amongst such an important class as the future men of wealth and position in our land.

Every morning at eleven a children's service was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., which had been prettily decorated by the lady workers, who rendered invaluable service throughout the mission. This was always largely attended, and greatly enjoyed by the children. In response to an appeal made by Mr. Arrowsmith, on behalf of work in the East-end, his youthful congregation contributed enough books, toys, &c., to fill seven large cases, besides others containing boots and clothing. A prettier sight could hardly be witnessed than was afforded by the glad faces of the children as they came trooping in with their parcels, containing, in many instances, their most valued treasures; thus learning, from practical experience, that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Afternoon meetings for parents, Sunday-school teachers, young ladies, and other special gatherings, were addressed daily by Mr. Arrowsmith. These were well attended, and much blessed. At the special invitation of Professor Philipson and Dr. Mears, a gathering of medical students took place in the library of the Royal Infirmary to meet the University men, who gave brief addresses. The Bishop of Newcastle showed his sympathy with the work by inviting Mr. Arrowsmith and his friends to dinner; and Mrs. Wilberforce manifested great interest in the mission. The importance of Bible reading was strongly enforced at the services, and as a result nearly 500 have joined the Scripture Union, and new members are coming in daily. Temperance meetings were also held, and a goodly number of signatures obtained. Four special addresses were given to young men; and soldiers, business employés, patients in the hospital and infirmary, were not forgotten.

Much prayer had been made on behalf of the mission, and consequently the spiritual results were most encouraging. The changed lives of many testify to the reality of the work in their souls, and the Bible-classes which have been arranged will strengthen and confirm their faith. Mr. Arrowsmith and his friends feel under a deep debt of gratitude to Mrs. Garnett for her unwearied zeal and earnest sympathy in their efforts; and they are thankful to leave behind one so qualified to carry on the work of the Children's Special Service Mission.

THE OPIUM TRADE.

REV. GOODEVE MABBS has been holding meetings in the West of England, in connection with the movement for educating and stirring up public opinion against the opium trade. At Bridgwater, the Mayor (Mr. W. Hurman) presided over a meeting in the Memorial Hall of the Y.M.C.A., and among the speakers was Rev. E. J. Dukes, formerly of China. At Bristol a meeting was held in the schoolroom of Arley Chapel. Rev. S. J. Whitmee presided, and in the course of an address referred to the fact that both political parties were culpable on the opium question. He said that he intended, whenever he might be called upon to vote for a member of Parliament, to refuse his support to a candidate who was not prepared to press for the righteous settlement of moral questions, such as those involved in the opium trade and the drink traffic.

Mr. Mabbs also addressed the congregation at Stapleton-road, Bristol. Rev. John S. Fordham recently delivered a lecture on "Our Opium Trade with China," at Market Weighton.

OBITUARY.

THE AUTHOR OF "MY AIN COUNTREE."

MRS. THEODORE F. C. DEMAREST recently died at Los Angeles, California. She was the author of "My Ain Countree," which has been sung by many thousands who never knew the author's name, owing to her dislike of publicity. She had been an invalid for several years, and was in California for her health, but her death was unexpected.

REV. R. C. MURRAY, MHOW, INDIA.

With much regret we receive the intelligence of the death, from sunstroke, of this devoted missionary, in India, of the Canadian Presbyterian Church. It was only on September 18, last, that his wife was called to her reward, and now in little over three months he has followed her. His death is a tremendous loss to the Mission, which was only started in 1877. Mr. Murray went to India in 1885.

MR. JAMES SPICER, J.P.

We regret to record the death of Mr. James Spicer, on Monday week, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was justice of the peace for Essex, a deputy lieutenant of the same county, and also of the City of London. His loss will most be felt in Nonconformist circles, and especially among the Congregationalists, for his sympathy and help were ever ready to be extended to ministers and laymen who sought them. Many Congregational churches owe their existence to his support, and many others he liberally aided. Mr. Spicer was trustee and treasurer of the Congregational Union, and for upwards of thirty years he was treasurer of the Colonial Missionary Society. His sons are largely interested in religious and philanthropic work, the second of whom, Mr. Albert Spicer, already occupies a prominent position in public life.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—In connection with this Mission, another free tea was given to the unemployed, at Malden Hall, Kentish Town, on January 26, when 450 men were entertained by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch and friends. Every care was used to ensure the tickets falling into the right hands, and in this the workers were successful. After tea the men adjourned to the hall above, where the rest of the evening was occupied with hymns and addresses by various friends.

DOCK LABOURERS AT SPITALFIELDS.—Mr. J. Sharpless, superintendent of the Spitalfields Gospel Mission, writes to say that some of the dock labourers and others who have been brought to Christ through the instrumentality of the Mission are good useful workmen of various occupations, and he would be pleased to find situations for them. Rather than live in the lodging-houses, with their evil associations, these poor fellows are glad to sleep at nights on hard forms in the schoolroom in Osborn-place, with rugs thrown over them. This fact was referred to in last week's issue, but by error the coverings were said to be "rags."

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

MANY thousands in this corner of the busy East London have during January had a dinner, a supper, or a meat tea. These have been all accompanied by faithful Gospel messages, reminding each one that the Lord Jesus thinks of them, and pressing home the invitation, "Come unto Me!"

These gatherings were composed of the down-hearted, uncared for poor, starving, needy, and forlorn of all ages. Voluntary lady workers visited hospitals, infirmaries, workhouses, garrets, and thieves' dens, factories, with useful gifts, and many a court and alley to find the starving children for a soup meal given at the old Home. Eighty young children, bereft of kindred, have been rescued, and they are now blooming in our Hackney Training Home, with a work of grace going on in their midst, being tested for Canada. Widows have had blankets, packets of tea, and their weekly sixpences and meals. Struggling mothers with large families have each had a joint of beef, and a bundle of children's clothing.

Blessing has rested upon the work amongst the Jews, and the Gospel services. Much true loving gratitude has been expressed by all. Will kind donors through THE CHRISTIAN accept our united hearty thanks. Matt. xxv. 40. ANNIE MACPHERSON.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.

SINCE the opening of the new Soldiers' Institute, which, like other similar institutes at home, is conducted on decided unsectarian principles, and is free and open to soldiers of all denominations, Roman Catholics included, the Roman Catholic Bishop, Canilla, has on more than one occasion forbad from the pulpit of the Catholic Cathedral any soldier of that persuasion entering the building for any cause whatever. Consequently, many who used to come for the sake of the reading-room and refreshment bar, &c., are now afraid to do so.

An intelligent Roman Catholic sergeant the other day, who was anxious to join a St. John ambulance class, conducted at the Institute, said that, much as he wanted to join this class, so useful for soldiers, he was afraid to do so. As there are about 1000 Roman Catholic soldiers on the Rock, this intolerant prohibition debars many of them from attending who otherwise would gladly do so.

The Channel Squadron, consisting of several men-of-war, are now here, and during the past week special services have been conducted at the Institute by several Christian blue jackets. The meetings have been well sustained, and several soldiers have professed conversion, among them a Roman Catholic; notwithstanding the bishop's prohibition. We are expecting Miss M. S. S. Herdman for a short mission next month. H.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—In Leeds, arrangements have been made to bring trained nurses to the homes of the very poor. The town is divided into five districts, to each of which a nurse has been assigned. Each nurse makes from fifteen to twenty visits daily on an average, and where it is needed continued attendance is provided. There is an office to which all who know of needful cases may send information. Leeds has set an example worthy of wide imitation.

AN ABLE AND LEARNED ADDRESS, by Lord Robert Montagu, was delivered in the Great Hall, Tunbridge Wells, on the 27th ult. A large and influential audience was present, and the platform was occupied by the clergy and ministers of the town. The address started with affirming that pagan idolatry had its origin in Babylonia during the hundred and fifty years between the Flood and the Dispersion. That its practices were afterwards incorporated with all heathen worship, and that many of them were adopted by the Church at the beginning of the Roman Apostasy. The line of argument was supported by proofs from pagan and Christian writers, and was exceedingly valuable. The conclusion was that Ritualism in England was drifting to this old paganism under a Christian name. Rev. Dr. Strickland and Canon Hoare moved the vote of thanks.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Southwold.—A three-weeks' Gospel mission here has been attended with great success. Believers have been quickened. Souls have professed conversion, and the work of God has received a fresh impetus.

Potterne, Wilts.—An eight-days' Gospel mission has been held in this village, by Mr. John Line, sen., of Reading. With much power he presented to his hearers the truth as it is in Jesus. Several have professed conversion.

Major J. H. Cole was recently called home to Michigan, from his work in Missouri, because of serious sickness in his family. He has done some evangelistic work near Adrian, but has taken cold and is now sick himself.—Christian Worker.

The Kirkley Runs Mission-room, near Lowestoft, completed its first year's work on Sunday week. Placed in the centre of a populous neighbourhood, it has already done a noble work, the place on Sundays being crowded, a good Sunday-school having been established.

Hastings.—Miss Smith and Miss Bax, of Southsea, have conducted a mission in connection with the Primitive Methodist Societies at Hastings and St. Leonard's. Members of various churches have testified to the reception of definite blessing, and a number of souls have been brought to the Saviour, both adults and children.

Mr. John MacAuliffe has been holding a ten-days' mission in St. Paul's schoolroom at Poole. A steadily increasing interest was manifested each night. The first meetings were times of special work amongst the Christians. Workers of all denominations were greatly drawn together, and a real quickening has taken place. The afternoon Bible-readings on "Ruth," were blessed times of refreshing to us all. The power of the Spirit was felt in the way in which some very stubborn hearts were led to Christ.

Mr. Henry Varley has been having good times at the Cape, where large crowds have gathered to listen to the word of life from his lips. A Salvation Army soldier informed him that some years since he found peace at the Tabernacle, Notting-hill, through the preaching of Mr. Varley's son. Mr. Varley has gone with Mr. Hannington, who has been working in Natal, to Melbourne, after preaching in many places in South Africa. He is rejoiced to find much fruit remaining from his last visit over twelve months since.

WORKHOUSES.—A correspondent points out that daily and weekly newspapers may, after perusal by their purchasers, well be sent to workhouses for the amusement and instruction of the inmates.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME continues to shelter and train seventy to eighty destitute and deserted children at the Institute, Clayton House, Epsom. This year Mr. Joseph Weatherley, a tried friend of the work, has prepared the new report, owing to the continued illness of the beloved founder of the Home. He is able to say that every need has been supplied, though Miss Mittendorff's indisposition has caused great anxiety. One of the girls has gone to Canada, and several others have left for situations. Two have been admitted, and others are waiting in hope of entering when the necessary funds are provided. Last year £1250 was contributed and expended. Friends are asked to continue the help so long and so kindly given.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, just concluded, at Trinity Presbyterian Church, Pendennis-road, Streatham, S.W.——The Church Missionary Society ask for definite and persevering prayer that men may be raised up for their half-manned missions in the Punjaub, Japan, Bengal, Travancore, Eastern Equatorial Africa, and amongst Mohammedans. The London Missionary Society also request prayer that they may be enabled to send out at least fifteen additional missionaries this year.——For a mission to be conducted at Cambridge, by Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe, for members of the University only, from Feb. 9 to 14.——For blessing on a mission in Chippenham, commencing Feb. 6; to be conducted by Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff.——For special blessing on a six-days' mission at Northampton, from Feb. 7 to 12.——For Gospel services by Mr. William Forbes, at Hornton-street Chapel, Kensington, commencing on Sunday, Feb. 5.

YOUNG WOMEN IN SOUTH LONDON.

Sir,—Now that special attention is directed to South London, may I commend to your readers our Y.W.C.A. work there, at the Rochester Institution and Home, 209 and 211, Walworth-road. Our experience of years in this locality certainly tends to corroborate the impression that "Christianity is not in possession" in South London. Drunkenness, street fighting, and Sabbath desecration are largely in possession, and the prevalent drinking habits among the poorer work-girls, who swarm in the streets at night, are truly appalling.

The Y.W.C.A. has hitherto directed its chief efforts to the shop-girl class, but the late hours for closing business make the work peculiarly difficult. We now earnestly desire to push forward more effectually, and to this end we need volunteer lady workers and also funds, to enable us to throw out a network of agencies over the moral wildernesses of South London. Wherever the loan of a good-sized room and the services of a worker can be secured, we could open a fresh branch and gather in numbers of hitherto uncared for work-girls.

One friend has generously offered £1000 and another £500 to give an impetus to London Y.W.C.A. work, on condition that £4000 be speedily raised. Of this we have received £300. Will those of your readers who have it in their power to help, bear in mind the needs of our toiling, tempted sisters, the work-girls of South London. Mary Weitbrecht, Sec.

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—Special meetings for seamen have recently been held in the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel, Ratcliff-highway. The meetings have been well attended, and followed by most cheering results. The addresses of Mr. John Bell, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. Charles Inglis, Mrs. Mackenzie, Miss Hill, Miss Mesier, and others, were listened to with the most earnest attention. Nearly every evening soul-stirring testimonies were given by Christian seamen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—A mission will (D.V.) be held by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, for members of the University, in the Guildhall, at Cambridge, from Thursday, February 9, till Tuesday, February 14. The Cambridge Inter-collegiate Christian Union specially ask the earnest and faithful prayers of every reader of this paper on behalf of this effort made in the name of Christ to bring the unconverted men of the University to a saving knowledge of Him.

MR. AULAY MACAULAY was presented with an address and testimonial a few days ago, in token of his services during the past twenty years as hon. secretary and superintendent of the Latymer-road Mission. Colonel Petrie made the presentation. The address had been beautifully illuminated by Miss Irene Petrie, and signed by two or three dozen of the teachers, and a large number of the children attending the Mission Sunday-school. Great regret was expressed at the loss of Mr. Macaulay's skilful and energetic guidance, and sincere wishes for his speedy and complete restoration to health.

HOLLOWAY MISSION HALL.—In our little hall, at 301, Holloway-road, N., we have lately given a rice supper twice a week. We boil the rice, mixed with milk and sugar. With fire for cooking, and everything included, except the labour of preparation, it has cost under one penny per head. The meal has given satisfaction, and supplies a good supper for a hungry man. After supper the Gospel is sung and spoken to those present, and we have reason to believe that the good seed of the kingdom has entered some hearts. We also give free breakfasts on Sundays. H. Putterill.

OMNIBUS AND TRAMCAR MEN.—A meat tea was given to about one hundred and twenty men on Thursday, last week, in the Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Orde Hall-street, Ormond-street, W.C. After tea the meeting was presided over by Mr. George Williams, who delivered a very hearty address on "Christ as the Working Man's True Friend." Mr. John A. Arnold, the missionary to the omnibus and tramcar men, stated that a Teetotal Sick Club had been started, and already sixty-four had enrolled themselves as members. He has held meetings in the various yards, in farriers' and harness-makers' shops, and also in tramcars. Three of the men next spoke, and testified to the good they had received through the missionary's visits.

Mission Appeals.

Christmas Cards, Scraps, &c.—Mrs. Ross, Regent-square, Doncaster, would be glad of cards, scraps, prints, &c., for books for poor children, which have given so much pleasure.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.—£100 are needed for important itinerant mission purposes. Help thankfully received by the hon. sec., Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

Omnibus and Tramcar Mission.—Mr. John A. Arnold, missionary, would be glad to receive mittens, scarves, and gloves, or any warm clothing, for the omnibus and tramcar men, who are exposed to all weathers. Mr. Arnold's address is, 24, Risinghill-street, Pentonville, N.

Chiswick.—Mrs. Ginever's orphan girls recently gave a service of sacred song in the Mission Hall, Chiswick, in aid of a fund which is being established for purchasing and furnishing a house adjoining the Shaftesbury Ragged School. £30 is still required, and contributions will be thankfully received by Mr. R. T. Smith, 13, Barrowgate-road, Chiswick.

East-End Poverty.—Rev. J. W. Atkinson writes from 308, Old Ford-road, E., appealing for help in relief work in East London. He says that with his voluntary committee he is doing all in his power to find employment for the unemployed, and to provide food, fuel, and clothing for the necessitous honest poor. A copy of the last report and balance-sheet is sent to every donor of money, food, or clothing.

The New Talbot Tabernacle.—The first contract for the new building is now nearing completion, and, with the exception of a few promised sums which have yet to be received, all the needed money has been subscribed. But this outlay only secures the shell of the building. It is proposed to leave the galleries for the present, and to do simply that which is absolutely necessary, in order to render the building suitable for the purposes of public worship. This will involve expenditure amounting to quite £1500. Donations are earnestly solicited, and may be paid into the London and County Bank, Westbourne-grove; or sent direct to Pastor Frank H. White, 12, Princes-square, W.

Bermuda is the headquarters of the West Indian squadron (some 2000 men), and a naval establishment is located at Ireland Island. On the island there are no temperance rooms or halls suitable for the holding of meetings, while canteens and kindred institutions abound. The squadron boasts some five branches of temperance societies, and these languish for want of a hall. Some months since a subscription list was opened to form a fund to build one, and £70 has been received. A grant of land has been obtained, and now what is needed is either an iron building or some £100 in cash to build a stone one on the spot. Will you let me appeal through your pages for help in this matter? The treasurer is Rev. C. H. Harbord, R.N., Bermuda.—H. D. Capper, R.N.

NICE.—Mr. E. J. Mather writes to us from this southern retreat: "I have spent an intensely happy fortnight amongst the numerous Protestant communities of Ardêche, Drôme, and Vaucluse, meeting with many old friends, and finding a genuine missionary spirit, and much real Divine blessing."

THE ENGLISH CONFESSIONAL.—The letter on this subject by Rev. William Frith which appeared in our issue of January 13 can be had as a leaflet from the office of the Monthly Tract Society, Bridge House, Blackfriars, E.C., 1s. per 100. The texts have been added confirming the statements in the letter.

THE ITALIAN EVANGELICAL PUBLICATION SOCIETY presents the twentieth report of their proceedings, which contains testimonies to the value of the work. Instances of priests tearing Testaments out of the hands of children and destroying them, sufficiently prove the need of such a counteracting agency. In the Island of Maddalena a barber was led to renounce Popery; and when dying said to the priest, "I have Christ, and therefore have no need of you." Rev. James B. Will, 51, Via dei Serragli, Florence, is the secretary and treasurer.

BAND OF HOPE UNION.—The annual soirée, in connection with the Christmas and New Year's collection of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, was held on Monday evening at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, Rev. J. R. Diggle, Chairman of the London School Board, presiding. In the course of an address, the chairman said that he knew of no way in which the interest of the children of London could be better advanced than by inculcating the principles of total abstinence. It is, he said, encouraging to know that out of 111,000 boys in daily attendance at the Board Schools, 37,477 belong to Bands of Hope, and out of 95,000 girls, 31,000, a little army that would in the future do good service in the promotion of the work on a larger scale. He had heard it said that in some Board Schools a practice exists of sending out children who stay in school at the dinner hour for beer. The Board would strongly disapprove such a practice, and he appealed to every child and adult to assist them to suppress it if they knew of its existence.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

RIGHT LUNG DISEASED.—CASE of Mr. MARSHALL A. PEARSON, of BOSTON, LINC.

The wife of this patient applied to me on the 9th of June last, with statement of his case, then very critical. He had decided disease of the right lung.

He had lost a stone (14 lb.) in weight in four months, and had become exceedingly weak, since the death of a sister of the same disease, and was utterly unable to attend to business.

Heavy purulent expectoration, violent pains in the left side, constant shortness of breathing, profuse night perspirations—these were the symptoms when (after reading an account of my treatment in The Christian Herald) his wife first wrote to me.

I need scarcely say that his case received every attention. Advice and medicine were sent. In three weeks he was better. "I seem much better" (he writes), "and have lost my pain. My father and sister are most anxious that I should continue. They have seen and read of your cases of cure."

Writing me in August he says:—"I am gaining weight and strength every day. All my pains are gone. I believe your medicine is making a perfect cure of me."

In September he writes that he has commenced work again; and in a letter dated November 5 he says:—"I am pleased to tell you I am getting first class again."—133, High-street, Boston.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

The Book World.

A Word to the Churches.

Outspoken. By John Bate. Passmore & Alabaster. This is truly an outspoken appeal to the churches to have done with worldliness, with the exaltation of human learning and of human methods to the practical exclusion of dependence upon the Spirit of God. We cannot assent to all that Mr. Bate says, but there is much spiritual commonsense in his book, likely to make its readers ask if they really are using the means laid down in the New Testament for winning and for building up souls.

Church History.

The Church and the Eastern Empire (by Rev. H. F. Tozer, M.A. 2s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co.) is another volume added to the interesting series of histories entitled "Epochs of Church History," edited by Prof. Creighton, of Cambridge. It fully sustains, in every way, the high excellence of the series. The author has happily executed the difficult task of compressing the substance of a long and important history into small compass, without in the least laying himself open to the charge of dulness or ambiguity. A close and careful survey of the Eastern Church through a period of eleven centuries (A.D. 325—1453) is presented to the reader in a neat little manual which is at once concise, lucid, and thoroughly readable. We cordially commend the book as a graphic illustration of the incalculable mischief which has been done to the cause of religion and civilisation through the alliance of the Church with the world.

A Scriptural Romance.

Mary, the Queen of the House of David and Mother of Jesus. By Rev. A. Stewart Walsh, D.D.; with introduction by Dr. Talmage. 3s. 6d. Sampson Low & Co. This is a bold, vigorous book, full of historical learning, and not without marks of very considerable ability. We have no doubt that many will enjoy it, and profit by their reading. Still, it does not commend itself to our taste. The conversations, of which the book is largely composed, are stilted and unnatural. Sometimes we felt them to be quite unbearable. We are a little doubtful, too, of the general purpose of the book, which is to exalt Mary as the ideal woman. "Show us the mother, and it sufficeth us," an expression used by the author, will give some idea of its drift. Protestants generally, in their opposition to Romanism, may not have done sufficient honour to her who was "blessed among women"; but we think that the high romance of this book overshoots the mark, and comes perilously near to Mariolatry.

Christ in the Psalms.

Christ the Key of the Psalter (by an Oxford Graduate. 5s. Elliot Stock) contains ten sermonic lectures devoted to the consideration of the divisions and authors of the Psalter, with especial reference to the titular designations of the various Psalms. The Hebrew titles given to these sacred hymns and prayers of the ancient Church, though generally accepted as historically true, are, nevertheless, beset with so much uncertainty, that their interpretation has been various and conflicting. The Christology of the Psalter is ably maintained by the writer, with much scholarship, learning, and authority. In harmony with the allegorical method of interpretation, the author looks for an occult Messiah under the superscriptions of these ancient songs, and endeavours to show that their very titles, concealing a mystic Gospel meaning, were designed for Messianic types and symbols. That the Psalter is a treasure of priceless value to the Church of God there can be no doubt, and of the Messianic element in many of the Psalms there can be but little doubt also; but to regard titles of obscure and uncertain meaning, names of choir leaders, and singers, musical arrangements, instruments, and even signs of musical expression, as having a direct reference to Christ, requires more than ordinary stretch of imagination. Such a suggestion appears more ingenious than true, and is too fanciful to be received as sound criticism. An exaggerated estimate of the Messianic element in the Psalter and other parts of the Old Testament, provokes and strengthens hostile criticism on the one hand, and weakens the force of much of the apologetic literature of the Church on the other. The Bible student, notwithstanding, will peruse the work with pleasure and profit; and will find a vast amount of useful information and devout thought upon a subject whose importance demands a careful and more general study.

A Book for Teachers.

The Story of Jesus in the Words of Scripture. By Alexander MacKeith. 1s. Maclure. Macdonald & Co., Glasgow. We recommend this book without reserve, especially to workers in ragged schools and similar institutions. It will show how audiences of 1200 or 1400 waif-children are interested in simple Gospel stories, with the assistance of pictorial and blackboard illustrations. The author has unbounded faith in the attractiveness of Scripture. Would that all our teachers had the same. His splendid success in Glasgow proves the soundness of his belief.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Satisfaction: the Life Lesson of an Oxford Undergraduate. 3d. Whiting & Co. The writer's experience will meet with an echo in the heart of many a reader. We hope it will be of use in satisfying longing souls.

The Homilist. Annual volume. Houlston & Sons. There is much in this volume that is useful to preachers, and we rejoice to see its thoroughly evangelical tone. The circle of contributors might well be extended, so as to include a larger number of the excellent evangelical preachers of the day.

The Knowledge of the Holy. By Rev. Frederick Whitfield. James Nisbet & Co. Mr. Whitfield's books are always very readable, and deeply spiritual. In this one we have a collection of sermons or addresses, given on different occasions without, as it seems, much connection, but each is helpful. The hymns, many of which, we presume, are original, are far above those one usually finds in books of devotion other than professed hymnals.

Sermons and Addresses. By Robert Newton Young, D.D. 5s. T. Woolmer. The author of the Fernley Lecture on the "Work of the Spirit" is well known beyond the Methodist Connexion as a man of culture and scholarly attainments, a sound thinker, and an eloquent preacher. He was President of the Methodist Conference for the year 1886. At the request of the Conference, and by the advice of friends, this volume is published as a memorial of his year of office. The discourses were delivered on special occasions during his presidential year; and as manly, catholic, and eloquent utterances of ripe wisdom and rich experience, they are worthy of the occasion, and also of the high reputaton of the preacher.

A new volume of Outlines and Sketches of Sermons, by eminent Wesleyan preachers, is published by Richard D. Dickinson, Farringdon-street. The outlines, which are not of the barren skeleton type too frequently served in books of this description, represent a great number of authors upon a great variety of interesting and useful topics. They are plain, pithy, methodical, concise, and suggestive, with substance and aptitude for easy and large amplification. Such a quiver of stout, polished, pointed, Gospel-tempered weapons, cannot fail to be of much service to many Christian workers who are taxed with "bewildered industry," and whose duties allow them but scant opportunity to equip themselves with efficient preparation for their noble warfare.

A Memoir of the late Rev. G. M. Murphy, by his sister, Mrs. Henry Taylor, is now in the press, and will shortly be published.

A stirring temperance sermon, full of startling and impressive facts, lately preached by Rev. John Robertson, Stonehaven, N.B., is published at a penny by Mr. David Bell, bookseller in that town. We hope many copies of it will be circulated.

Mr. G. E. Williams, the new secretary of the Brixton Y.M.C.A., has prepared a "Record of Enquirers," for the use of Christian workers, and specially intended to be used in evangelistic meetings of the association. It will, however, be found suitable for general use in the inquiry-room. Copies may be had (price 2½d., 2s. per dozen) of the compiler, 10, Tunstall-road, Brixton, S.W.

FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

The Sentinel (Dyer Bros.) is very strong and strenuous this month in its protests against legalised vice, and the encouragement which that evil too often finds in influential quarters. Workers in the Repeal movement should preserve the little map which forms a supplement, to act as a constant reminder of the things that are still left undone.

The Railway Signal is moving forward with the times. This year it has begun to give in each issue a portrait of some valued friend of the Mission. Last month there appeared a speaking likeness of Mr. T. A. Denny, vice-president; and this month an equally good portrait is given of Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, treasurer. The general contents of the magazine are of a thoroughly live character.

The Cottager and Artizan (1d. R. T. S.) has a most admirable full-page portrait and sketch of the work of Canon Fleming.

Regions Beyond for February (2d. S. W Partridge & Co.) contains pages which cannot but interest the friends of foreign missions. The removal of Rev. F. B. Meyer from Leicester to London justifies a brief account of the work which has for over six years been in progress in and around Melbourne Hall, Leicester. The departure of Miss Guinness for China is also the subject of a short article.

The Leisure Hour. The serial stories are well sustained, and there are some capital occasional papers in this number. Among these we mention a slight sketch, well illustrated, of Rouget de l'Isle, the author of the Marseillaise; a sensible paper on Our Boys and Girls, by Dr. Schofield; the Sweated Sweaters, by F. Hastings; and Forbidding the Banns, a ballad for the people, by Tom Brown, author of "The Prayer Meeting," which appeared in the January Sunday at Home.

The Quiver opens with an extremely stimulating paper on the new Quiver Mission. Young couples (and old ones, too) would do well to ponder Rev. Gordon Calthrop's paper on "How to Sanctify Marriage." In "The Salt of the Earth," Edward Garrett tells a story of great work done by lowly workers. We have greatly enjoyed Rev. Hugh Macmillan's sermon on "God's Righteousness like the Great Mountains," written with his usual beauty and power. The records of Christian labour given in "Short Arrows," and elsewhere, abound with interest and suggestion.

The Sunday at Home is "all alive" this month—an excellent number. Dr. Monro Gibson's sermon on "The Impossibility of pleasing God without Faith" is quite a message for the times. Interesting records of Christian work are found in the two papers, "The Problem of the Poor," by W. J. Gordon, and "A True Mother of Charity." "The Worries of Daily Work," by Rev. Alex. Rowland, is very helpful. Ruth Lamb contributes two extremely sensible papers entitled, "For Better, for Worse." We hope that the much-needed warnings they give will be heeded by the younger readers, and noted by the elder. The Young Folks' Corner is well filled by the story of "Missie."

Y.W.C.A., RYDE, I.W.—An eight days' mission to women, comprising several services daily, has just been concluded. The mission was conducted in the Y.W.C.A. New Mission Hall, at Garfield House, by Miss Naish, from Weston-super-Mare, and attracted large audiences. God graciously blessed the mission, not only in conversions, but in quickening the spiritual life of professing Christians.

MISS MEREDITH BROWN writes from 18, Upper Montagu-street:—"The streets of Lisson-grove are as sad on the Lord's Day morning as Petticoat-lane. We propose to start Sunday free breakfasts in the Shaftesbury Institute, provided the means are sent to us for this work. Additional workers are much needed. About one hundred and eighty girls have received probationary cards; of these about eighty attend nightly: we are compelled to close the doors when we have admitted this number, as we cannot take more girls than we can look after. The Sunday evening services are most encouraging. The audience consists, besides factory girls, of mothers with shawls over their heads, and quite a number of men and rough lads. The Saturday evening entertainments are fairly well attended. We hope to start a mothers' meeting shortly."

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.—A new hall, capable of seating 550 persons, a swimming bath, and gymnasium, have been added to this Institution; and though the ceremony of formally opening these additional premises has not yet taken place, but is to be made the occasion of a special celebration in the future, a service of thanksgiving and prayer was held on Monday afternoon, to commemorate the completion of the work. Miss Hill unveiled three painted windows—symbolical of Industry, Religion, and Art—which, dedicated to the memory of her father, who was a generous supporter of the Institute, have been presented by her brother, Mr. Henry Hill, the founder and hon. secretary. Prayer was offered by Mr. Creath, and addresses were delivered by Mr. Garland and Mr. R. C. Morgan. Mr. Hill made a statement, in which he explained that £6000 was urgently needed to meet the present deficit. In the evening a conversazione was held, special features in the programme being an address by Mr. Samuel Montagu, M.P., a vocal and instrumental concert, a gymnastic display and musical drill, and a performance by the Institute band.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

The New Year's devotional meeting in connection with this work took place on Friday evening, at Exeter Hall. Mr. Drysale said the work of the movement was gradually and most hopefully extending itself, not only in London and the provinces, but in more distant parts. They had received invitations to carry their work as far as Dublin (where they had held meetings with much success), and also from Paris and America. In England 72 meetings had been held in less than ten months, with marked blessing and success.

After a period passed in devotional exercises, Rev. J. Dixon (Wesleyan minister) addressed the meeting. This work of female reclamation, he said, required much faith and patience. Prayer was continued by several brethren for definite objects connected specially with the work of preaching the Gospel to the fallen.

Mr. Christien, organising superintendent of the movement, gave some particulars of the plan in which the work is proposed to be carried on in future. He suggested that, instead of holding isolated meetings in certain localities at fixed periods, some distance apart, a certain district should be selected, and there a successive series of meetings should be held, lasting at least for a fortnight, so that the good work might be carried on without intermission.

HIGHWAY and HEDGEROW MISSION.

A new experiment in mission work is about to be tried in the form of a movable mission-room, designed to reach hamlets and out-of-the-way places. It is being constructed of wood in sections, and will be easy of erection and removal. Its originator is Mr. Henry A. Bruce Moorhouse, a retired military officer, who has been missioning by sea and by land for seven years. He has been ably helped by his wife, who not only preaches, plays, and sings, but composes the hymns and music used at the services. For some time they used a mission yacht, and laboured among the sea-faring population of our own coast. Then they resided on the French coast, and worked among the French people. Again, they were drawn to the Channel Islands, and a blessed harvest rewarded their labours in Guernsey. But gradually they were impressed with the spiritual destitution of our neglected villages, and after several journeys, gipsy fashion, in vans, they last year had two large vans constructed, in which they resided with their family through the summer, and purpose doing so again this year.

Last year they travelled nearly 3000 miles, and gave 340 addresses indoors and out to about 50,000 people; at present they are in the New Forest. God has blessed his word through these self-denying wayside evangelists to the in-gathering of many. In some places their labours have led to the erection of mission-rooms, and to the formation of Y.M.C. Associations. They carry Bibles and good books for sale among the people, and practise photography as a means of supporting the work. Mr. Moorhouse has shown how thoroughly devoted he is to his mission by spending £1000 from his own purse during the last seven years; but, as a matter of course, outside help is also needed, specially with the advent of the movable mission hall.

A MISSIONARY FAMILY.—Rev. W. B. Collins, rector of Elvington, Yorkshire, is resigning his living to go out as a missionary to China, in connection with the C.M.S. He is a brother of Rev. J. S. Collins, who sailed lately for Fuh-chau; and his sister is shortly going to India, under the auspices of the Church of England Zenana Society. These three from one family are children of Rev. W. H. Collins, now rector of All Saints' Church, York, who was a C.M.S. missionary in China from 1857 to 1880.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

CHINA.—Rev. Ch. D. Tenney, formerly an American Congregational missionary, has been appointed preceptor to the sons of Li Hung Chang, the Viceroy.

BELGIUM. — M. Réveillaud has given lectures in several Belgian towns. The audiences were numerous, and consisted of working-men, men of science, Romanists, Protestants, and Freethinkers.

CHILI.—Some Swiss Protestants, having emigrated to Chili, Pastor Grin has visited them with a view to inquiring into their spiritual needs. He finds their chief wants are schools and places of worship with pastoral oversight.

OPIUM.—In Tahiti and other Oceanic islands opium-smoking is said to be greatly on the increase. A law forbids the sale of opium to any but Chinese, but the law is not applied, and men, women, and even young girls are to be found in the opium dens.

ITALY.—M. Pons, pastor of the Vaudois Church in Naples, opened last November a Gospel Hall in a working-man's quarter of the city. The hall is filled, and the behaviour of the audience proves the progress that toleration has made in that part.

PARIS.—M. Andru, pastor of the Baptist Church, Rue de Lille, being obliged to resign through ill health, M. Saillens, of the McAll Mission, takes provisional, if not permanent charge of the church, without relinquishing his part in the Mission.—Le Signal.

SECESSION FROM THE ROMISH CHURCH.—We hear, says The Rock, that a body of about eight hundred persons, with their sheikh, Murar, at Madebah, and their priest, M. Bandoli, an Italian, are anxious to secede from the Roman Catholic Church to become Protestants, and that the Latin Patriarch has instigated the Pacha of Jerusalem to arrest the sheikh and the priest on a false accusation of sedition. The priest has escaped to Cairo.

ONE OF THE GREATEST OF WOMEN PHILANTHROPISTS, and one about whom society knows little or nothing, is Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, of Boston. Her income is about £10,000 a year, which she receives quarterly, and it is said that she is often penniless before the end of the quarter. She has no children, has no house or home. She spends her time and money in charity, and that without identifying herself with the objects of her generosity.

MARTYRS IN MEXICO.—The Evangelical Mission in Mexico has again been consecrated by the blood of the martyrs. Abraham Gomez, a Presbyterian pastor, Miguel Cipriano, and the wife of Philippe de Zaragoza have been assassinated in the town of Ahuacuatilan. A Romish priest and a judge are said to have been the direct instigators of the massacre. President Diaz, to whom complaint was made, is personally the friend of religious liberty, but the roots of Jesuitism are very deep in Mexico.—L'Eglise Libre.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS IN SWEDEN.—The Sunday-school system of Sweden is being greatly developed. At Norrköping, a great manufacturing centre with 82,000 inhabitants, there are three schools, with 100 teachers, and about 1500 children. Several villages in the vicinity have their Sunday-school, there being perhaps 25 teachers, and 350 children in all. In a little town of 2000 people, in which a single individual last winter opened a school with nine children, there were in the summer four others at work, with a total attendance upon their teaching of 60.

AFRICA.—In the "Missionary Notices" of the United Methodist Free Churches there appears a touching letter from Rev. T. Truscott, of Sierra Leone, giving details of the recent raid made by the Younies on the mission station in the Bompah country. The native teacher in charge succeeded in escaping with his wife and child. Several native Christians were massacred, and others treated in a most inhuman fashion. An interesting letter from Boca del Toro tells of substantial progress made, and of a new mission commenced amongst the Valientes, a large race of Indians.

LI HUNG CHANG, Viceroy of China, has undertaken to provide ample means for the support of a class of Chinese women who are to study medicine under Mrs. King, M.D., of the London Missionary Society, Tientsin. Lady Li, who was cured by Mrs. King in 1879, takes a deep interest in the Mission Hospital, and in the provision of means for training Chinese students of medicine, and keeps up an intimate friendship with Mrs. King. Her ladyship has been greatly concerned about the condition of her fellow countrywomen, who are prevented by prejudice from seeking the aid of the foreign physician, and suffering grievously from the ignorance of the native doctors.

JAMAICA.—Mr. Josiah Dillon, of the Friends' Mission, Jamaica, writing as to the spiritual needs of this island, says:—"One might suppose that being under English rule and influence so long, and lying so near America, the people of Jamaica would all be Christianised and educated. Whether it is so let the facts show. Of the six hundred thousand inhabitants about four hundred and fifty thousand have no church connection whatever. The belief in and practice of Obyism, a kind of witchcraft, is common among the people, both professors and non-professors. Wakes and drunkenness are common at funerals. The old and sick are often furnished with nothing better than a board to lie on, with a few old rags for a pillow. The parents of thousands of families are not married, and more than sixty per cent. of the births on the island are illegitimate. More than eleven hundred rum shops disgrace the island with their blighting and wicked influences. The degraded condition of the people may be judged by the drudgery imposed upon the women. There is no kind of toil here that she is exempt from. Public horse-racing is common, in which the Governor and other officials take part as spectators, and in making up the 'purse.'"

GERMANY.—In the little province of Waldeck the necessary authorisation for contracting marriage will be refused to all habitual drunkards, until they can furnish conclusive proof that they are reformed.—Le Messager.

BASSES PYRENEES.—During the winter season the large towns of this part of France are the health resort of many of our countrymen. Having recently returned, after a twelve months' sojourn there, I can speak of their spiritual needs. I would particularly plead on behalf of the native populations, who are so ignorant, priest-ridden, and superstitious. A good work can and may be done by tract distribution in Bearnais or French. I can testify to having only met with one or two cases of positive refusal to accept when courteously offered; whereas I have had men and women run after me, begging for a tract similar to the one I had given someone else. A Constant Reader.

ZURICH.—For some time past an evangelist from Crischona has presided over a meeting held in a private house at Schöfflisdorf, many persons in that locality not finding the sermons of the rationalistic parish pastor edifying. On Sunday, December 11, the evangelist on his way to the village was attacked and maltreated by several men who did not approve that their fellow-citizens should thus meet, and for that day the meeting could not be held. The head of the Crischona Institution politely informed the mayor and the pastor what had happened, but to no avail. The following Sunday the evangelist was again stopped by about twenty men, and forcibly taken to the nearest railway station. This in free Switzerland!—Volksbote.

HOME.

Mr. Coad has concluded a successful temperance mission at Crossley Hall, Openshaw, Manchester.

Arrangements have been made for monthly temperance services in some of the principal churches in Glasgow.

The annual meeting of the Sunday Closing Association was held recently in Manchester, and was largely attended.

A drinking fountain in memory of ex-Bailie Torrens, Glasgow, a zealous temperance reformer, has just been erected in that city.

The Band of Hope connected with the Tabernacle, Nottingham, of which Rev. H. E. Stone is pastor, numbers nearly five hundred members.

At Canterbury, a temperance union for the city is proposed. The object is the employment of a solicitor to represent temperance interests in the law courts.

The annual meeting of the Temperance Society, St. George's Market, Southwark, was held on Wednesday, January 25, when Rev. G. W. M'Cree presided. The hall was crowded; and a very satisfactory report was presented by Mr. Garner. Since the formation of this Society 3000 pledges have been taken.

A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette writes that on the occasion of a recent social party at his house, his wife arranged with a coffee-stall keeper to locate himself close by. Hot coffee, &c., and currant cake were supplied free to the coachmen, &c., very much to their satisfaction. They said it was better than the public-house.

FOREIGN.

The Echo says the drink bill of America in1887 was the largest it has ever had.

The Swiss Blue Cross Temperance Society report over five thousand members.

Mr. Francis Murphy is engaged in a temperance revival at Pittsburg, U.S.

About five-sixths of the counties in Dakota recently decided in favour of Prohibition.

Mr. Aitcheson, of Natal, finds his mission work amongst the Kafirs hindered by beer drinking.

In the Department of the Seine, during the present century, the population has only doubled, while lunatics, owing to spirit drinking, have increased tenfold.

Rev. J. H. Bateson, Burmah, reports successful temperance meetings, held at Yeu. Some officers offered to sign the pledge if a certain number of the men would do so also. The number was obtained.

SOUL WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for February 10 (Joel ii. 21):—"Fear not, O, land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things."

MATLOCK.—On Monday and Tuesday evenings, last week, Mr. J. B. Wookey addressed meetings of men only on "Personal and Public Morality." No meetings of this kind, so far as we can learn, have been held there before. Special interest was therefore created, and there was a good attendance, especially at the second meeting. Mr. Wookey's denunciation of the laws for the regulation of vice, still enforced in many parts of the British Empire, met with hearty sympathy; his exposition, and enforcement by argument and fact, of the eternal principles of right and wrong, his warnings of danger, his earnest exhortation to purity of life and of speech, reached the hearts of all his hearers, and touched the consciences of not a few. At the close of each meeting, a resolution embodying a pledge of personal purity and a protest against immoral laws was carried unanimously.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 5.—EZEKIEL XLI.

1.—Afterward he brought me to the temple.—"Properly the holy place, as distinguished from the porch and the Holy of Holies. This latter (4) exactly corresponds in measurement with that in Solomon's temple (1 Kings vi. 20)"—S.C.

13.—So he measured the house.—These measurements must have been of intense interest to Israel in their captivity, as holding out a definite hope of a restored Temple; and there is reason to think they were followed so far as circumstances permitted in Zerubbabel's Temple.

18.—Cherubims and palm trees.—"These were found also in the Temple of Solomon (1 Kings vi. 29) and probably denote all creation animate and inanimate. Of the four faces of the cherub only two could appear here as these are not statues but figures depicted on a plain surface."—Hengstenberg.

22.—The altar of wood... This is the table that is before the Lord.—"The altar of incense. It is called the altar of wood in contrast to the brazen altar described further on. The golden plating (1 Kings vi. 20) is not mentioned here, as a deep silence is generally observed in Ezekiel concerning gold which was so plentiful in Solomon's temple."—Ibid. Some think that this altar "was intended to combine the old table of shewbread and the altar of incense." So Newberry, "The altar and table are combined; worship and communion are united."

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6.—EZEKIEL XLII.

1.—The utter court.—"Utter" means outer.

13.—They be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the Lord shall eat the most holy things.—"The most holy things were that portion of the meat offering not burned upon the altar (Lev. ii. 3—10, vi. 9—11, x. 12), and the flesh of all the sin and trespass offerings, except those burned outside the camp (Lev. vi. 19—23, vii. 6)."—Keil.

14.—There they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy.—The holy chambers were not only to be places where the holy food was to be eaten, but where the holy garments were to be changed, so that they might leave the holy garments in a holy place, and go outside in their ordinary dress.

20.—To make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.—"This broad separation is peculiar to Ezekiel's Temple, and serves, like many other arrangements in the new sanctuary and worship, to symbolise the inviolable holiness of the sanctuary. The early sanctuary had nothing answering to this. In the sanctuary of the future a safeguard was to be placed by this surrounding space, which separated the holy from the common. Moriah supplied no room for this space of 500 reeds square; but the new Temple was not to be built upon Moriah, but upon a very high mountain which the Lord would exalt and make ready for the purpose."—Keil.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 7.—EZEKIEL XLIII.

This is the counterpart to chap. xi. There, "Jehovah had left the house to destruction, because it had been polluted and profaned. He now returns to take possession of his holy habitation, prepared and sanctified for his reception."—S.C.

4.—The glory of the Lord came into the house.—This tells strongly against the view held by some, that Zerubbabel's Temple is represented, for the absence of the Shekinah, or Divine glory, was a well-known feature of the second Temple.

8.—In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds.—This seems an allusion to the spiritual teaching of that distinctive feature of Ezekiel's Temple just noticed (xlii. 20), the great space between the Temple and the outside world. See Ezek. xix. 12; Josh. iii. 4; Isa. lv. 8, 9.

10.—Shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities.—This is followed, in ver. 11, by "And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them," &c. One way of explaining these closing chapters of Ezekiel, which treats the whole as a "lapsed promise," rests mainly on this passage. The late Duke of Manchester has well stated it thus: "The day upon which Ezekiel had the vision (xl. 1) was the Day of Atonement, which ushered in the year of Jubilee (S.C. thinks this "highly probable"); the day upon which there was a universal national profession of repentance. Had the nation then truly turned to the Lord, that glorious state of things there shown to the prophet in vision would have been established, and the Lord would have dwelt in the midst of them for ever; but they did not take advantage of the proffered mercy, therefore the promise lapsed."—The Finished Mystery. But, though the promise lapsed then, may not Israel's future repentance bring about a future fulfilment?

12.—This is the law of the house.—"Both by its situation upon a very high mountain, and also by the fact that not merely the inner sanctuary, not merely the whole of the Temple house, but also the whole of its surroundings (all its courts) are "most holy," the new sanctuary is distinguished from the earlier one."—Keil.

20.—Thou shalt take of the blood.—"The command is given to Ezekiel, as a prophet upon whom (as is frequently the case in prophetic narratives) things are said to be enjoined which are set in operation through his proclamation."

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8.—EZEKIEL XLIV.

3.—It is for the prince.—Not the high priest, as many supposed, but the David who will be Prince of Israel at that time."—Keil. Who this prince may be in the final fulfilment of the prophecy it is very difficult to say. Some things would seem to point to Christ Himself. Others as distinctly exclude the thought (xlvi. 4—16). Some "viceroy," or human representative of Christ, would seem to be most probable. Such, if really appointed by Christ, would not be, what he who now claims such a position must be, Antichrist.

9.—No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, &c.—Hitherto "circumcision, which is outward in the flesh," had sufficed to admit the strangers to the privileges of Israel. This is a new departure, and, in its spiritual significance, a most important one.

15.—The sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary.—A most difficult passage to comprehend in its bearing on the future. Only in resurrection would it seem possible for those who acted, as thus described, in times past, to be on the earth during the Millennium. Possibly, a priesthood may be "raised up" for service in the Millennial Temple in every sense of the word. The word "Zadok," meaning righteous, may, in this connection, be significant. The change of garments alluded to in ver. 19 has by some been thought to refer to such a change of "form" (Mark xvi. 12), as our Lord has shown to be possible in a resurrection state.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9.—EZEKIEL XLV.

"A definite tract of land (called the 'holy oblation') is to be set apart for the Lord, his sanctuary, his servants, and for the city (1—8). On both sides of this domain the prince is to receive a possession in land to guard against all exaction. Everywhere unrighteousness is to cease (9—12), and the people are to pay certain heave offerings to provide for the sacrifices binding upon the prince (13—17). Then to the end of the chapter, and on to xlvi. 15, follow instructions concerning the festal and daily sacrifices."—Keil.

1.—The length of five and twenty thousand (reeds).—"The numbers only are given, but A.V. rightly supplies 'reeds,' since we know from xlii. 20 that the precincts were five hundred reeds square."—S.C. Some have thought that "of this measure shalt thou measure" (ver. 3), following the mention of "cubits" in ver. 2, points to that measure being the one intended, which would reduce the scale of the measure to an eighth of the larger, the reed being 12 feet, and the cubit 18 inches. Jerome, however, and almost all commentators (including the Jewish one Raschi) confirm the view that the larger measure is the correct one. This brings us face to face with the difficulty arising from the enormous size of the holy oblation, which Lightfoot has expressed thus, "Ezekiel's Temple is delineated larger than all the earthly Jerusalem, and his Jerusalem (or rather this holy oblation) larger than all the land of Canaan. But to meet this difficulty we have, in Zech. xiv. 4, 10, clear intimation of physical changes which may alter the whole surface of the land, and upset all calculations based upon its present state.

15.—To make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord.—This is the well-known expression used in Leviticus for propitiatory sacrifice. It is repeated (ver. 17 and 20), and seems to preclude the idea that these sacrifices as here described are commemorative only. The new covenant, however, may modify all this hereafter.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10.—EZEKIEL XLVI.

1.—On the Sabbath...and in the day of the new moon.—St. Paul's words (Col. ii. 16) about the new moon and the Sabbath days being "a shadow of things to come" here present a difficulty. If the things prefigured have come, why should the shadow be kept up? It must, however, be remembered that the Apostle is writing to "saints in Christ Jesus" who have "died with Christ from the rudiments of the world," (20), and are "risen with Him" (iii. 1), and who ought not, "as though living in the world," to be "subject to ordinances." Ezekiel, on the other hand, contemplates Israel as an earthly people still in the flesh, and though converted and restored, by no means possessing either the privileges or the standing of the Church of God of this dispensation. The portion of the Bride, the Lamb's wife, who is to reign with Christ, is not to be confounded with that of Israel who are to be subjects, though highly privileged subjects, in the kingdom.

13.—Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt offering.—This daily burnt offering differs from that of the Levitical law in that it is only to be offered in the morning, not morning and evening (Exod. xxix. 39). The meat offering, too, is larger.

16.—If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons.—The spiritual teaching of these two verses, marking the distinction between servants and sons, agrees with John viii. 35 and Gal. iv. 7, and illustrates how sons retain the inheritance which mere servants forfeit. "The prince" here, however, would seem not to be Christ, but his representative.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11.—EZEKIEL XLVII.

1.—Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward.—However typical these waters may be of salvation, there is no reason to deny their being literal and as such one of the physical wonders of the latter day. See Zech. xiv. 8, when they are again spoken of.

5.—Waters to swim in.—This was at four thousand cubits from the source, or more than a mile. Beware of such a spiritualising interpretation as the following, "When under Constantine the Roman Empire had become Christian, the Church may be contemplated as the full river."—S.C. A muddy stream indeed!

8.—Which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed.—The waters of the Dead Sea seem here to be meant. "The Rabbinical interpretation takes the healing to be the turning salt water into fresh" (2 Kings ii. 21).

14.—One as well as another.—"Tribes, not individuals. Each tribe is to have an equal breadth of land assigned to it."—S.C.

18.—From the border unto the East Sea.—This is generally supposed to mean the Dead Sea, "but 'the oblation,' measured according to xlv. 1, extends to a considerable distance beyond the Jordan." Some, therefore, have supposed that by the "East Sea" is meant the far-off Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean, and that the portions of the tribes are to extend across the whole of Arabia, from the Mediterranean to the Indian Ocean. This would afford a much larger sphere for the fulfilment of this grand prophecy and possibly such passages as Isa. xxxv. 1, viewed in the light of this chapter, point to a literal change of the Arabian desert into a "fruitful field."

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, February 12.

Jesus and the Little Ones.

Matt. xviii. 1—14. Golden Text: Matt. xix. 14.

EXPLANATIONS AND SUGGESTIONS.

Ver. 1. Who is the greatest?—From Mark ix. 33 and Luke ix. 46 we learn that the question had been hotly discussed by the Twelve. While Jesus thinks of his suffering and death, they are full of the honours to be gained in the coming kingdom. They, like many of us, think more of their deserts and rewards than of the rights of others, especially of Christ. "It is always the least that asks, 'Who is the greatest?'"

Ver. 2. And Jesus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst.—Mark adds the charming touch, "And when He had taken him in his arms, He said," &c. The teacher might ask, "Was the child frightened?" "No!" "How do we know?" "If he had shown distress and fear, he would have been a bad text for the discourse that followed." "Was there anything there to terrify a young child?" "Yes, much; taken suddenly, as he was, into the midst of a group of rugged, stranger-men, the very men who soon after this forbad the mothers from bringing young children to Jesus." "Why, then, was he trustful and happy?" "Because of the warm welcome, the gentle kindness, and loving grace with which Jesus received him. He made it so easy for a little child to be at home with Him. He is just the same to-day."

Ver. 10. Their angels do alway behold the face of my Father, &c.—"Among men, those who nurse and rear the royal children, however humble, are allowed free entrance with their charge, and a degree of familiarity which even the highest State ministers dare not assume. Probably our Lord means that, in virtue of their charge over his disciples (Heb. i. 13; John i. 51), the angels have errands to the throne, a welcome there, and a dear familiarity...which on their own matters they could not assume."—Dr. David Brown.

LESSONS.

Childlikeness essential to entrance into the kingdom, and also to advancement therein.—Note the strength of the statement, "Verily, I say...except...ye shall not enter." Compare this with the first and third Beatitude: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." See also Matt. xi. 28—30, "I am meek and lowly in heart." "God resisteth the proud; but giveth grace unto the humble."

But what is involved in childlikeness?—(1) Openness of soul—readiness to receive God's word—gifts—love—i.e., trustfulness; (2) Simplicity, no secrets with God; (3) Happy sense of dependence—the child content to know the Father cares; (4) Readiness to submit to rightful authority, i.e., obedience; (5) Joy in Father's approval; (6) More concern for the Father's honour than its own. These and more are all involved in the humility and simplicity of a little child. Augustine being asked, "What is the first article in the Christian religion?" said, "Humility." "And the second?" "Humility." "And the third?" "Humility."

Our duty towards Christ's little ones.—Little ones—the childlike, whether young or old. (1) We must receive them for Christ's sake, as if we were receiving Him (ver. 5). Teachers should labour to make this point very simple, and real, and practical—that Jesus Himself can be actually served, helped, loved in the person of his lowly followers. Show who these are, classmates, perhaps, or poor folk, or old, whom most despise; the sick, their parents, perhaps, or relatives, and some rich people. Teach respect for Christ's character wherever found. The privilege of serving Jesus Christ personally is immensely attractive to generous souls—and children are generally generous.

We should fear above all things the terrible sin of causing any of Christ's people to stumble.—Rather than do that, said Jesus (ver. 6), 'twere better to die a sudden and violent death. Show children that the very worst injury we can do to anyone is to cause him to sin—to weaken his love to God. Show, too, how easily this may be done. A schoolmate, or brother, or sister, begins to think of eternal things, to pray, to seek God. Companions, annoyed, try to make him forget serious thoughts, persuade, persecute, mock—all to cause him to stumble in his seeking after Jesus. Or, we may commit this great offence, without intention, simply by being wrong ourselves and setting a bad example. This is especially the case, if we are professing to follow Jesus ourselves. Thus a bad example set by us may do endless harm.

We must guard, at any cost, against anything which is likely to cause us to stumble.—This is the meaning of vers. 8 and 9. In them He speaks not of things dangerous to others, but of things which may bring us into peril. "Probably the offending eye stands for some greed or lust; the hand for some power or ability, the possession of which prompts to evil; the foot, the going member, some habit or tendency that has danger in it. No one of these is easily got rid of. We must cut them off. As they cannot be destroyed except by sternest self-denial, they cannot be cherished without great penalty." The teacher should study this point with great care, so as to be able to mention the very things—most of them innocent in themselves, perhaps—which imperil their children's souls, e.g., companions, story-books, amusements, habits. Equal care should be taken not to forbid innocent enjoyment. Make the reason of the restriction very clear, otherwise tender consciences will be enslaved. E.g., stories that are means of grace to one may be a real temptation to others. The great thing is to seek first the kingdom of God.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

A prominent member of the Society of Friends, well known to the writer of these notes, used to tell how much she learnt from her children. For instance, on one occasion, when they were expecting a number of Friends to attend a quarterly meeting of their Society, she said to her son, "William, thee must mind and be a good boy, for Friend So-and-so and So-and-so will be there." "Why, mother," said the boy, "I thought I ought to be good because God sees me!" The mother never forgot this artless rebuke; while the boy—this true child—grew up to live a singularly pure and useful life. It is now many years since he died, yet his memory is still cherished very tenderly by a large circle.

Some thirty years ago a Scotch student was teaching, during the long summer vacation, in a school. He was diligent and faithful, and, as the head of the school, a secret drinker, neglected his work, the burden fell on the assistant. Yet he treated that assistant with the greatest injustice, till at last the latter said to himself: "I'll stand this no longer. I got nothing but blame, and yet I do all the work. I'll go, and then he'll know the difference." Then, after reflection, he said: "No! I'll not go! I'll stay and do my work just as though I saw the Lord Jesus Christ looking on, and I'll not mind the man." "Well," he said, as he told the writer this bit of his history, some years since, "I did stay to the end of the term; he was just as unjust as ever, but I didn't feel it as before. I just went quietly on trying to please Jesus Christ." God has greatly blessed this child-like man. He is now enjoying the highest honours that both his university and the religious body to which he belongs can bestow. His name is revered far and wide.

MRS. REANEY, Cavendish House, Victoria Park, Manchester, requests us to state, for the benefit of her many correspondents, that she has given notice to the postal authorities in Manchester not to deliver letters addressed to her residence arriving on Sunday mornings.

A CALL FROM BOMBAY.

LADY WORKERS WANTED.

There is a great and pressing need in Bombay of lady workers among the poorer European and Eurasian classes, as well as among those who are living more or less abandoned or questionable lives. The Church Missionary Society's English church and congregation afford an admirable centre in connection with which such work may be carried on. Rev. H. C. Squires, the Society's secretary for Western India, who is also incumbent of the English church, would most thankfully welcome volunteers for such work. He has long been hoping that Mildmay might send out a small band of two or three experienced workers to initiate and carry on systematic Christian labour of this kind.

Those who know the circumstances of Christian work in India will understand how absolutely non-existent in many places that kind of work is which is denominated "district visiting." Missionaries cannot, of course, be withdrawn from their special spheres of labour to undertake duties of this kind; and it has been found practically impossible to secure from the ordinary English residents in a city like Bombay volunteers to visit among the poor and the outcast. The consequence is, that those many Christian ministries which can be performed by women only, remain altogether neglected and undone. There are all the ordinary calls for women's work in Bombay that we find in English towns and cities: the poor, and ignorant, and sick to be visited and comforted; the young to be counselled and influenced; the fallen to be reclaimed; Bible-classes and Sunday-schools to be organised and carried on.

It is a noble and interesting field that calls for labourers. Are there not some able to live at their own charges who will hear their Master's call to work in Bombay? At least one lady is needed of experience and powers of organisation, not of advanced age but of mature experience, and bodily vigour; and one or two associates, who might be young, if they have had training and are of earnest, spiritual character. One should have been trained as a nurse. Three ladies (who have not less private income than three or four hundred pounds a year between them) might be able to live together simply and yet with such comfort as health and the circumstances of the climate require, and be able to meet all expenses. Even with less means at their disposal those who feel this appeal is a call to them, need not hesitate to volunteer, as doubtless arrangements could be made for providing house accommodation. The cost of outfit, passage, &c., need not exceed seventy or eighty pounds each, and it is not necessary that one should delay going if other fellow workers are not immediately forthcoming.

Such a sphere of labour offers this important consideration, that the workers can at once on their arrival enter upon their work, without that long period of study and preparation which is usually a part of the missionary life. It is most earnestly hoped that some Christian sisters in England may be led to consecrate themselves to this particular work, and help to roll away the reproach that, while the extreme High Church party has many "Sisters" engaged in religious and philanthropic work in Bombay, the Evangelical party has so few engaged in women's work of this kind. In fact, till Miss Helen Richardson and Miss Walker, went recently to Bombay, to carry on rescue work there, there was not one such representative of the Church Missionary Society in this part of India.

All correspondence on this matter, should be addressed to Rev. R. A. Squires, 66, Pembroke-road, Clifton.

THE COTTAGE HOME, KINGSTOWN.—Miss Barrett, hon. secretary of this Institution, writes, with reference to the recent notice of the work in our columns, that the annual expenditure for each child is not £20, as stated, but only £14. The smallness of this sum is accounted for by the fact that all money subscribed goes direct to the support of the children, there being no official expenses whatever.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. F. S. Webster has resigned his position as principal of the Church Army Training Home.

Dr. Earle, the newly-appointed suffragan Bishop of London, will take the title of Bishop of Marlborough, and not Bishop of Guildford, as previously stated.

The Bishop of Liverpool has been lamenting the large number of small clerical incomes in his diocese, caused by a decline in royalties, rents, and the difficulty in collecting tithes. It has become a serious question, says Dr. Ryle, with the promoters of new churches, how the clergymen are to be paid.

The Archbishop of York has been boldly criticising some recent observations of one of Her Majesty's judges with reference to the Criminal Law Amendment Act. That Act, he said, would never be repealed, and he did not envy the men who would make a proposition to remove it from the Statute Book.

A special mission will be commenced in Birmingham on Sunday next. Services will be held simultaneously in forty churches, over thirty-five clergymen taking part. Amongst those announced to preach we notice the names of Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Rev. J. H. Haslam, Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, Rev. John E. Linnell, and others.

The Church Missionary Intelligencer for February forcibly pleads for more University men for the mission field, especially clergymen of two or three years' experience of ministerial work. Dr. H. P. Parker, Bishop Hannington's successor, writes most earnestly for more labourers for Eastern Equatorial Africa, which is a grand field for vigorous and whole-hearted men, who can endure hardness, and win the degraded African tribes by patient love.

Rev. Thomas Barclay, English Presbyterian missionary in Formosa, seems not to be satisfied with devoting his life as a missionary to the Formosans, and has sent a donation of £125 to the treasurer of the committee under whose direction he works.

The introduction of the hymnal into Finnieston Free Church, Glasgow, of which Dr. Andrew A. Bonar is pastor, is said to have resulted in the retirement of some of the members and office-bearers, who disapprove of the "human inspired" hymns.

A recent mail from China brings intelligence of the opening of commodious hospital buildings at Moukden, the capital of Manchuria, in connection with the United Presbyterian Mission, part being fitted up as an opium refuge. Many of the leading mandarins of the city took part in the ceremony.

A series of evangelistic services are to be held in the first week of February, when Mr. Nelson will be assisted by Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, and other ministerial brethren.

Intelligence from China shows that the Presbyterian Chapel at E-mung-Kang, a suburb of Amoy, had a narrow escape from destruction through the terrible explosion of a gunpowder magazine there on November 12 last. The chapel had its doors and windows driven in and its roof damaged. Nearly all the houses between it and the sea were burned, but as the wind blew the flames towards the harbour the chapel escaped.

Rev. James Wells, of the Free Church, Pollokshields, speaking at Trinity United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow, recently, on the subject of Christian union, said:—"Could we all disentangle this great question of Christian union from merely political questions, one distressing reproach might soon be rolled away from Scottish Christianity. This is a reproach for which the United Presbyterian Church is not responsible. We must cherish the hope of a wider union, but it seems that the day for that has not yet come."

BAPTIST.

During the past few months there has been an encouraging awakening amongst the children in the Sunday-school at Vernon-square, Kings' Cross, with the result that a large number of scholars have been led to accept Christ as their Saviour. A Christian band has been inaugurated, and numbers 120 members.

On Tuesday a meeting was held in Trinity Chapel, John-street, Edgware-road, in connection with the retirement of Rev. J. O. Fellowes from the pastorate, after two-and-twenty years' happy and successful labours. Mr. Joseph Peters, who presided, delivered a very sympathetic address, in which he expressed his thankfulness to God for the way in which Mr. Fellowes, for so long a period in that chapel, had preached the truth as it is in Jesus. Mr. Fellowes was presented with a cheque for £100.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, speaking at the Memorial Hall on Tuesday week, said Mr. Spurgeon had said that Congregationalists were more tainted with heterodoxy than many others. Mr. Rogers contended that there was no foundation whatever to justify these sweeping accusations.

Speaking at a meeting in Liverpool on Tuesday, last week, Rev. C. A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, said:—"Men are not to be lifted into the kingdom of God by the Artisans' Dwelling Act, or technical schools, or jubilee-parks. The man must be got at, or he will find new and wide scope for the evil that is in him. A new spirit must be created. Men must be born again, and can never be uplifted by culture without piety, or civilisation without Christ."

By invitation of Rev. S. Pearson, of Great George-street Chapel, Liverpool, some fifty or sixty ministers, representing various denominations, met together at the Liverpool Reform Club on Tuesday, last week, in connection with the annual meetings of the Liverpool District of the Lancashire Congregational Union, to discuss the question, "How Best to increase the Efficiency of our Ministry." John Elliott, he said, was the first missionary to the Indians, who were a very blood-thirsty people; but by his self-denying labours in the cause of his Master he was enabled to do a great deal of good.

INDUSTRIAL INEBRIATE FARM.—In answer to various correspondents, we would state that the "J. B. Gough Memorial Farm for Inebriates" is at Crowborough, Kent. Communications should be addressed to Lieut.-Col. Whale.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.—On Monday evening the quarterly social gathering of the members and friends was held at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street. The company, which numbered about two hundred, having partaken of tea, Mr. T. A. Denny, chairman, alluding to the absence of the secretary through illness, referred in eulogistic terms to the untiring devotion and exertions of Mr. Kirkham throughout the many years of his secretaryship. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor delivered a special address, entitled, "How to face difficulties." Having read the 140th Psalm, he observed that nothing brought them nearer to the presence of God than difficulties No one could expect to go through this world without encountering trials and difficulties; but what they had to do when beset by them was to consider that it was the will of God. God put difficulties in our way in order that we might have the supreme pleasure of asking Him, who could do all things, to put them away from us. Difficulties did not grow in men's lives as weeds grew in the field; they were sent by God, and should be considered in such a light. There was no royal way of knowing the will of God; but he felt satisfied that any person who walked with God, who studied his Word, who trusted in Christ, and made Christ's will his law, would know the voice of God when He spoke, and would have no difficulty about following the true Shepherd.

WESTWARD HO!

200 Trained Lads (the First Party this year) will (D.V.) leave our various "Homes" for Canada on March 23. Of this number about 50 will be bound for our New Industrial Farm, Manitoba, the remainder for Ontario.

If only the needful Funds are forthcoming, at least 600 carefully trained youngsters will (D.V.) be placed out in the Dominion this year.

But the question of want of Funds is more serious this year than formerly, for we are very much poorer now, and dare not arrange for the departure of one boy or girl unless the whole sum needed is received or promised beforehand.

£8 10s. will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Boy to Ontario.

£51 will do the same for Six Boys; £102 for Twelve boys; £170 for Twenty Boys.

To send Youths (of 16 to 21 years of age) to Manitoba is more expensive, a railway journey of 2,000 miles further West having to be paid for; but the greater advantages of placing the big fellows from our Labour House there, rather than in Ontario, are well worth paying the higher rate to secure.

£11 will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Youth to Manitoba.

£66 will do the same for six Lads; £132 for twelve Lads; or £220 for twenty Lads.

Probably it lies in the power of many who will read this page to help me to divert the current of these young lives into healthful channels, and at the same time to relieve our overcrowded English Cities, by sending gifts in aid of our Emigration Fund.

Readers of The Christian do not now need to be assured that this is really God's work, or that the whole is being carried on, on strictly Christian lines; but I am sure they will rejoice to know that many of the dear fellows now on our list of Candidates for Emigration have been brought to a knowledge of the Truth, while under my care, and appear to be sincere followers of Christ. They will doubtless carry the Gospel with them to the New Country of their adoption, as very many of their predecessors have done.

Who then, by promising one or other of the above amounts, will strengthen my hands yet more to do God's work, and at the same time help to give a real start in life to some of these young fellows who have been rescued from utter destitution and evil surroundings, and carefully tested and trained for years or months past in our "Homes?"

Contributions to our Emigration Fund will be gratefully received and acknowledged by

Your faithful Fellow-labourer among the Waifs and Strays of the Streets,

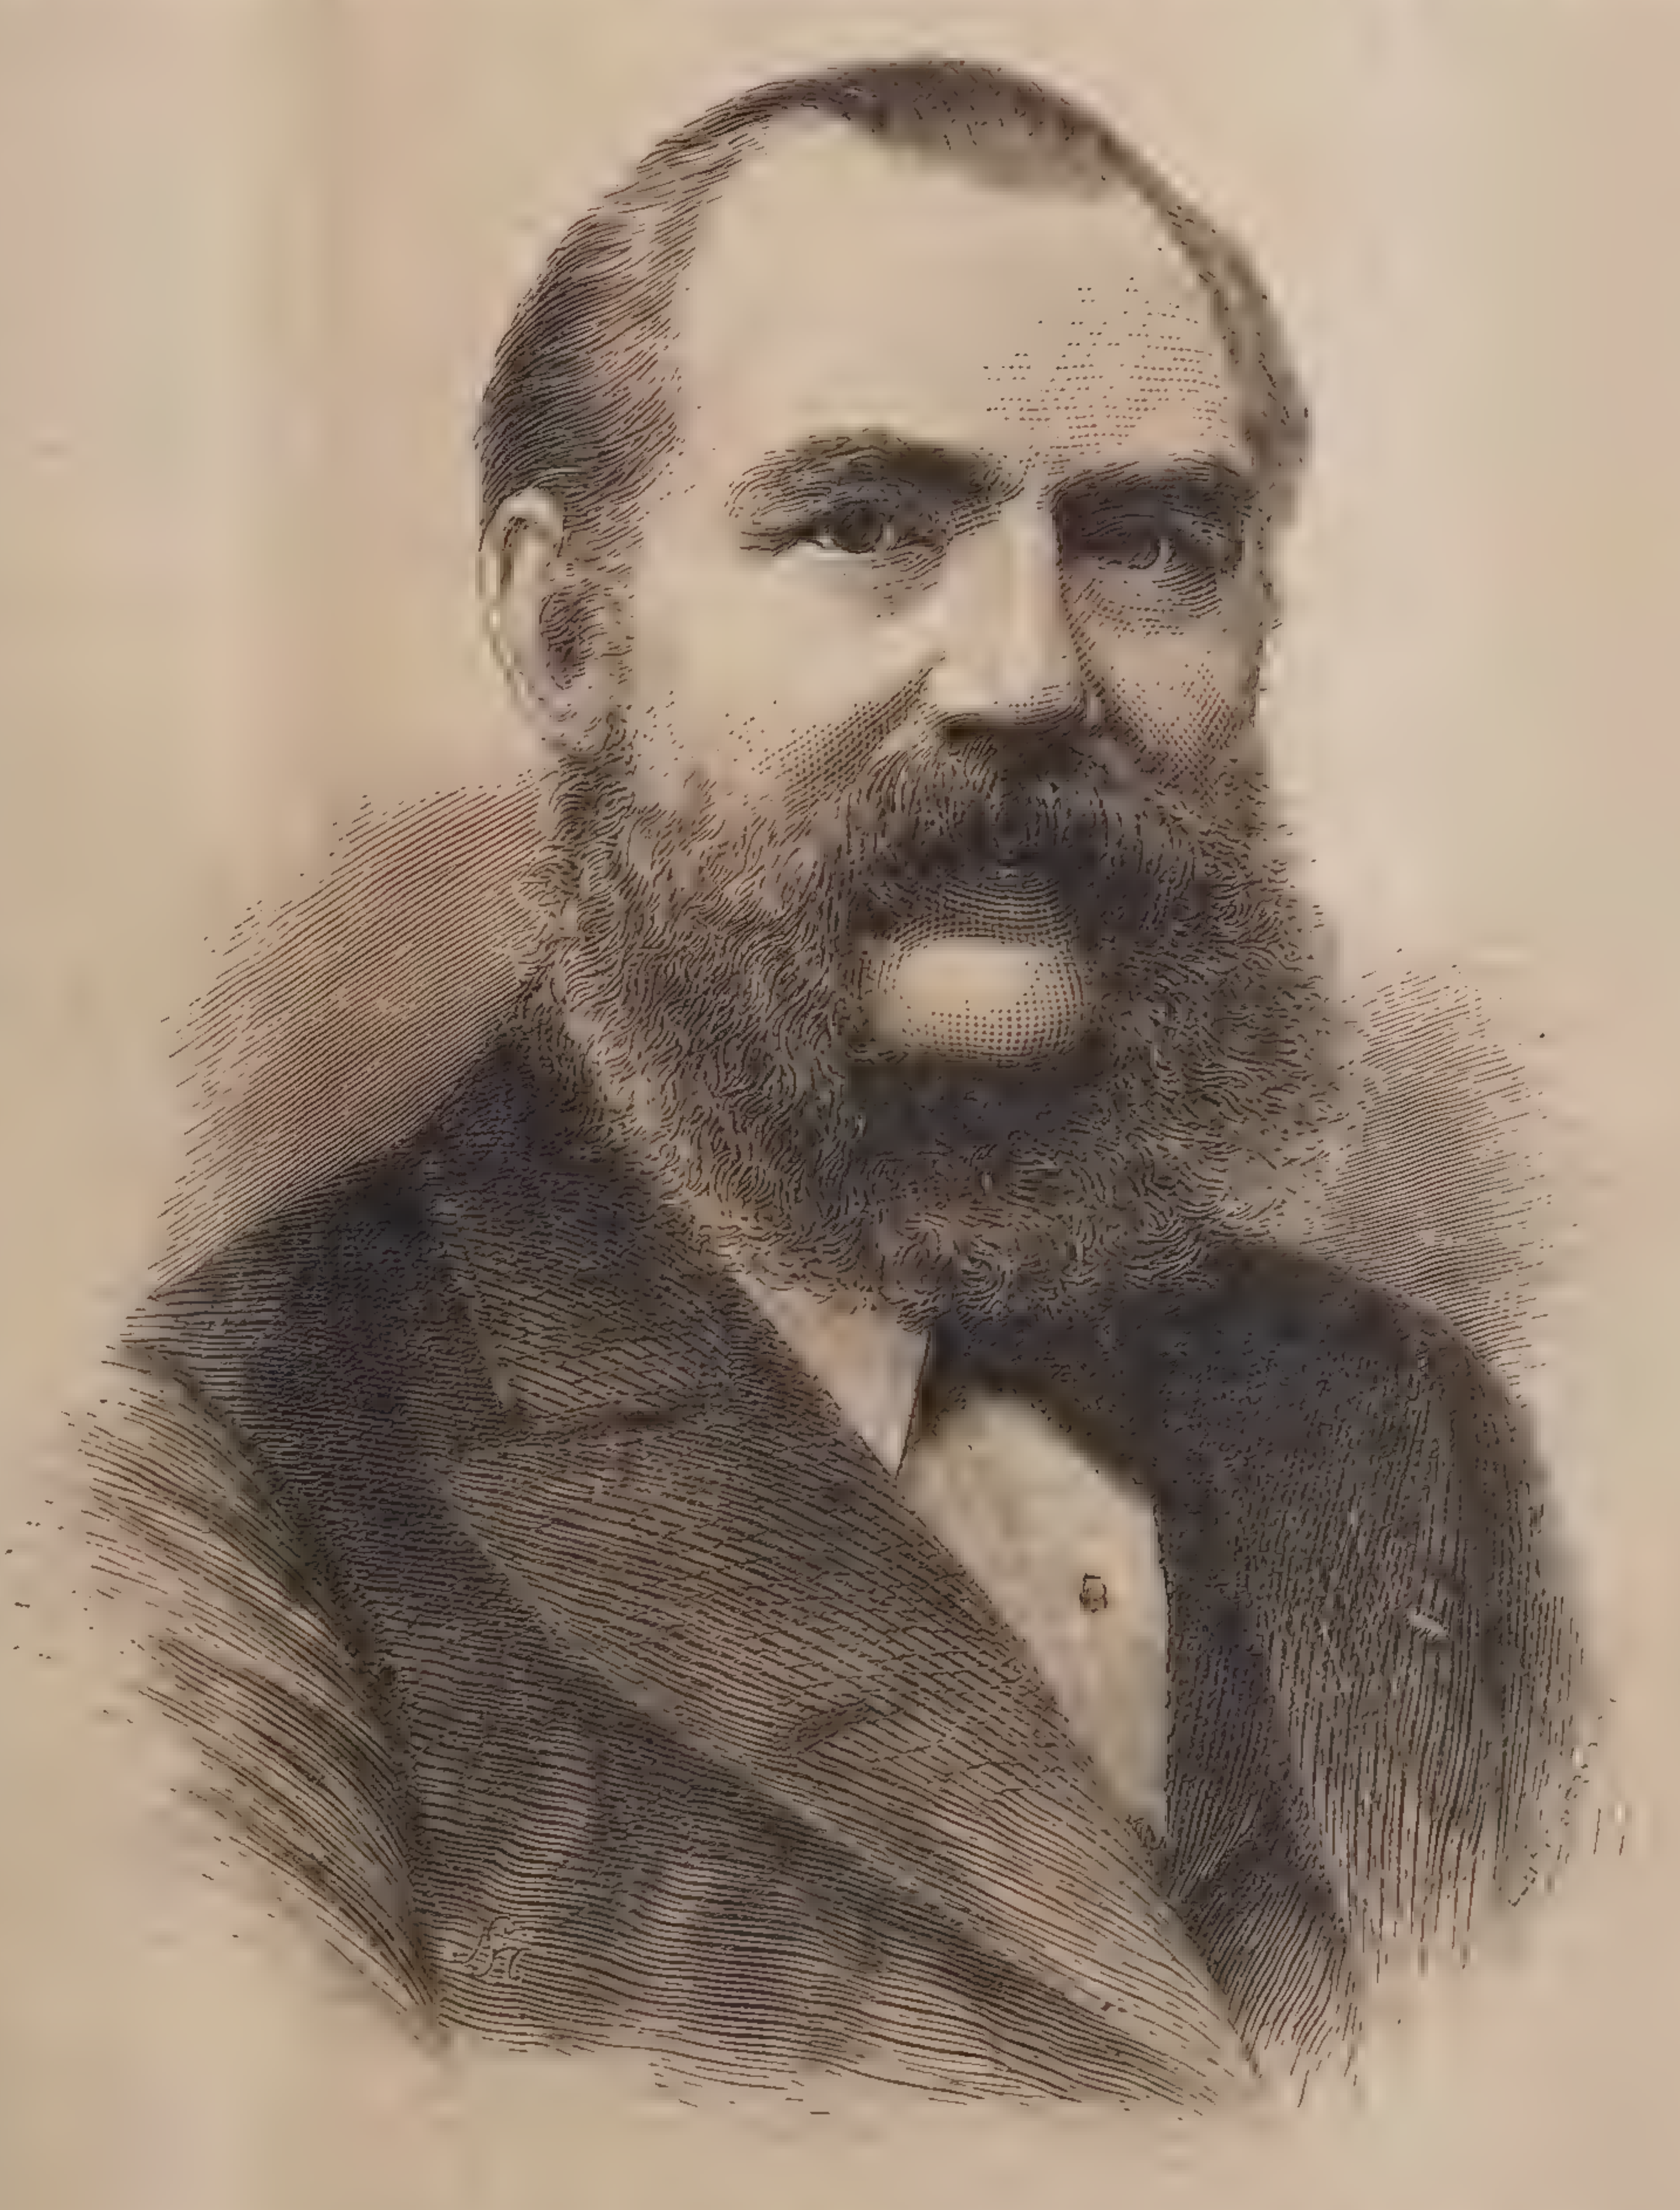
REV. WILLIAM STOTT,

President of the London Baptist Association.

NOT many workers in the Lord's vineyard are permitted to see so much fruit of earnest labour as the subject of this sketch has been privileged to witness. During a period of over twenty-five years Mr. Stott has been pastor of a Baptist Church in London, and a few days ago he entered on office as President, for the coming year, of the London Baptist Association.



A Yorkshireman by birth, WILLIAM STOTT served his apprenticeship as a mechanic, and showed that competence in his calling which gave promise of a successful business career. While still young he became a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, and exerted himself in furtherance of the cause of religion; in due course it was made clear to him that God had a special work for him to do, and as soon as the call was recognised it was lovingly obeyed.

It was in the year 1862 that Mr. Stott first entered London. The city was at that time full of people of all nations, brought together by the second great International Exhibition. All the week long business and pleasure absorbed the attention of the multitudes. Shops were opened on Sundays as on other days, and men, women, and children seemed indifferent to the observance of a seventh day of rest, oblivious of any religious demands upon their hearts and minds. The young man newly come from the country was filled with sorrow at the sight; a zeal for the honour of God, and a desire for the good of his fellows, consumed him. He knew little or nothing of the ways of London, and thought that a kindly word to the busy traffickers would be quickly heeded. Surely he had only to tell the people of their folly, and they would at once alter their conduct! Young Stott's mind was soon disabused of this idea: when he pointed the worldlings to the paths of wisdom and the ways of piety, he was unceremoniously pushed on one side and contemptuously laughed at as a hair-brained enthusiast. With a heart enlarged in view of the prevailing irreligion, Mr. Stott embraced opportunities to preach the Gospel to the crowds which thronged the parks and other public places. He also accepted an invitation to speak at St. John's Wood at a meeting of a branch of the Y.M.C.A. The occasion was rendered memorable, for the word was with power, and many people were reduced to tears of contrition, while some fell on their knees, asking, "What must we do?" That the efforts of a country stripling who had not received a college training should be attended by such spiritual demonstration caused much astonishment, and many asked, as Saul asked Abner concerning David, "Whose son is this youth?"

At that time it did not seem that a ministerial career was appointed for young Mr. Stott. The happy results of his preaching, however, excited the attention of several earnest Christian workers, who were led to request his continued proclamation of the Gospel in their midst. He was waited upon and asked to remain in London and to preach in the Wellington Rooms, the meeting place of the Y.M.C.A. He replied that he could only give a night or two more in the Metropolis, for it was his intention to proceed without delay to America with his friend, Rev. James Caughey. It had long been his ambition to visit the United States and Canada, and it was his hope that, by accompanying Mr. Caughey, a man who had been greatly blessed in the work of winning souls, he himself would "learn more perfectly the holy and sacred science of saving men." The demand of the deputation was made the subject of prayer, and in the result Mr. Stott clearly saw it to be his duty to remain in London. A berth had been secured in an ocean liner, and all arrangements made for the voyage: satisfied, however, as to the path of duty, the young preacher cancelled his engagement of a berth in the steamer, and all the other arrangements were allowed to fall through.

Work was carried on in the Young Men's Rooms, with encouraging success, and in a short time the large Assembly Room at the Eyre Arms was taken for the Sunday night services. Out-door meetings were held at other times on Sundays and week days, and these were also owned of God. Spiritualism was to the front in those days, and Mr. Stott's exposure and denunciation of this delusion attracted many people, some of whom decided to "seek unto the Lord," and to worship Him in spirit and in truth. In the course of time the sheep thus found sought a fold, and after careful and prayerful consideration it was decided to form a church. The new converts were baptized, but the church was formed on the broad evangelical principle of open fellowship. All the while there were religious onlookers who were not friendly to Mr. Stott's vigorous progress, and they prophesied speedy collapse; but in the name of Christ wonders were wrought, to the praise of God's name and glory.

The beginning of the church of which Mr. Stott thus became pastor was on a small scale, and there were many difficulties in the way of progress. At no time, however, was there want of reliance upon the Great Head of the Church; so difficulties were regarded as incitements to increased activity, and one by one obstacles were triumphed over. Even before the church was formed, a committee was appointed to provide a permanent structure in which to carry on public worship. This committee was composed of faithful men, who had, however, to set over against Mr. Stott's cheering counsel very much discouragement from the world and the enemies of God. Throughout this anxious time Mr. Stott held himself as of no personal account. There was great need of a place of worship on evangelical lines in St. John's Wood, and he steadily refused to stand in the way of that need being speedily supplied. Finding that the offerings of the people were not sufficient to meet all the incidental expenses of the rent of the Assembly-room besides giving him three guineas a week by way of stipend, he called the committee together, and said, "Gentlemen, I cannot take your going into debt as an indication that I should remain among you; and only by falling back upon my old plan of trusting God for everything, can I feel comfortable to remain." "Then, what do you propose to do?" asked one present. Mr. Stott replied, "I propose that you let all moneys go into one treasury; pay your way, keep free from debt, and whatever may be left, little or much, I will accept as my portion for labour." "But," rejoined the good brother who had put the first question, "if you rely on that plan for your support, you will go to the wall." "Very well," said Mr. Stott, "let me go to the wall; but of one thing I am certain, the Lord will go with me if I do. I have trusted Him fully, for body and soul, nor has He ever put me to shame, or let me want any good thing." This plan was agreed to, and instead of three guineas a week Mr. Stott received seventeen shillings! With that he was perfectly content, and to his pleasure, though not to his surprise as a man of faith, all his needs were supplied, and some of them in a remarkable way. Confidence in God was his spiritual support then, as it has been ever since—both when he has repeated his insistence upon receiving no stipend which his people could not afford, and when he has administered a large church in times of trouble and in perplexing circumstances.

After many futile attempts to secure a site for a chapel—in those days it was more common than now for landlords to stipulate that not a yard of their land should be sold for the purpose of Dissenting churches—Mr. Stott and his flock obtained ground in Abbey-road, and a beautiful place of worship was erected. Men of influence, Baptists and others, now came forward to help the struggling church, and in a short time a Sunday-school was established, and many agencies organised for carrying on the work of God. In the raising of money the pastor exerted himself greatly, and success crowned his efforts, which were well seconded by his loving people. As years went by, the church sought fully to keep up its early activity, and by the public and private ministrations many were added to the Lord in St. John's Wood. Thorough harmony prevailed between pastor and flock, and one year Mr. Stott was released from duty in order that he might recruit his health and store his mind by travel in Italy, while another year he was presented with a cheque for a hundred guineas to defray the expenses of a tour in America.

The voyage across the Atlantic was made in 1878, and a perilous voyage it was. Liverpool was left on July 2, in the steamship Adriatic, but through someone's mistake the morning tide was lost, and near Queenstown a fog was encountered. What happened there is told in the following words by Mr. Stott himself in his book, "A Ministry of Twenty-one Years in London" (W. Mack):—

> In the fog we came into collision with another large steamer, which was in a disabled state; the grinding sensation was awful and indescribable. A young gentleman from South America said, "A collision, sir; what are you going to do, sir? Go on deck, sir, and see the damage?" "No," was my prompt reply; "if we are going down, it is just as near to heaven from this cosy bed as it is from the deck, and if there is a chance of saving the ship why, our presence on deck will only hinder and bewilder the seamen. So I shall lie still, and give myself to prayer." "So, then, will I; good night!" The engines were soon at work again, and so we were assured that nothing very serious had happened.
> The fog continued, and before night came on, another terrible collision had occurred; this time it was a brigantine, sailing without fog-horns and so making no response to our constant cry. The small ship suddenly emerged from the misty gloom, and before our captain could avert the collision, or reverse the engines even, the ponderous Adriatic cut her clean in two. Then followed a scene never to be forgotten to our latest hour: the hull of the ill-fated vessel was heavy with five hundred tons of cement, and this, going down like a vast stone, caused the upper deck to separate from the body of the broken ship and rise to the surface, and then go all to pieces, so that everywhere, as far as we could see at all, was a mass of wreckage. All the crew had gone down (their very cabin becoming their coffin) excepting one man; he was seen trying to keep afloat by holding on to a water barrel, for he was the only sailor who could not swim, and, he said, the only man who had a family. The captain promptly ordered the boats to be lowered, and for two hours the Adriatic lay-to, in the hope that some other life might be rescued; but the rest, to the number of fifteen, found a watery grave.

On the Sunday following these sad and shocking events, Mr. Stott preached on board the steamer, and the word was greatly blessed. The stay in America was enjoyable and profitable in the highest sense. On returning home, our friend gave himself with renewed energy and enlarged experience to the important work he had in hand, and he has ever since continued plainly to preach the old, old story, from various standpoints, and with simply phenomenal results. On this head he thus writes in his book just mentioned:—

> For our house of God the simple, straight, old-fashioned Gospel has sufficed for half a lifetime, bringing week by week an eager throng, and not by man's wisdom, but by the operation of the Spirit, making the word quick and powerful. More than sixteen hundred souls have been won to Christ, and it has been our honour and joy to baptize, in the name of the Divine Trinity, over fifteen hundred men and women and children, who had believed on the Lord Jesus Christ. What hath God wrought! "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Mr. Stott's career is a story of faithful work honoured by conspicuous success. Ever since 1865 the pastor has had the advice and help of a loving wife, whom he fetched from Gomersal, Yorkshire, his native place.

His methods have never been extreme, nor has his labour been one-sided. The many duties of the Christian minister have ever been fully recognised, and pastor and church have alike been blessed and been made a blessing. There has been no wearying in well-doing. One evidence of this is found in the generosity and activity of the people in matters of finance: during the past twenty-five years this working-class congregation has raised over £40,000 for various religious and philanthropic purposes. May the example presented by the life of William Stott, and the goodwill of his church, be long continued, and may it find abundant imitation, to the glory of God and the good of man!

CIVIL SERVICE PRAYER UNION.

The quarterly meeting, on January 30, of the Edinburgh branch of the Civil Service Prayer Union was an exceptionally interesting one, on account of the presence of Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, the president of the Union. There was a large attendance. Sir William Muir, Principal of the University of Edinburgh, presided, and in a few introductory remarks explained the nature of the Union, and pressed its claims upon the Christian members of the Civil Service.

Sir Arthur Blackwood said there had been held that day, under the auspices of the Union, meetings for prayer in South Australia, in various towns in India, in Lagos (West Africa), and in many places in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and one would be held a few hours later in Canada. The Union had been in existence sixteen years, and had now 1250 members. He then read Isa. xli. 6, 7, and said the lesson here was one of union for mutual encouragement and support. He went on to refer to union under various aspects. The address, which was marked by freshness and power, will be published in extenso in the next Quarterly Paper of the Union.

THE POPE, QUEEN VICTORIA, AND THE PROTESTANT ALLIANCE.—The Executive Committee of the Protestant Alliance has sent a memorial to Lord Salisbury, expressing profound regret at the recent despatch of a special mission to the Vatican on the occasion of the sacerdotal Jubilee of Leo XIII., and calling attention to the well-known political aims of the Papacy. The memorial concludes with the following question and petition:—"Is Great Britain to mix herself up with the policy now avowed by the Papal Court, and to entangle herself in an intrigue that attacks the principle of national government in Italy, and threatens to disturb the peace of Europe? Your memorialists humbly pray that no step may be taken tending in any way to countenance or encourage the avowed aim of the Papacy to establish diplomatic relations with Great Britain."

THE NEED OF THE CHURCH.

WHAT a multitude of varied answers should we get if we sent out a circular to the churches, asking "What is your present pressing need?" "Money," a host would answer, "to free us from debt." And yet Christ's servant said, "Owe no man anything, but love." Others would say, "We want a new organ, or some musical voices for the choir;" others again, "We want brighter and more attractive services," or, "We want a more liberal theology, as the old dark belief will not do for present thinkers." These, and a hundred similar answers might be given; but they would all be wrong. The Church has education enough, surely: look at the long list of academical honours adorning thenames of her preachers. She has money enough, if jewelled chalices, costly windows, and gorgeous appointments are true indications of her condition. She has music enough, if choirs, bands, and professional artists go for anything. She has buildings enough also, if we are to credit recent figures, showing her buildings scarcely half full. What, then, is the want of the Church? It will be found in an Old Testament vision looked at with the New Testament lamp. The Church is languishing, dull, dry, dead, from want of Breath!

Ezekiel saw a valley full of bones, many and dry. He was told to prophesy the bones to their places, and call the sinews and skin to cover them. And it was so. It seems as if the Church was just now in this very position. Pastors, preachers, teachers, bells, bills, and innumerable other means have been used, and multitudes of the people are in their places. But the majority are dead where they sit. Calm, poetic, cold are the prayers; tuneful and musical is the singing; logical and learned is the sermon. But where is the Breath that brings life?

Satan seems to be entirely successful nowadays in arousing the interest of the Church in a crowd of side issues. And thus his fell purpose is gained. What meetings to arrange meetings; what appeals for money; what pet schemes to help men, to the exclusion of the essential thing. The one thing the Church must have, and have from heaven, not from earth, is life! What foolishness, to be occupied in trimming the sails when the ship is sinking! Erect a reredos to a dead Christ! The spiritually dead may, but that is certainly not a fruit of the Spirit. Arrange a mission, with a famous preacher! Yes, to attract a crowd, if the speaker is eloquent enough. But to call the dead to life is beyond the power of mortal tongue. And yet that is the work for which the Church is left on earth. The old vision says, with terrible iteration and emphasis, "Prophesy! prophesy! come, O Breath, and breathe on these slain, that they may live!"

I know that some are anxious for the revival of the Church: may God in his mercy multiply their number! If the reader is one of these, may I ask him to put this paper aside at once, and spend a few minutes in definite, earnest, believing prayer for this one thing: "O God, revive thy Church with the manifest presence of thy Holy Spirit, for Christ's sake. Amen."

The prophet was commanded to prophesy to the Breath. Delilah first woos her victim with pleasant vices, and then exclaims, "The Philistines be upon thee.' While politicians, social reformers, scientists, join in crying, "Lo, here!" or "Lo, there!" to call the Bride's attention away from the one thing needful.

What a blessing would come upon the whole Church, if her faithful members would for once agree to ask in their assemblies as well as privately, not for new light on old texts, or fresh thoughts from human brains, but for a renewal of Pentecostal blessing. Pentecost was a yearly feast, while it is now nearly thirty years since the last general gracious awakening in England, Scotland, and Ireland took place. The prophet did as he was commanded, and the effect was wonderful: the dry bones became a living, mighty army, not a mob. Soldiers are for fighting, not arguing; for stern conflict, not childish trifling. By their distinctive dress, freedom from luxurious entanglements, and personal physical activity, they show to the servants of Christ what manner of men they ought to be: separate, ready, obedient, swift to see and do.

Would to God there was such a general overmastering sense of the need of the Church that believers would come together persistently for that one thing only. Elijah sent his servant seven times to look for the fulfilment of the promise, and prayed while he waited. Oh that God's faithful remnant would do the same! Even our prayer-meetings too frequently degenerate into mere opportunities for talking. Could not one Sunday even be set apart for special prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the whole Church of God? Ezek. xxxvii. 1—10 would be a Scripture suitable for the morning, and Acts ii. for the evening. Let us, for ourselves, leave, at least for a time, other schemes on one side, and bracing up the loins of our mind, seek the fulfilment now of what is perhaps the plainest, freest, and most inclusive promise of the Word of God: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." We give our best to our children gladly, and our Father will, in answer to the prayers of his people, perfumed with the merits of his exalted Son, give his Church that life-giving, energising Presence which brings with Himself all other blessings in his train.

I know that here and there signs of revival are visible, but I am thinking now of the coming of the Breath of the living God on the whole Church: not on geographical fragments, but on the gatherings of believers in China, Africa, India, Europe, Asia, America, so that the question scornfully asked so often in these latter times, "Where is your God?" may be at once answered with mighty power and pity, "Lo, God is here in the midst of his people! Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

WIGGAN'S EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The report and balance sheet of the Mission, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan in the Tabernacle. Herries-street, London, W., has been published, The Tabernacle was taken in 1886, and therein have been continued the successful tent services which Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan have held during several summers in different parts of London. The undertaking is burdened by debt amounting to £375.

TORONTO MISSION UNION.—Many poor outcasts have forsaken their evil ways through the efforts of this Mission, and souls have been won for Christ. A larger hall has been built; 600 families visited; free suppers provided for the destitute, and Roman Catholics brought to rejoice in the Saviour. As elsewhere, the drink curse is found to be the greatest hindrance to the progress of the work. The report tells of grateful converts having become earnest workers.

INTERNATIONAL HONESTY.

WRITING in the New York Independent, Mr. Maurice Thompson repeats what he said years ago, that "the condition of American copyright permitted, nay, invited, foreign literature to dominate home literature in all our book markets." He traces to foreign books the recent outbreak of anarchy in Chicago, and adduces it as proof of what he said long ago, that this introduction of foreign literature > was the most insidious danger that ever threatened the permanence of American institutions, provided that foreign literature was really inimical to our development along the lines sketched by the makers of our fundamental law. Then I boldly asserted that foreign literature was, in the main, directly inimical to that development, and ought not to have domination of our literary field, and that we stood in need of statesmanlike action in the matter of international copyright.

Mr. Thompson, however, has singular and self-contradictory views as to international copyright; early in his article he says:—

> Unquestionably, if foreign literature is better mental food for Americans than American literature is, there ought to be no international copyright, the mental food of the nation should be the best, and the cheaper the better. On the other hand, however, if foreign literature is no better, or if it is worse for Americans than our own literature, we should certainly have the legislation which will most favour the production and dissemination of American books. Neither publishers nor authors have rights superior to the right of the nation to have its people fed upon that intellectual food which will best develop a stalwart and steadfast patriotism.

But later on he acknowledges the moral right of foreign authors to the fruit of their labour, for he shows that to use it without payment is theft:—

> So long as publishers can steal the matter of alien books there will be a great inducement for them to prefer it to the work of home authors for which they have to pay a fair price...First let Congress grant a wise copyright guaranty to foreign authors; this will give home authors an equal chance with them in the markets.

The article thus concludes:—

> With our gates wide open to immigration and with a standing premium offered on alien influences in our literature and our art, with our bookstalls domineered over by ten cent stolen editions of pessimistic and Nihilistic books of foreign authorship, with our critics singing peans to communistic novels, and with our pulpits bellowing adoration of Tolstoï and Turgéneff and the rest, who shall wonder that anarchy dares to lay its train and explode its bomb in our midst?

Mr. Maurice Thompson appears to us to adopt the very principles which he condemns, for it is clearly deducible from the above paragraphs that it is, in his opinion, right to "steal the matter of alien books" so long as it is "better mental food for Americans than American literature," and that there would be no objection to their bookstalls being "domineered over by ten cent stolen editions" of "good books." But the writers of "pessimistic and Nihilistic books of foreign authorship" ought to have the advantage of international copyright, because it would act as a deterrent against its being sold so cheaply and so extensively Advocacy of legislation on such selfish and dishonest principles as these, appears to suggest that Mr. Maurice Thompson has himself been demoralised by the literature which he condemns. "A stalwart and steadfast patriotism" will not be best developed by denying the rights of the individual in the supposed interest of the State. "He that ruleth among men must be just, ruling in the fear of God."

THE LAND AND THE BOOK.

UNDER this title a course of four popular and realistic lectures was begun at Exeter Hall on Monday week, under the joint auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and the Protestant Educational Institute: an effort to signalise this bi-centenary and ter-centenary of special and merciful Protestant deliverances. The lecturer is Rev. JAMES NEIL, formerly incumbent of Christ Church, Jerusalem, author of "Palestine Explored," &c. He embodies in the addresses his discoveries amongst the manners, customs, and natural features of the Holy Land, which throw new light on the Bible. The first two lectures are directed against Rationalism, and the last two against Superstition.

The subject of the opening lecture was "Joppa; or, Discoveries on stepping ashore." There was a large attendance. Lord Chancellor Halsbury took the chair, and introduced the lecturer. His lordship spoke of the great importance of seeking, by all proper means, more light upon God's Holy Word; coming to it as learners, and using all the great helps to understand it that are now being so abundantly given. The lecture, which was crowded with deeply interesting matter, was much too full for us to reproduce at any length, but we are glad to furnish notes of some of the most interesting portions. Mr. Neil said:—

Let me impress upon you very strongly three most important, but little realised, facts. First: the Bible is an Eastern book; fully inspired by the Holy Spirit, but, as to its human side, written in the East, by Easterns, and for Easterns—indeed, as to a great part of it, during ages for Easterns alone—and, therefore, only to be rightly interpreted in the light and colouring of the East. Secondly: the life of Palestine is most ancient. Its modern manners, customs, rites, phraseology, climate, and natural features, are all essentially the same as those seen and heard by Abraham 4000 years ago. Thirdly: Palestine life is most uniform. No different modes, no passing fashions change, or ever have changed, the simple appliances of Palestine life. To Western minds, and in an age like ours, this seems little less than a standing miracle. Thus wonderfully has the power and goodness of God afforded us, throughout the lands of the Bible, as it were, a living, accurate, divinely preserved, commentary on its inspired pages!

THE APPLE OF SCRIPTURE.

After a vivid description of the delightful Joppa gardens, laden with their rich golden produce of miles of orange, Mr. Neil went on to support the contention that the orange is the "apple" of Scripture. The "apple" of our Bible may be known by four marks. First, a golden colour—"apples of gold." Secondly, a peculiarly rich fragrance—"the fragrance of thy nostrils is like the apples." Thirdly, a dense foliage—"I sit down under his shadow with great delight." And lastly, sweet fruit; "his fruit is sweet to my taste." Now these four marks meet in the orange, and in that tree alone. This wonderful tree of life bears, often for hundreds of years, an immense quantity of handsome, nourishing, sweet, and highly medicinal fruit, a mass of beautiful and exceedingly fragrant flowers, and an abundance of thick, shining, rich green leaves, all on the tree together throughout a great part of the year, and especially that part, winter, when other trees stand bare. The peerless vital powers of the orange singularly fit it to be the emblem of the Lord Christ, and thus we find it said—

As an orange tree among the trees of the rocky-mountain-forest,
So is my beloved among the sons.
I sit down under his shadow with eager desire,
And his fruit is sweet to my taste.

Its singularly reviving and refreshing scent sheds a flood of light on a passage which would otherwise be without any meaning. In our version it is, "Comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love." But the word "comfort," raphad, which occurs here, in the only two other passages where we find it (Job xvii. 13, xli. 30), means "to spread, or strew"; hence it should be "strew me," not "comfort me." Observe, it is the bride in the Song of Songs who is represented as using these words, when faint with emotion. Now, the idea of spreading over a bride either branch, blossom, or fruit of the apple-tree possesses no significance whatever. But if we supply the name of the true tree, do we not at once see the appropriateness of the exclamation of the bride, "Strew me with orange"? This is just what is done with a bride down to the present day; and here, surely, we have the often inquired-for, natural Eastern origin of the customary Eastern bridal wreath; and, more than this, we have the very reason for its adoption, namely, that, to an Eastern, its pungent and reviving perfume acted as a vinaigrette or bottle of salts would some sensitive English maiden.

Observe, too, in the light of this explanation, the beauty of that proverb which tells of the excellence of graceful and gentle speech: "A word spoken on its wheels is like oranges of gold in figured work of silver."

The bloom of the orange is a brilliant white, resembling the hue of the molten silver which is so much seen in the jewellery of the East. As the rich ripe fruit is constantly seen standing out amidst clusters of the shining bloom, it is naturally, to a vivid Oriental imagination, "like oranges of gold in figured work of silver." "A word spoken on its wheels" means "a smooth, courteous word:" "flowery language," such as men value so exceedingly in lands like Syria, and carry to the extreme of countless formal compliments and much fulsome flattery. But, while avoiding excess and insincerity, well is it for us when, in all our intercourse with others, the golden orange of good matter is seen set off by the fair silvern flowers of a good manner! Some earnest believers do not attach to this subject the importance it undoubtedly deserves.

Here is a sturdy young Jew, who has just staggered past us with a huge burden on his back. He is

THE 'ATAL, OR PORTER, OF PALESTINE.

No sooner does a traveller land at Joppa than he finds his belongings frantically contended for by a shouting, struggling crowd of such porters. In the complete absence of carts, their services are necessary in all the towns. They wear a coarse, indestructible tunic of camel's hair cloth, the "sackcloth" of Scripture (which, as the dress of the lowest class amongst the people, became a sign of distress and mourning), and they carry a strong rope, about five yards long. They can lift and transport enormous weights. They crouch down in front of a pile of heaped up boxes, or some huge packing case, and skilfully arranging their rope without any knots, so as to catch and sustain the whole load. Then with a sudden spring they rise to their feet, and bring the burden to bear upon their shoulders and the upper part of their back. I have sometimes watched these men with wonder, as they have passed by, laden with burdens so huge in bulk and heavy in weight as to seem altogether beyond human strength.

The familiar office of the 'atal, the porter, or burden-bearer of the East, is evidently the source of the figure used by David in the words, "My iniquities are gone over my head: like a heavy burden, they are too heavy for me." Constantly have I seen the porter's huge load reaching far over and above his head, which he has had to hold down in a bowed and painful position, while he staggered along under a weight so monstrous that, had he fallen, it would probably have crushed him to death. Solemn, never-to-be-forgotten picture of a soul under a deep sense of sin!

Our blessed Lord plainly refers to the toil of the 'atal when, denouncing the cruelly oppressive ceremonial traditions forced upon the masses by the hypocritical Scribes and Pharisees, He tells us that these spiritual taskmasters "bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with their fingers." In beautiful contrast to such wearisome ritualistic and ceremonial observances, which only tend to bondage and oppression, Jesus emphatically declares, "My burden is light."

Let me call your attention to the great importance of these realistic Biblical studies as

A MEANS OF SILENCING INFIDELITY.

Take, for example, the highly damaging objection often urged by Atheists against Holy Scripture, on the ground of the coarseness of the expressions it contains, and the handling of subjects, the very mention of which in such plain terms we should account immodest and even impure. Indeed, I know that this has been a grave and honest difficulty to many earnest and sensitive minds. Yet a comparatively short residence in Palestine serves to remove it altogether. No Eastern could possibly see any objection whatever on this score. They still, as in ancient times, use the greatest plainness of speech throughout Syria. As soon as one acquires a knowledge of colloquial Arabic, the ear is assailed by a plain speaking on the most delicate subjects, which is extremely embarrassing until such time as one learns to become accustomed to it. Things that are never so much as mentioned amongst us, are spoken of publicly in the East by people of the highest class, and of the greatest respectability and refinement. This explains at once the naturalness and innocency of the use of expressions and the mention of matters in the Bible, which our translators have softened down in some instances, and public readers have tacitly, and, as I believe, wrongly, agreed to omit in others. The purest-minded Eastern woman would smile at an objection to the Bible on this score! But I may go further, and boldly say that seeing the Bible purports to be an Eastern book, written in the East, and first—and for long ages only—addressed to Easterns, it could not possibly be genuine if these very matters which have given rise to such blasphemous cavils were absent from its pages! Thus, in the light of Palestine life, one of the most terrible objections of coarse infidelity not only melts away, but actually becomes transformed into a very strong evidence of the genuineness and authenticity of Holy Scripture!

At the close a vote of thanks was passed to the Lord Chancellor and the lecturer. The Lord Chancellor, who responded for both, described the lecture as a very interesting one, and said that he had himself learnt much in listening to it. The next lecture of the course will be given in Exeter Hall, at 8 o'clock on Monday, Feb. 13, entitled "Similitudes; or, Light on the Figurative Language of Scripture."

THE BLIND OF BELFAST.—The report of mission work last year among the blind of Belfast states that in many cases there has been fruit of labour. The workers meet with nothing but gratitude and thankfulness; they serve by love, and thus win the hearts of those whom they wish to benefit.

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

THE LAPSED MASSES.

AN effort has been made by the Glasgow Presbytery of the Church of Scotland to ascertain the extent of non-church-going, and its causes, within its bounds. Out of a population of 118,753, it has been found that the non-church-goers number 19,050, or about 17 per cent. This average would give about 120,000 non-church-goers within the bounds of the Presbytery. As might have been expected, intemperance is regarded as one of the principal causes of abstention from church. Among other causes are enumerated low religious tone, the debasing influence of Romanism, non-attractive services, Sabbath labour, want of parental authority, and cheap and unhealthy literature. The remedies suggested are wise, and to the point: Plainer dressing on the part of those attending church, the abolition of seat-rents, early closing on Saturday, and no labour on the Sabbath.

PRESBYTERIANISM AND THE PAPACY.

The descendants of the Covenanters have naturally viewed with much alarm the interchange of compliments between Her Majesty and the Pope. Although a leading Scottish newspaper has advocated the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with the Vatican, it does not in this reflect the mind of Scotland. Various notices of motion have been given in different Presbyteries, expressing emphatic condemnation against this country being entangled in diplomatic relations with the Pope of Rome, and strongly protesting against the proposal, on any ground whatever, as perilous to the civil and religious interests of the land.

FEMALE CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

The churches of Scotland are beginning to realise the place of woman in the Christian vineyard. A circular has been issued from the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, asking the influence of the various Presbyteries in forming branches of the Women's Guild within their bounds. In discussing this circular in the Presbytery of Auchterarder, Dr. Rankin said the deaconesses of the Church should be parellel with the elders. Rev. J. Hunter, however, opposed this modest suggestion, for fear that the people might want to hear the "sweet voices and eloquent tongues" of the deaconesses. He made the astounding and ignorance-betraying remark that "a band of women preachers would be an intolerable pest."

CHRISTIAN VERNACULAR SOCIETY.

The report of the Glasgow Committee of the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India shows a good record for the past year. Colonel Young, who is the travelling secretary for Scotland, points out that the missionary operations of all denominations would inevitably suffer from any diminution of its support. All missionaries look to it for that religious and instructive literature which, by the blessing of God, counteracts the baneful influence of the sceptical and atheistic teaching so rife in India. Much of the literature of this Society is from the pen of Dr. John Murdoch, whose portrait recently appeared in your columns.

TEMPERANCE.

The Act passed last year conferring upon the licensing authorities of Scotland the power to close public-houses at ten o'clock, instead of eleven, is being widely applied. In some burghs the magistrates have manifested a reluctance to adopt the earlier hour, but in the majority of cases this reluctance has had to give way before the overwhelming majorities voting in favour of the public-houses being closed at ten o'clock. At Dalkeith the publicans, disapproving of coercion, have spontaneously resolved to close at ten o'clock, instead of eleven. Professor Charteris, of Edinburgh, thinks there is something in the air of Scotland which makes a man unwilling to take the pledge, and yet everything in social life shows that the temperance cause is advancing. Sir William Collins believes that in the next Parliament such a measure of legislation will be passed as will greatly lessen the drink traffic, if it does not utterly destroy it. These sentiments were expressed at the annual soirée of the Edinburgh University Total Abstinence Society last week.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

JUST now the Romish question is coming to the front from two different sources, and a deep agitation is not far off. President Cleveland's gift to the Pope receives hearty condemnation from certain quarters, while the crusade in Boston, headed by Dr. J. D. Fulton, is creating a great excitement in that city. So long as the people regarded the President's gift as a purely personal affair there was little criticism; the Pope's reply, however, acknowledging the gift from America's sixty millions through the President as their representative, is calling out a burst of indignation, the first mutterings of which are already heard. The Methodist preachers of Baltimore, an able and influential ministerial body, have adopted a series of resolutions protesting against President Cleveland's recognition of Rome's hierarchy.

* * * *

The hubbub, at present confined to Boston, over Dr. Fulton and his crusade against Rome, will be heard in other leading cities before many days. His book, "Why Priests should Wed," has created a perfect furore. Already 300,000 copies are ordered. This "plan of campaign" is novel and exciting. Every purchaser of a ticket to the lecture gets a copy of the book, and, as the manufacture of the book has produced a startling sensation, everybody wants to read it. The book is not for sale on the market, hence purchasers attend the lectures, so that by voice and pen a double blow is aimed at the pollution of the Papacy. One bookseller wanted 20,000, but was refused.

* * * *

Dr. Fulton's publishers, a leading Boston firm, have had no end of trouble. During the progress of printing "Why Priests should Wed," the compositors threatened to strike, on account of alleged obscenity, compelling the firm to break its contract. On the discovery that the "strike" was a Papal trick, and after the expurgation of certain expressions, the publishers were legally compelled to complete the contract. Defeated at this point, the agents of Rome endeavoured to buy up the whole edition, going so far as to purchase thousands of tickets to the lectures, in order that the people at large might neither see the book nor hear its author. All of these matters becoming public through the press, the syndicate adopted such measures, sparing neither time nor money, as to crowd an immense building with eager people to hear the lecturer, and thus 15,000 books were given away the first two days.

* * * *

The agents of this remarkable crusade have engaged the largest halls in the leading cities for Fulton's lectures, and his Syndicate have now decided to send him on a tour around the world, spending some time in Great Britain. In a few weeks the edition of 100,000 copies will be exhausted, as 20,000 copies can be disposed of every week. The book is intense in its denunciation of priestly pollution. It treats of the abuses of the Confessional, and of the evils caused by the compulsory celibacy of priests and nuns.

The New York Observer, a strong religious weekly, has taken a new departure—not, we are thankful to say, in its theology, but in its policy. It adds to its bill of fare an "Evangelistic Department." It not only reports the work done by accredited evangelists, but opens its columns to articles from their pens. It has been the habit of other great papers to publish squibs from pens dipped in gall against this class of earnest Christian workers, and only occasionally have they received from the religious press just consideration. The Observer has the foresight to recognise the accumulative power of evangelism, and the great utility of evangelistic effort. No doubt the managers will enlarge their clientage, increase their circulation, and influence and benefit general evangelism in this departure.

* * * *

It was the privilege of this writer to lay before the energetic publisher of The Observer the policy of the London CHRISTIAN. To this pioneer journal certainly belongs the credit and honour of introducing evangelists and their work to the Christian public of Great Britain. And nobly has it from the first pursued the object of advancing every good word and work. By its faithful efforts in this direction large fields have been opened to ready workers all over the world, and not a few evangelists have been dug out of the privacy of their original lowly sphere to become honoured public servants of the Universal Church. We hail its many modern contemporaries who are now doing a like service.

* * * *

Philadelphia has recently been the centre of concentrated evangelistic effort. Apart from any pre-arranged plan, Rev. Geo. C. Needham, Rev. S. H. Pratt, and Rev. B. Fay Mills have been preaching and teaching in various churches throughout the city. The meetings have all been well attended, and much precious fruit has been gathered. Their preaching is thoroughly orthodox, wise, earnest, and salutary. Evangelist Needham has been giving Bible lectures at a noon-day meeting, recently organised by business men, in the hall of the Sunday school Union. They are the largest noon meetings held for years, and the brethren in charge are both encouraged and gratified.

* * * *

At this date Mr. Moody is still at Louisville; Dr. Munhall is at Baltimore; Dr. Pentecost continues at Lawrence, Mass.; Mr. Needham commences work in a few days at Springfield, Mass.; Mr. Fay Mills goes to Fall River; Mr. S. H. Pratt has started meetings at Somerville, Mass.; while Major Whittle and other evangelists are in the Western States. Mr. McGranahan is unfortunately invalided, and needs the earnest prayers of all lovers of Jesus.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING INDUSTRIAL VILLAGES.—The New Year's appeal issued by the Society refers to several occasional papers, in which its objects and modus operandi are defined. These may be obtained from the hon. secretary, Mr. G. J. Knight, at the offices of the Society, 32, Craven-street, Charing-cross. The present time is deemed most opportune for pressing forward the aims and claims of the Society, and facilities are offered for the establishment of village industries side by side with agricultural operations. To further these ends the co-operation of the public is appealed for, in the offering of drawing-rooms for meetings, and by informing the secretary of openings for suitable industries.

RAISING THE FALLEN.—The first report of the Home for Mothers and Babies, 6, Pope's-road, Brixton, S.W., shows that Mrs. H. Harrier and her Home have been instrumental of much good. Altogether 47 women and 22 children have come under Mrs. Harrier's care, and most of them are now doing well. The character and success of Mrs. Harrier's efforts are spoken for and attested by ladies of position and name in works of love and mercy. There is a danger, however, that the Home will have to be closed shortly, as there is a balance due to the treasurer, and funds do not come in to sustain the work. This calamity may be prevented by timely generosity on the part of the friends of the fallen and the weak.

DR. WHYTE ON OLD WORLDLINGS.

In continuing his lectures on "Grace Abounding," Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, took for his text last week the following words from the eighty-fifth paragraph—"There were two things would make me wonder: the one was when I saw old people hunting after the things of this life as if they should live here always; the other was when I found professors much distressed and cast down when they met with outward losses."

Dr. Whyte said those words recall similar words of our Lord's: "He marvelled at their unbelief." Christ wondered that while there was so much need for faith any man could live and die without it. He knew that He Himself could never have gone through his life without faith; He was the first and chief of believers. When John Bunyan wrote those words he was not much of a believer to boast of; it was not his faith but his misery that made him wonder when he saw old people hunting after the pleasures of the world. He must have seen many young people hunting after the things of the world, but he did not wonder at that, and neither do we. But how pathetic it is to see old men, with one foot in the grave, still beating the bushes of life in the hope of finding something to feed their souls! To a wise man there is no such deplorable spectacle as a worldly old man, unless it be a worldly old woman.

God was proud of Job because he was above a life like that. At the close of his life the patriarch could thank God for a grey-haired man's heart in his bosom. When his sons and daughters came and asked whether they might go to their brother's to feast and dance, he said, "Certainly you may go, my children; go, and God bless you. But don't expect me to go with you; I will remain at home and sacrifice for everyone of you by name, lest the father lose a daughter or a son in the pleasures of the world." Happy children with such a father! Happy father with such a heart!

Job's example, Dr. Whyte continued, is a reminder of a prayer which John Milton penned in anticipation of old age when he was yet only twenty-five years old.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth show,
And every herb that sips the dew;
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain.

Bunyan, without the old age of Job or the scholarship of Milton, attained as high an elevation of soul as either of them. What age did for Job and scholarship for Milton, a wounded spirit did for Bunyan.

And now, as the prayer-meeting is the place for experimental religion, let us ask, How about ourselves? Most of us have crossed the sky-line and watershed of life. Are we a wonder to good men, and do they weep over us as they see us hunting the pleasures of the world? The days of our youthful follies are past; our hill is shot over; our last barrel has been discharged; our gun has burst in our hands, and why linger we yet among the young when we should be at home sacrificing? Let us look to ourselves. Do you know the profound humiliation of the man who looks at himself and discovers what he is truly hunting after? There is a very simple test by which we may tell whether we are withered old worldlings or not. What do you think, and how do you feel when you realise that you are growing old? It is a sad sign when a man numbers up his days, and regrets that they are so few, when the withered heart will not turn toward the home Christ has gone to prepare for it.

Do you know the last pages of the two parts of the "Pilgrim's Progress?" They are pages for a trembling old hand to hold up before spectacled eyes, and to be kept near us while we die. What a company those pages picture for us, and how triumphant they were over death! If all the Puritans died like this, where have we wandered to that we have so few like death-beds now? God helping me, I will preach, and you shall hear, such doctrines as will save us from losing ourselves in the world's hunting-grounds. It is true the Puritans did not enjoy life, but then they lived in times when it was impossible for a good man greatly to enjoy life. It is true they were men of Hebrew spirit, but God baptize us all with the same Hebrew spirit.

REV. F. B. MEYER IN LONDON.

Rev. F. Brotherton Meyer, B.A., of Leicester, commenced his ministry at Regent's-park Chapel on Sunday last. Morning and evening there were full congregations, and it was felt that the day was epochal in the history of the Baptist Church worshipping in this building. In the afternoon Mr. Meyer visited the Sunday-school, and there his influence was felt to be cheering and invigorating. The day's proceedings were not severely introductory. The light impress of commencement upon the services was, however, such as gave abundant promise of good things to come.

Both morning and evening, at suitable intervals, Mr. Meyer made some remarks on his methods. Before the second prayer he intimated that at its close he would lead the congregation in the words of the Lord's Prayer. He also observed that he always liked to hear his people's response—to hear them endorse his petitions by a sincere "Amen." Before the sermon, Mr. Meyer announced that in future there will be no service on Wednesday evenings, but every Monday evening there will be a prayer-meeting, for the present in the school-room; this he will make it a point to attend, in order to deliver a short address. Mr. Meyer also gave it out as his purpose, every Monday afternoon, from three to six o'clock, to be in the vestry, ready for consultation with anyone who might call upon him, to make him their friend, to ask his advice, or to communicate to him distress of any kind. He added that he hoped to be informed of any sickness or sorrow in which he could show his sympathy; a postcard addressed to the chapel would secure his attendance as quickly as possible. Remarking with pleasure, both morning and evening, upon the fulness of the galleries, Mr. Meyer said that part of the chapel had now been thrown quite open. The pews in the area will be appropriated to persons who wish to have seats of their own, but no longer at fixed rents, which introduce class and money distinctions, but on optional quarterly payments. Every Sunday before the sermon there will be a collection from seat to seat as a part of the worship, and he hoped that this would be performed as conscientiously and reverently as the singing of a hymn or the engaging in prayer. Every Sunday afternoon he will conduct a men's meeting. If upon one matter Mr. Meyer laid more stress than he did upon others, it was upon the prayer-meeting. "Don't forget the prayer-meeting," he said. "My work will be an utter failure unless I am backed up by your united prayers." In the morning Mr. Meyer spoke to the children for five minutes words of great simplicity and beautiful tenderness.

The sermon in the morning was founded on Revelation xxi. 2: "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." The discourse was replete with instruction and comfort. The fair city, Jerusalem, had been destroyed, and John, an exile in Patmos, on account of "the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus," was in great wonder at such a disaster; while sorrowing at the destruction of the Holy City, John was permitted to stand upon the mount of vision, and to see the New Jerusalem descending from God out of heaven. God breaks up our ideals that we may seek his ideal. In his wonderful providence He demolishes our plans and schemes, and compels us to look up to Himself—to look from earth to heaven. The date of the vision having been enlarged upon, its contents were considered as a second point. John beheld in vision the completed Church of Christ. The Church is unity in variety—Christ being both the foundation and the builder; as the body is one, and yet has many members, and as the tree is one, and yet has many branches, and so forth, so also is the Church. God has been building unseen, and from the dust and chaos of the final convulsion which shall pass over the world there will emerge the fair fabric of his workmanship, which shall stand for ever. Ecclesiastics have tried to include all Christendom in one Church, but their dreams can never be realised, for the New Jerusalem, the bride, the Lamb's wife, is not formed on earth for heaven, but comes from heaven to earth. If joined to Christ we are members of the Church, although not included in any roll of church members on earth. This thought was powerfully followed up, after which the preacher spoke, thirdly, on the inspiration of the vision. John saw the foundations of the building first, and his own name inscribed there amongst the "names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb." We, none of us, know what this life is doing for us, what inconspicuous deeds, which the world forgets, may in reality be effecting. Having asked his hearers whether their names were in the great fabric, the preacher concluded with some words of exhortation, in which he asked his church to work in association with God, who had appointed them to such glorious building work.

In the evening the text of the sermon was John's Gospel, chapter xix. 5: "Pilate saith unto them, Behold the Man!" Having depicted the scene in the court of the Roman Governor, the preacher analysed the conduct of the Jews in seeking Christ's death. He proceeded to remark, first, that the facts showed suffering nobly borne. Christ had been scourged—a punishment under which the patient always fainted, and often died. This was calculated to take the manhood out of any man; but, notwithstanding the scourging, and the many insults which followed thereupon, Pilate was compelled to behold in the Messiah a man amongst men, a man of mark; "Behold a Man!" The second point was that Christ's lofty claims were not discredited, and the third noticed the fact that Christ's innocence was not attended by weakness. Both these were considered at length in a very suggestive manner, and the supreme manliness of the Saviour emphasised. The fact that while helping others Christ restrained his power to help Himself was dwelt upon, after which the preacher called upon his audience to render worship, devotion, and trust to the God Man. Observing that the Jews chose Barabbas rather than Christ, he besought his hearers there and then to decide for Christ.

On leaving Melbourne Hall, Leicester, Mr. Meyer was presented with addresses and testimonials from various branches of his work, including a purse containing a hundred guineas from members of the church and congregation. Not yet awhile will he be able to forget his late church and congregation, nor, indeed, the people of the Midland town; for even on Sunday night, after preaching in Regent's-park Chapel, he was waited upon by a poor lad, who had walked from Leicester to London to obtain work; not having succeeded, however, and being cast down, the lad trustfully went to see Mr. Meyer, whose counsel and cheer were willingly given.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.—The third annual report of the Glasgow Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children shows a considerable extension of operations. During the year ending October 31,1887, no fewer than 7355 meals were given, 806 children fed, 246 clothed or partially clothed, and 1186 sent to industrial schools and other similar institutions, or placed under the supervision of the School Board. Also, through the agency of the Society, parents have been punished in many cases for cruel neglect or inhuman treatment of their children. Additional subscriptions, to the amount of about £200 per annum, are required to meet the present expenditure.

A CONVERTED MUSIC HALL.

THE WESLEYAN EAST LONDON MISSION.

THE ranks of Christian workers in the East-end received a splendid acquisition some two years ago, when Rev. Peter Thompson was appointed to take charge of the Eastern branch of the London Wesleyan Mission, which seems destined to leave its mark upon the religious life of the century.

The Wesleyan Conference showed great discernment when it chose Mr. Thompson for this work. He, at any rate, is no square peg in a round hole. His goodly, "jolly" presence, his untiring activity, his bonhomie of disposition, and kindliness of heart, all mark him out as specially fitted for work in a neighbourhood where artificiality or stuck-uppishness would be fatal to success. If any readers would like to know something of what has been achieved by this Mission in the region of Cable-street and Ratcliff-highway during the past year, let them procure and give a careful reading to the green-back "Record of Work" that Mr. Thompson has lately sent out; a copy may be had from him at 242, Cable-street, E. To condense the story of soul-saving work for a year into its few pages is of course a moral impossibility, but the facts and incidents it contains are an index of the signs and wonders that have been wrought in that neighbourhood in the name and strength of Jesus Christ.

A year ago there was great rejoicing when "Paddy's Goose" was snatched out of the hand of the enemy and pressed into the service of the Mission. Last week another forward step was taken, in the formal opening of "the Old Mahogany Bar and Wilton's Music-hall" for Gospel work. These premises, situated at the north-west corner of Wellclose-square, like "Paddy's Goose," have borne an evil reputation in the past. Without going into unsavoury detail, we may say that they have been centres of corrupting influence among the people of the district, especially the young. Their future we may confidently hope will do much to atone for that black past.

The story of the conversion of these buildings is a somewhat remarkable one. Some three years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Radcliffe and Miss Macpherson chanced to be passing the door of this music-hall. They were moved to enter it, paying the usual fee for admission. What they saw and heard we cannot exactly say, but they were constrained, in the very middle of the performances, to kneel down in the hall and pray to God, in the presence and hearing of the people, that the devil's work going on there might in some way be stopped. Within a few months of that time certain legal proceedings ensued, and the hall had to be closed. It was never opened again for public use till it was opened last Thursday for the purposes of the Wesleyan Mission. The fine hall, capable of seating about one thousand people, instead of being the scene of ribald and hellish revelry, will now re-echo to the proclamation of the Gospel story. The Old Mahogany Bar is transformed into a coffee-palace. Some houses adjoining have also been acquired, and in these accommodation will be found for about thirty men and women workers, who, with those already on the ground, will assist Mr. Thompson in his ceaseless and multifarious efforts to reach the masses of people around.

It was to hear this welcome and wonderful tale, and to take part in the dedication of the reconstructed premises, that Mr. Thompson called together his friends and neighbours on Thursday last. It was a full day. In the forenoon there was a well-attended meeting of workers for prayer and thanksgiving. Among those present was Miss Macpherson, who related the circumstance to which we have referred. Mr. J. E. Vanner gave an address. In the afternoon, Rev. F. J. Sharr preached an earnest discourse to a goodly congregation, and warmly commended the new effort. After tea Mr. Thompson, with admirable generalship, had arranged a programme by which the visitors should see something of the past achievements of the Mission. First of all there was, in the lecture hall of St. George's Chapel, a large array of women connected with the mothers' meetings. These were regaled with tea, and were afterwards addressed by Miss Mason, of Kilburn. Half an hour later there was a muster of men in Paddy's Goose. They flocked in and filled the lower room—by no means an attractive-looking congregation. Many of them, however, are the trophies of the Mission, and are now leading changed lives, though still bearing some marks of former dissipation. Mr. J. Beauchamp, of Highgate, presided, and addressed to them some excellent counsel. He was followed by a ministerial friend, who told some stories that must stick in their minds for many a day. Tea was provided in this case also.

Meanwhile a great throng of children had gathered in St. George's Chapel, and afforded perhaps the most striking and hopeful sight of the entire day's proceedings. These exceedingly live young people are brought together several evenings a week, and the results of their training were seen in the ready way in which they followed the lead of Mr. Jameson (who is Mr. Thompson's principal helper) in repeating and singing hymns, with a degree of lung power that speaks volumes for the general healthiness of the East-end soap and water; a freer use of the needle would certainly have improved the outward appearance of some of these sharp and restless atoms of humanity, but altogether they formed a splendid body of "raw material" to work upon. Close to the chapel is a large new Board school, built on the site of a demolished nest of unclean birds. We were glad to hear that the Christian teachers in this school are heartily co-operating with Mr. Thompson in his many-sided work.

The large meeting in the evening in the new hall in Wellclose-square was a fitting crown to the engagements of the day. Mr. Morgan Harvey presided, and among those who spoke were the President of the Conference (Rev. John Walton), Rev. Walford Green, Rev. H. Price Hughes, and Mr. Watson, the present proprietor of the hall. Mr. Watson is a bluff, shrewd, hale, old man of eighty summers, and has been for many years a local preacher. The story he told was a bit of biographical romance, the like of which is seldom heard on a public platform. After reciting some early experiences, he told, amid the breathless interest of the audience, how he lost all the money he had accumulated, and was left with nothing to pay his debts. In his distress he cried to the Lord, who gave him the assurance, as he felt, that deliverance would come. When in the city one day, with scarcely a shilling in his pocket, his attention was directed to a large block of model buildings for sale. He was able to negotiate the purchase, and after two or three years found himself the possessor of a considerable amount of money, out of which he bought this Old Mahogany Bar and Music-hall, thinking to put them in order, and himself conduct in them a Gospel mission. Increasing infirmity led him to offer the buildings to Mr. Thompson, with the result, as we have stated, that they are now part of the machinery of his Mission.

In his own statement Mr. Thompson detailed the interesting circumstances connected with the acquisition of the building. At first it was intended to lease the premises, but he had been induced to try and secure the freehold from Mr. Watson at the price of £6000. Towards this Mr. Watson himself gives £1000, Mrs. Henry Reed £2000, and another friend £1000. At the close of the meeting on Thursday the whole of the amount had been promised except some £700, which it is believed will soon be made up, so that these splendid premises may be free, without any annual charge, for the work of the Gospel among the East-end poor. Mr. Hughes, in the course of his lively address, expressed the fervent hope that the proprietors of the Pavilion would hand over to him that splendid building, on "the finest site in the world," for the purposes of the West London Mission; to which we add a hearty "Amen."

WHO TEACHETH LIKE HIM?

WHO can teach us like our Father?
  Who can make us understand
Half so well life's mystic lessons,
  Written by his loving hand?

When in characters resplendent
  He unfolds each one in turn,
Then we wonder that we ever
  Thought the lesson hard to learn.

Sweetly we are taught his kindness,
  When we hear in vale and wood
Gentle voices softly singing,
  "God, our God, is very good."

Grand the language of his thunder,
  Clothed in words that all must heed,
Telling loud in solemn accents,
  "God, our God, is great indeed."

Mysteries no more perplex us,
  When from some far mountain range,
We are taught the rest of waiting
  Till we earth for heaven exchange.

Of the vastness of his mercy,
  How his thoughts our thoughts excel,
Chant the ceaseless waves of ocean
  In their grand harmonious swell.

Lessons manifold He giveth;
  Yet the sweetest and the best
Is the one that bringeth comfort
  To a heart by sin opprest.

God, our God, so loved the sinner
  That for him his Son He gave;
Jesus came, He lived, He suffered,
  Freely helpless man to save.

CHARLOTTE MURRAY.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.

FROM the last annual report, it appears that a good work is being done at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth. The attendance at the Sunday services continues to be satisfactory. To a large extent the services have been conducted by evangelists and gentlemen provided by the Evangelisation Society. Among the preachers were officers in both the Army and Navy, professional men and merchants, an experienced traveller in heathen lands, and also on many occasions, a well-known clergyman who resides in the neighbourhood. The open-air services, held in a neighbouring field on Sunday afternoons, and sustained mainly by working men from Down Lodge Hall, were resumed early in June and continued with regularity until the close of the summer. The report gives an encouraging account of the Bible-classes and other agencies.

The monthly meetings for conference and prayer continue with unabated interest and usefulness, as also does the service for children and young people, held on the first Saturday in every month. The statement of receipts and expenditure shows that the larger portion of the sum received as donations and subscriptions was contributed, as in previous years, by the trustees themselves. But it is hoped that, as the Mission becomes better known, Christian friends, in and beyond the neighbourhood, who are in sympathy with evangelistic efforts, will favour it with their warm support, and thus aid the trustees in their desire to make Down Lodge Hall yet more useful.

THE OPIUM TRADE.—Rev. Goodeve Mabbs met the Congregational ministers of Bristol on Monday, January 30, and asked their co-operation in the proposal to hold a Conference of ministers of all bodies, to consider how best to interest their congregations in the question of putting an end to our opium trade. The proposal was sympathetically received, and it is hoped that a Conference may soon be held. Mr. Mabbs has, during the past week, addressed meetings on this subject at Cardiff and Birchwood, near Colchester.

DR. ZIEMANN IN FRANKFORT.

We extract the following from the Gemeindeblatt of January 27:—

Dr. Ziemann has completed here a successful mission. He had a very busy time. We had drawing-room meetings, Bible-readings, services for the people, and meetings for men only. The attendance was large, and the impression profound.

The meetings for men only were a great success. Every night the large hall was filled by over 3000 men, of whom the Doctor got from the first a strong grip. He dealt with the Scriptural thesis: "Earthly, sensual, devilish." His treatment of this dark subject was masterly. Not only was there the deepest attention, but the evident moving of conscience was very marked as he drew the picture of the downward way, reaping the sentence of the law of nature, as well as of the law of God: the end—death. As he then lifted up Christ, who came to destroy the works of the devil, the effect was soul-stirring. We cannot but believe that much good has been done.

RESCUE WORK IN BRIXTON.

Dear Sir,—In Pulross-road, Brixton, a disused stable and loft have been hired; having been refreshed with an abundant supply of whitewash, and dignified by the name of Shaftesbury Hall, they are open every evening from seven till ten o'clock. Here gather from twenty to fifty young "roughs," as they would generally be termed, "rough diamonds," as the workers at the Mission rightly believe them to be. They are lads, or young men, whose ages vary from about sixteen to two-and-twenty. They belong to that class who seem to remain outside of all good and holy influences unless sought out by some special effort. There a bright warm fire, and brighter smiles, and warmer hearts, always await them.

Proceedings commence, and close, each evening with singing and prayer, and Bible-reading or Gospel address. The intermediate time is spent, sometimes in amusement, sometimes in reading, and sometimes in mending up their clothes. Time is always found for plenty of singing. Several have been reformed, have been removed from their old evil associations, and have been emigrated to Canada, where they are now doing well in every way. Several more are under serious conviction of sin, and might with advantage be separated in a similar way, were the means forthcoming. Some have been started in honest trading.

At Hope Cottage, not far from the Hall, there is a nursery, where poor women can leave their babies while they go out to work. Mrs. Cunningham, who superintends both Shaftesbury Hall and the nursery, does a great deal in preventive and rescue work among girls. This is by no means the least important branch of the work. During last year twenty-four girls were dealt with, only two of whom have turned out unsatisfactorily.

To carry on this work and extend it, help is urgently needed. Mrs. Cunningham gives all her time to this work. But she wants more helpers and more money. Better premises are needed, and are being sought near Brixton Station. (Rev.) W. H. Richards.

YOUNG CHRISTIANS' UNION.—The second annual report of this Union shows progress in good work. Boys and young men, of ages ranging from ten to eighteen years, are invited to join the members of the Union every Friday evening, for spiritual edification, in No. 1 room at the Wesleyan Chapel, Mildmay Park. The Union is not attached to any denomination. Mr. F. Neal, Norfolk House, Queen Elizabeth's-avenue, Stoke Newington, N., is the hon. secretary.

MR. H. R. FRANCIS IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. Francis writes from Norfolk, Va., U.S., on January 13:—

The work hitherto has been very encouraging, though chiefly amongst the white Churches. I have had nightly services in the Methodist Church, and many have professed salvation.

I preached on Sunday last to 1500 blacks, and I felt the deep need of getting the word of life to them. They shouted a great deal, and seem fond of just that kind of outward manifestation; but, singularly, they do it when the speaker is dealing with the imaginative. There is no Bible Society, and no tracts, no books as we have them, no "children's special services." When I mentioned a service for children, they thought it was a grand idea. I am now speaking of Dr. Tudor's church and people, white. Great difficulties are in the way: one is the want of a place to preach in, where you can hold meetings for instruction. You see no Bibles in any of the seats, only in the pulpits.

THE COMING BATTLE FOR INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I send you to-day a copy of the last report of our Federation, published by Dyer Brothers, and should be very much obliged if you would bring it before the notice of your readers. Mr. Dyer's deeply interesting communication which you have published is most important. Our report, however, gives a view of the subject with which our friends in England, and especially in Parliament, will have to grapple—I mean the Imperial and Parliamentary side of the matter. It was no light task, working for Home Repeal for eighteen years, and we have now a task still more elaborate and difficult—that is, of obtaining repeal in India by means of the action of our Parliament at home, supported by the English constituencies and opposed by, no doubt, the bulk of the Anglo-Indian officials in India.

This Anglo-Indian opposition, I believe, will be very strong, and I fear the present chiefs of our India Office at home will be only too glad to avail themselves of the strength of this Anglo-Indian opposition, in order to delay the victory on our part. We have the native population of India strongly with us.

For this, and for other vital reasons in connection with the government of India, many of us strongly desire that certain natives of India, now residing in London, should succeed in obtaining seats in Parliament. The Hon. Dadhabai Naoroji, formerly of the Bombay Legislative Council, and from the first an ardent opponent of the legalisation of vice, is a candidate for Parliament; the other is Mr. Ghosh, who has just been accepted as the Liberal candidate for North Lambeth. I may mention that these gentlemen are very strong on the temperance question, and both embrace in their political programme the Social Purity question. Both are desirous of certain much-needed reforms in India, and are naturally grieved at the present increase of the heavy taxation and the deepening poverty there which was so forcibly pointed out by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., after his visit to India.

The moral character of both these gentlemen entitles them to our highest esteem. If in Parliament, they would take up the difficult question of repeal in India, concerning which there is no need that I should add anything to the burning words of Mr. Dyer.—I remain, yours, &c., Josephine E. Butler.

MISS ROBINSON'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE, Ready (2d.), has made an excellent start. The cover is such as will greatly attract soldiers and sailors, to whose benefit Miss Robinson has so long devoted her energies. The reading matter is varied, and presented in a form which quite invites attention. It is to be hoped that Ready will be a valuable adjunct of Miss Robinson's work. It is published in the middle of each month at the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

The January meeting, convened by Mr. E. W. Thomas and the Committee of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution, was held on Tuesday evening last week in Lower Exeter Hall. As on former occasions, the social gathering preceding the meeting was well attended.

Mr. George Williams, who subsequently presided, said they had met at the commencement of another year for mutual encouragement and help, and to pray that the year may be a useful and a happy one in connection with the work. He found it difficult to say which branch of this excellent Institution's work he liked the best, the rescue aspect of it or the preventive. It has for years successfully stood in the breach and saved many from the destroyer. He trusted that their now venerable friend, Mr. Thomas, and those co-operating with him, would receive new inspiration to continue their labours, and that all present would assist them by their earnest prayers and sympathy.

Prayer was offered by several friends present, interspersed with testimonies from workers, as to the blessing which has rested upon their labours throughout the past year. Words of encouragement were spoken by Mr. F. Smith, Mrs. Payne (who told a touching little story of the manner in which two young girls had been rescued and taken in at 200, Euston-road), Mr. Ireton, Mr. Schoburgh, a coloured minister from Jamaica, Mr. Stuart Thorpe, and Mr. E. W. Thomas.

MISSION WORK IN SPAIN.

Madame Lopez Rodriguez, of Figueras, writes:—

About a fortnight ago it blew a very heavy gale from the mountains, and we thought no one would venture out. But twenty-one persons came, and three men stayed behind to say that they had taken Christ for their Saviour, and were decided to follow Him, a step which needs some courage in a working man out here. Two of them having been known in the town as bad characters, their changed lives give a good testimony to the Gospel. One evening my husband went to preach at San Pedro Pescador, and was much cheered to find at least two hundred fishermen (mostly) and their wives, anxious to hear the Gospel.

We have just opened a new Sunday-school in a village some ten miles off, with an attendance of sixty, and a number of children stood outside who dared not enter, as the priest told the village schoolmaster and mistress that they were to beat every child who went to the Protestant school. Every Thursday night we have a prayer-meeting. Last time forty were present.

The medical branch of the Mission also grows in the estimation and appreciation of the people. Many of its bitterest enemies, being cured, have become its helpers. A year ago it was unsafe for anyone to attempt the distribution of Protestant literature in Castillon, one of the most priest-ridden towns in Spain. Now, however, a large number are coming to the Mission for treatment. In less than two years over a thousand patients have been attended to, and in many cases have been visited in their homes.

Rev. J. Stewart Mathias, Aldringham Vicarage, Saxmundham, acts as treasurer to the Mission.

PLYMOUTH Y.M.C.A.—The year just ended was one of steady effort, attended by good results in the various agencies and adjuncts of this Association. The report, lately issued, concludes with a suggestion that employers should encourage their young men to join the Association, that they may come under good influence and be guarded from temptation, to the benefit of themselves and their employers. The balance-sheet shows a small sum in hand.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

FOOD FOR THE HUNGRY.

Night Shelter for the Homeless.
Help for Body and Soul.

FOR some time now the starving condition of great numbers of the London poor has appealed imploringly to us for help. Not only are there thousands who walk the streets of this great city with its palatial mansions, abounding wealth, and costly luxury, not knowing where to find a meal of bread, but there are numbers more who have nowhere to lay their heads save in the shadow of the railway arches, in the recesses of the bridges, or on the seats in the public parks and squares.

To help these poor, hungry, helpless crowds for both this world and the next has long been our earnest desire, but how to do it with the slender means we can command has been the puzzling question.

We have now decided to do something towards alleviating this dreadful misery, and have taken large premises in the West India Road, Limehouse, in which we propose to establish a very cheap food depôt, and also to furnish a sleeping shelter for the night.

We propose to supply a basin of soup to the children for a farthing.

Soup and bread, ditto, for a halfpenny.

Soup for an adult, a halfpenny.

Soup and bread for one penny; together with other food—coffee, tea, and cocoa—at similar prices.

It is also proposed to find a man, a warm and clean sleeping place for a night with some little refreshment for a penny.

In conjunction with this alleviation of the temporal miseries of these hungry homeless ones, it is intended by meetings, held morning and evening, and by the most direct personal dealing, to seek their salvation.

Perhaps a more hopeless class than this wretched crowd, which lives continually in the land of the shadow of death, does not exist. They are ordinarily considered beyond help, but The Salvation Army has faith in the power of the Holy Ghost and the devotion of its workers to reach some, at least, of those who have long since abandoned themselves to despair.

We hope, by the exercise of the greatest care, to be able to make this scheme very nearly self-supporting, the feeding part of it entirely so. But we find the alterations, fitting of the building, supply of steam apparatus and other appliances will cost about £600. This we ask our friends to supply.

Mr. T. A. Denny has very kindly promised £100 if the whole sum can be raised at once without any lessening of the contributions to our funds.

Contributions can be sent to 101, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C., or to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Down Grade or Up Grade, Which?

Letters from Bishops, Clergymen, and distinguished Nonconformist Ministers representing the leading denominations will appear in the Christian Commonwealth, next week's issue, February 16. These letters are answers to the following questions propounded by the Editor of the Christian Commonwealth:—

1. Do you think it essential to Christian Fellowship and Co-operation that all Christians should believe in the inspiration of the Old and New Testaments, and if so in what sense?
2. Do you think it essential that any particular theory or view of the Atonement should be held; or do you think it is sufficient that a Christian should believe that "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures?"
3. Do you think that any special view of the Deity of Christ should be insisted upon, and if so what?
4. Do you think it essential that the future of the wicked should in any way be made a test of Christian Fellowship?
5. Do you think it essential that the two Christian Sacraments should be observed by the followers of the Lord Jesus: and if so, should they be observed as they were observed in apostolic times?
6. Do you regard definite articles of faith as necessary, or is the Word of God sufficient without a formulated statement of doctrine?

AT WORK IN NORTH CHINA.

THE following extracts of a recent letter from Miss A. G. Broomhall, who is stationed at Tai-yüen-fu, in the province of Shansi, give an interesting glimpse into missionary work among the women of China. The introductory paragraph, on the joy that comes from serving Christ in a heathen land, should prove a source of encouragement to all intending missionaries :—

I can never tell you how glad I am that the Lord allowed me to come to China : I get more and more glad. When I was undecided whether to come or not, someone said, "If you go you will regret it neither in this life nor the next." I have often thought of those words : they were true. Regret it ! I cannot thank God enough for the measure of fellowship with Jesus which life in a heathen land brings, and for the glorious privilege of being "put in trust with the Gospel of Christ." Fellowship with Jesus has been a subject much in our thoughts lately. Some of us feel we know very little of it compared with what we might know. The Lord is giving us grace to ask for a deeper knowledge of Him, for a truer fellowship with our blessed Redeemer, though we know this must mean suffering ; but is it not the most precious thing our God has to give us in the "little while" that lies between us and glory ? May He keep us true to Him.

This year we have had twenty-one baptisms in Tai-yüen, and expect to have more before long ; many are truly interested, and we believe we are going to see yet greater things. During the summer, street processions have been started on Sunday afternoons : of course we women folk can have no part in that sort of thing, but from what we hear they have been very successful, and I hope they will be continued. We want the people to see we are in dead earnest about their souls, it is so difficult to get them to look beyond this life. The work among the women has a brighter outlook than it has had since I have been here, they are coming about us more freely ; on Sundays we generally have more than forty, last week I think there were nearly sixty. A new chapel is being built ; the present one is not nearly large enough.

I have two Christian women living here, who are great helps in the work. One is no more than a girl, but she preaches the Gospel beautifully ; she reads the character, and when I have been out, has given the women Bible lessons. Just now the natives with us are being stirred up to more earnestness. We are getting them to seek the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The other day one woman, who is far from strong and has small feet, walked quite a long way to see two women who were interested in the Gospel, rather than wait for a cart another day. That sort of spirit rejoices our heart, and fills us with hope for the future.

HOLINESS MEETINGS AT BERMONDSEY.—During the past two months, meetings for the promotion of Scriptural holiness have been held weekly in Bermondsey. Denominational differences have been kept in the background, and ministers of various orders have taken part. While there has been much mutual edification, there has also been a manifest deepening of spiritual life.

"A CONTRAST IN A SOUTH LONDON PARISH."—This is the title of a tract which may be obtained on application to Rev. S. A. Selwyn, or Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, of St. James's, Hatcham. The parish presenting the "contrast" is none other than St. James's, Hatcham, where the old order was a very close imitation of Romish ritual and doctrine, but where at the present time good work is being done on evangelical lines. The parish is replete with religious agencies, which are the concern of many hearty labourers. The church is often too small to accommodate the worshippers who assemble, and, in view of this fact and of the special needs of the artisan classes, it is proposed to erect a mission church at Nynehead. This will cost £1500, a great part of which must be raised outside the parish.

WORK IN IRELAND.

IN June last we had a series of tent meetings in a little fishing village in the north of Ireland. The ten days were prolonged to nearly three weeks, but at the end of that time we were compelled to return to England. The desire of the people, however, to hear Gospel truth was so great that we went back in September, proposing to stay a month, but felt it impossible to leave until Christmas-time came round and obliged us again to do so.

Unable to obtain any building in which to hold the meetings, we had simply to gather the people into the house—the only little hall in the place being closed against us, chiefly, we are sorry to say, through the influence of the clergyman, who, with his fellow minister, seemed desirous that everything should remain in the cold, dead state in which we found it. Great, however, as was the opposition at first—on our opening night the drums were sent out in order to disturb the meeting, and a letter was received ordering the tent to be removed at once—God did not allow those to be disappointed who were so eager and willing to listen to the "truth as it is in Jesus." Night after night the people flocked to hear the Gospel, never seeming to weary, and undeterred by any kind of weather. The earnest, fixed attention of those poor fishermen, their wives, and children will long remain imprinted on the memory, and most encouraging and refreshing it was to see the numbers, especially amongst the young men and women, that yielded themselves to Christ, some of them coming out so brightly and decidedly on the Lord's side.

It gladdened our hearts to hear the frequent testimonies to the change that had taken place. One of the most decided conversions was a young man, whom we afterwards found had been a leader in the ranks of those who had, by beating the drums just outside the field where the tent was, sought to upset our first meeting. His bright, happy countenance used to testify to the firm hold tnat God's grace had of him, and the Bible became his constant companion.

On Sunday evenings the people walked miles to get to the meetings, and the place was so packed that overflow meetings had at last to be held, while again and again the poor things had to be turned away for want of room. As the time approached for us to leave, earnest prayer was offered that God would not allow the work to fall through. He heard, and answered. A large empty room was at length found, taken, cleaned, and papered, and although there was no one in the place to carry on the meetings, one or two Christians from a distance, who had become deeply interested, promised to do what they could. Will your readers ask that God may yet continue to bless abundantly these poor people, and also that He will send forth more labourers into dark Ireland, where there are fields indeed "white unto harvest" sadly calling for the tardy reapers ?

PASTOR CHINIQUY writes that more than two hundred Roman Catholics have broken the heavy and ignominious yoke of the Pope during the last twelve months, in the different places where it has been his privilege to preach the Gospel. Among those converts there are two priests, who are now preaching Christ and Him crucified.

MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM, Secretary of the Open-air Mission, writes from Hastings :—I see in THE CHRISTIAN that my illness is mentioned. As exaggerated statements are abroad, perhaps you would kindly state that the doctor considers my loss of strength is owing to overwork. He sent me here for a fortnight. I am thankful that, by God's blessing, I am feeling much stronger, and hope soon to resume my work again. My experience ought to be a warning to Christian men to moderate their exertions. I have kept careful daily records, and find that during the last ten years I have travelled more than 12,000 miles a year, and have given an average of more than 500 public addresses a year, indoors and out, during the same period.

THE "STRANGERS' REST."

THERE was a large gathering of workers and friends at the Strangers' Rest last Friday, to hear an address from Mr. Hudson Taylor on "Have faith in God," and to commend to God Mrs. Osborne and other labourers departing for the Cape. Mr. Isaac, the secretary, pointed out the field open for service for the Lord in the work of the Rest and at the Lads' Institute, and asked prayer for more workers and for the necessary pecuniary help.

Mr. Hudson Taylor then followed with a most instructive and practical address, an abstract of which we hope to give in our next issue.

Mrs. Osborne asked prayer for herself and others going with her to the Cape. She was brought to the Strangers' Rest to work before she went out there seven years ago. She said, "One of the greatest blessings in the work abroad is that we are cast upon God, and then we learn to know Him." Miss Wright and Miss Scott go with her to work amongst the soldiers and sailors, and the latter also amongst the young women out there. Mr. Howe, who is returning to the Cape, drew attention to the great need for workers out there, Cape Colony alone being about five times the size of England. The diamond and gold fields attract immense numbers of people, and offer good centres of work for the Lord.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN STIRLING.

THIS evangelist recently concluded a successful mission in Stirling. A sign of the unity which prevailed in the work was given at the closing meeting, in the fact that ministers of five denominations took part in the service. The mission seems to have pervaded the entire community by its influence ; and we do not know that since the old days of the Kilsyth revival the town and neighbourhood have been so generally and deeply moved. Sections of the community which have scarcely been reached in previous movements, including many holding a position of great social influence in the town, have been much impressed. The chief subject of conversation, indeed, in the locality, has been this mission ; and one special effect has been that people have talked with each other about spiritual things in a way which would scarcely have been possible previously.

Looking at the human instrumentality, we attribute no little of Mr. Clarke's influence to his clear and reverent way of presenting the truth, the comprehensive plan of his series of addresses, the healthiness of his tone and teaching regarding the Christian life, and his refined and manly bearing. There had been much preparatory prayer previous to his coming ; and Mr. Clarke, it should be added, was much aided by the large band of ministers and Christian workers who welcomed him, and stood by him throughout. A. C.

LOWESTOFT SAILORS' MISSION.—For nearly forty years Mr. William Johnson has conducted this Mission, and the Home and Bethel in Commercial-road are institutions of great value in the town. More than that, the Lord has greatly blessed the Mission from the first. At present the Bethel stands in need of thorough renovation, and for this there is not sufficient money in hand.

FEMALE CONVALESCENTS FROM LUNATIC ASYLUMS.—The After-Care Association, for poor and friendless female convalescents, on leaving asylums for the insane, is doing a good work. There are about 30,000 women, of various callings and conditions of life, in lunatic asylums in England and Wales. Of these a large number are discharged in the course of the year, recovered. Many of these are entirely friendless, but anxious to earn their own living, and are often very capable of doing so. The chief object of the Association is to facilitate the re-admission of poor and friendless female convalescents from lunatic asylums into social life. Information as to details may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. H. Thornhill Roxby, Emblewood, Osbaldeston-road, London, N.

LONDON'S WORKING WOMEN.

Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove.

PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

We make the following extracts from the interesting account given by Miss Meredith Brown at the recent opening of this Institute, The complete address will shortly be issued in neat pamphlet form.

It will be of interest to some to know that we are not now commencing a work amongst West-end factory girls, but are taking a new departure from a work started fifteen months ago in this district; and we are enlarging our borders by amalgamating with a small Institute where work amongst this class has been carried on for the last six years in another part of Mary-lebone, under the superintendence of Miss Handfield Jones and Miss Crichton Stuart. Their Mission was especially to the girls engaged in a large artificial flower factory. It may be asked, What led me to start a Mission to factory girls in this neighbourhood? Upon a warm, sunny evening in June, seated at a harmonium at the corner of a street, and whilst singing to the gathered crowd, a band of girls, with thick heavy fringes over their foreheads, wide-brimmed hats with coloured feathers, and large white aprons, stopped to listen. "Ain't it fine? Don't she sing nice?" remarked one of them. "Come along, Poll!" was the rejoinder; "I ain't a-goin' to stop for that 'ere man;" and, seeing her companion not inclined to move, she added, "I say, Poll, you're gettin' religious now, you are!" As we held our open-air services Sundays and Saturdays, I was able to observe (besides the swarms of uncared for children, shouting and yelling in the streets) the number of girls dressed in the uniform I have described strolling along, sitting wearily on doorsteps, or standing at the corners of public-houses. Our mission services did not reach them. Here were thousands of girls in the West-end, neglected by their drunken parents, and totally ignorant of a Saviour's love—heathen at home!

Stirred by a sense of the deep need, I was led to start an Evening Home for working girls in a mission-house in this neighbourhood. Numbers of girls attended nightly, and it was found that the sphere reached was a large one. Such a Home draws girls from the whole of the North-west of London. But the difficulties of working in a mission-hall were greater than we anticipated, for the girls were lower down than we had supposed; and we felt that if we were to do them permanent good, a separate building was indispensable—an Institute—where, under a resident matron, the girls might be gathered in at the dinner hour, as well as to evening classes; a place to which they might come for advice and sympathy, and where they might be trained to cookery, house work, and other branches calculated to raise them.

Now a word or two as to the future, and what we propose to do. Outside the Institute there will be factory and district visitation: public-house visitation; missions to the doors of theatres and music-halls. In the Institute we shall have cheap dinners, a coffee-bar open every night, musical drill or games, and various occupations, such as sewing, mending, dress-making, and instructive classes. We also propose to teach cookery, and the recreation-room will be used as a laundry during the day. At 9.30 every evening the girls will all meet in the hall for family prayers. On Saturday nights we are arranging concerts, magic lantern entertainments, services of song, &c., to keep the girls out of low places of amusement, and these entertainments are open to the fathers, mothers, and friends. Upstairs we have two dormitories (only one of which is at present furnished) for girls who have no homes, or whose homes are overcrowded. One room in the Institute I have furnished for myself, that I may have little private parties with the girls, and see them individually. Last spring, once a fortnight, I invited the girls, four at a time, to tea in my own house, which plan I found most effectual in bridging over the distance that separated their lives from mine; and such was the intense enjoyment which these simple entertainments gave that it was with difficulty when ten o'clock came that I could induce the girls to leave me, and this part of the work I hope to carry on with the general supervision.

On Sundays we have arranged Bible-classes and Sunday-evening meetings. Last, but most important, are our Training Homes. One to hold ten girls is at Southend, under the superintendence of Mrs. Amand Routh, and specially intended for girls who have received blessing, a plan by which they are removed from their surroundings and trained to service and emigration. The other, for six girls, is supported entirely by Miss Paschkoff. Both have excellent matrons, and the change in the girls who have gone to these Homes is marvellous. During Miss Handfield Jones's work and ours in the past, not a few girls have been brought to the Saviour. When these girls become Christians, they are new creatures in every sense of the word—the fringes, coloured feathers, and aprons, all disappear.

We are deeply grateful to the ladies and gentlemen who have contributed so generously to the work. Many are to-day praying for this work all over the country. I trust it may be said of the Shaftesbury Institute: "The Lord, when He writeth up the people, shall count that this man was born there." Finally, we need workers. We ask not only your aid and your sympathy, but we want yourselves for the work. For God so loved the world that He gave His Son!

Young Women in the West.

A pleasant evening was arranged for their members by the managers of the central branch of the Y.W.C.A., on Saturday week, at the Portman Rooms, Baker-street. The large hall was crowded with young people (not excluding young men) gathered from the houses of business in the neighbourhood, and a very interesting and profitable time was spent. Through the kindness of two friends, the 700 members received invitations to tea, provided in a second hall. As all could not be served at once, during the interval the Misses Stanley arranged music and singing, and there was time for social intercourse.

Lord Kinnaird opened the meeting, and was followed by Rev. W. Mowll, who gave a hearty welcome, exhorting those present, not only to read, but to study their Bibles. Rev. James Neil gave his interesting lecture, entitled, "Joppa to Jerusalem."

The programme for the quarter at the Central Institute (17, Old Cavendish-street) is full of variety, as the aim of the managers is to meet the requirements of those who are engaged in business all day, and to provide recreation for their evening hours. The reading-room is always open for quiet and rest. Classes are held for book-keeping, arithmetic, dress-cutting, French, writing, drawing, cooking, singing, shorthand, English grammar, reading, and dictation. On Tuesdays Miss Ely is "at home," and is always glad to see any who are in need of counsel or help. The Institute is becoming a centre, not only for work within its own walls and in its own neighbourhood, but its members help other branches. The membership fee of the Association is 1s.; of the Central Institute, 1s. 6d. a quarter, but its doors are always open to non-members. Ladies (and gentlemen, too) are invited to visit 16a and 17, Old Cavendish-street.

Besides the evening work, the rooms in Old Cavendish-street are the centre of the work of the Y.W.C.A. all over London; here are the Travellers' Aid office, and the Park Visitors' department. The Association is spreading in all directions, and a special department has been formed in order to push the work among factory girls. All information can be had from the hon. secs., Mrs. H. Arbuthnot and the Hon. Emily Kinnaird; or at the office, 16a and 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

Factory Girls of East London.

EDINBURGH CASTLE.

The large hall of the Edinburgh Castle Coffee Palace, Rhodeswell-road, Burdett-road, London, E., was the scene of very gratifying proceedings on Tuesday evening, last week, when the factory girls of East London were entertained to tea by a friend of Dr. Barnardo's Homes and Mission. This treat to factory girls has become an annual institution, being connected with the Factory Girls' Club and Night Schools, which are held in a room adjoining the hall. The spacious building was bright and comfortable, and before the proceedings commenced Dr. Barnardo addressed his army of helpers on the best way to make the gathering happy and successful. This was a very necessary measure, as it is at best a difficult task to maintain order and decorum in a meeting of over two thousand lively girls.

The large company of guests consisted of workers at the match, jam, jute, rush, and rope factories of the district. In the large hall no fewer than 1820 girls sat down to tea, and in the small hall 350. The guests, numbering in all 2170, were easily packed into the larger building after tea, and entertained in a manner which they seemed to appreciate most thoroughly. Dr. Barnardo was very successful in manipulating the meeting, and he evidently enjoyed very cordially the scene of happiness presented by the girls. The many helpers and friends present were manifestly pleased with the proceedings, and the meeting was clearly just what the supporters of the movement desired. The fare consisted of tea, cake, bread and butter, and sandwiches. The commands to fill mugs with tea and distribute the bags of food were greeted with loud cheering, and a second "go" at tea caused great delight. It was observed that after tea most of the girls had in reserve some bread and cake to take to their homes.

Dr. Barnardo's remarks to the girls were few but timely. Brief Gospel addresses were also delivered by Ned Wright and Mr. J. B. Wookey. Madame Rich and Miss Goodhew rendered songs, to the accompaniment of the organ; the band from the Stepney Home played selections; and the hand-bell ringers and pipers from Leopold House gave performances. All these efforts pleased the girls. In the course of the evening the prizes for regular attendance and successful work were distributed to girls who attend the evening classes held in connection with the Coffee Palace. Dr. Barnardo remarked that some time ago he expressed a willingness to give prizes to girls who would, at the class, make their own dresses, but he was sorry to find that no one was then recommended for such a prize. It gave him great pleasure, this year, to find that five girls had been awarded prizes for making their own dresses at the class. The prize-distribution was an interesting portion of the evening's proceedings, the prizes consisting of articles of utility.

The behaviour of the girls was better than on any previous occasion. There were signs of improvement; still, many were objects of pity, and many were pictures of misery. On all hands there were sad indications of neglect; forms that might have looked fair bore a repulsive appearance. The picture was one calculated to excite the sympathy of philanthropists and move the hearts of Christians. The momentary recreation was certainly welcome to the girls, and it is hoped that impressions for good will be among the results.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

On the same evening there was a much smaller gathering of young women engaged in factories, in the new Home of Industry, Bethnal Green-road. As they were chiefly those who attend evening classes at the old Home in Commercial-street, and are thus brought under good Christianising influences, the aspect of the audience and the engagements of the evening were of a very encouraging kind. Miss Turner, who superintends the work, was there, as well as Miss Macpherson, Mrs. Merry, and many other helpers, all of whom were active in ministering to the enjoyment of their toiling young sisters.

After a hearty social tea, a delightful hour or so was spent with the magic lantern, which carried the deeply interested company to some of earth's fairest spots across the Atlantic. Some of the slides represented those who have been the subjects of Miss Macpherson's emigration work, and who, from a very low estate indeed, have been lifted into circumstances of comfort and happiness. These were made the text for earnest interlocutory chats and explanations from Miss Macpherson, Mrs. Merry, Miss Stock, and other lady friends, who did not forget to press home on the girls that the true secret of earthly happiness is found alone in saved and consecrated lives. Altogether it was a delightful and enjoyable evening, and one that must carry with it into the future the happiest of memories.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

(Compiled mainly from the February Magazines.)

PERSIA.

REV. DR. BRUCE, of the C.M.S., earnestly appeals for more labourers for Persia. He asks for at least four men, full of the Spirit of God, for the work in Baghdad, Julfa, and Bushire.

UNIVERSITIES MISSION.

There has been a disastrous fire at Magila, the chief station in U-Sambara of the Universities, Mission to Central Africa. The losses of property and the hindrance to Mission work, have been very great.

MEN AND MONEY WANTED.

The secretaries of the London Missionary Society emphasise their need of an additional £10,000 a year, and ten new ordained missionaries, as well as lady and medical missionaries, to carry on their existing work.

BIBLE TRANSLATION.

The Bible Society have received nine chapters of Matthew's Gospel in the Aino language, the work of the C.M.S. missionary to the Aino aborigines of Yesso, Japan, Mr. John Batchelor. The whole of Matthew is now in MS.

A NEW MISSION TO NORTH AFRICA.

Dr. and Mrs. Nystrom and their niece from Stockholm left England on January 10, to found a new Swedish Mission in Algeria. Dr. Nystrom goes in connection with the Swedish Missionary Association, and prayer is desired on behalf of this new departure.

AMERICAN MISSIONS.

The annual report of the Foreign Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America states that in Japan the advance is rapid; in Africa the work is being systematically prosecuted; in China the evangelistic work is largely conducted by the native clergy, as well as the parochial work among the converts.

The labours of the missionaries of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, at Kwange, on the Ogri River, West Coast of Africa, has of late been greatly blessed. Two hundred of the Galwas have become earnest inquirers, and over 150 have decided for Christ. The Society also reports great prosperity in the work in Syria. The same is true of Persia. Of Siam, it is said that, though the first missionaries could scarcely get a footing, every place is now open to them. From the northern provinces in the Laos field every letter is full of surprise and thanksgiving at the success achieved. In South America openings are abundant, but more men are wanted.

NORTH CHINA.

The Bishop of North China has commissioned Mr. Sprent to commence work at Tai-an-Foo, a large city about four hundred miles south of PeKing, where no foreigners have hitherto resided.

A PIONEER MEDICAL MISSIONARY.

Rev. Peter Parker, M.D., of whom it has been said that "he opened China to the Gospel at the point of his lancet," died at Washington, U.S., on January 10, in his 84th year. To him is due, under God, a large portion of the success which has attended Christian missions in China.

BAPTISM OF JEWS.

On Christmas day eight Jews and Jewesses were baptized in Christ Church, Mount Zion, Jerusalem. This is the largest number ever admitted into the Church there at one time. Several other Jewish candidates are awaiting baptism. The three daughters of Joseph Rabinowitz, the leader of the Hebrew Christian movement in South Russia, have lately been baptised.

A CHRISTIAN PRINCE AND PRINCESS.

The Church Missionary Gleaner for February has an excellent full-page photographic group of the Kanwar Harnàm Singh, of Kaparthàla, Punjaub, and his wife, the Kanwaràni, with three of their children. As our readers will recollect, they were among the visitors from India who came to England for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee. They have left their three sons in England to be educated, in the charge of a Christian family.

LIBERIA.

One of Bishop Taylor's missionaries, writing from Liberia, thus speaks of the natives of that country:—"The people universally believe in one God. They treat us with much respect, and could teach many a white man lessons in kindness and interest in each other's welfare. Often have we been touched by their friendly greetings, and the respect shown by children in meeting adults, when it is customary to kiss the hand in token of esteem.

SIERRA LEONE.

Miss E. G. Henderson, of the Church Missionary Society, writes to us from the Annie Walsh School, Freetown, Sierra Leone, on December 23:—"This school, of which I am principal, is for girls. We have a Y.W.C.A. numbering about fifty members and hold fortnightly meetings for Bible-readings and prayer." Miss Henderson thinks Sierra Leone deserves to have a new name: no longer the "White Man's Grave," but the "White Man's Garden."

CHRISTIAN KARENS OF BURMAH.

In an address to the Edinburgh University Missionary Association, Sir Charles Bernard, late chief commissioner in Burmah, who has two sisters working as missionaries of the Church of Scotland in India, gave some interesting details regarding the Christian Karens. They number about 200,000, being a third of the Caren people, and there are from 500 to 600 congregations, practically, if not entirely, self-supporting. It is their practice to set apart so much of the produce of their land as will suffice for the support of their native pastors, and this they do before they appropriate any of their harvest to themselves. Nor are they content with self-support. They send missionaries into Siam and regions beyond, where hardships and privations of no ordinary character have to be endured.

MOHAMMEDANISM.

Those who are interested in the discussion with respect to the Christianising of Mohammedan lands, ought to read the opening article by Rev. C. C. Fenn, in the February Church Missionary Intelligencer. He says:—

"Of all the fields occupied by the Society, or likely to be occupied by it, British possessions are by far the most advantageously circumstanced places for schemes of this nature to be carried out. There only are to be found large numbers of Mohammedans so situated, through the presence of a firm and just government, that toleration will be secured for free and open discussion with Mohammedans, and for free and open profession of faith in Christ by such Mohammedans as may desire to make it. And yet what is the amount of missionary strength applied to the evangelisation of Mohammedans in the British possessions? In West Africa the work can scarcely be said to exist. In the whole of British India, out of the Panjab, but three of the Society's missionaries are devoted to this enterprise. How can we wonder, then, at the scantiness of the success obtained?"

OPPOSITION IN CHINA.

The English Presbyterians have been trying for some time to find a footing for mission work in Chang-poo, but a bitterly hostile and determined native faction have as yet successfully prevented the projected advance.

SOUTH AMERICA.

A recent number of the Valparaiso Record contains an earnest plea for missionary work in Peru and Bolivia. The writer says:—"The extremest forms of idolatrous practice may be seen in the churches of their inland towns and villages. People there are without God and without hope. So-called Christian ceremonies are really orgies of dissipation, revels, instead of acts of devotion, feasts, not of piety, but intemperance. As missionary fields they are not sown, nor irrigated, but positively shunned." The South American Missionary Society is about to commence a mission among the Paraguayan Chaco Indians. The number of those congregated on the east of the River Paraguay is about 2000. Their language is entirely unknown. Mr. Henriksen, of the Bible Society, considers the opening for missionary work very favourable.

EASTERN EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

Rev. A. Downes Shaw has been invalided home, and his absence will be greatly felt at Frere Town, where he has for some time done most valuable work. From Mombasa comes the news that an old mission house has been again taken possession of. No systematic evangelistic work has ever yet been carried on in Mombasa town among the Mohammedans. People are already coming to Dr. Ardagh for medicine who cannot be reached otherwise; and he writes that a little later on there will be abundant work for a lady doctor for the zenanas, and for a nurse. Mr. Taylor has been itinerating in the Giriama country, and finds a ready hearing everywhere for the Gospel message.

From Chagga, Rev. E. A. Fitch writes that he is on increasingly friendly terms with King Mandara, but laments that he is still unable to commence directly evangelistic work.

THE C.M.S. MISSION TO INDIA.

Encouraging tidings continue to arrive from the missioners, telling of the progress of this mission. Rev. G. C. Grubb, speaking of Bombay, says that Hindus, Mohammedans and Parsees flocked to the Cathedral, and many spoke to him privately. The Parsee authorities took alarm, and set spies to note down the names of those who attended. At Poona, where Mr. Grubb and Colonel Oldham have since been labouring there has also been much blessing. Rev. Filmer Sulivan and Mr. E. Clifford have been at Calcutta, where "the mission has, indeed, been a most blessed time." Rev. H. E. Fox and Mr. Swann Hurrell report favourably as to Madras, "that a very real impression has been made on the people. Some of the students of the Christian College seem to have received the Gospel in power, and to have passed from a nominal to a real knowledge of Christ."

Mr. CHAS. INGLIS at the EAST END.

FOR nearly five weeks Mr. Chas. Inglis has been holding special meetings at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Perhaps no previous visit of his has been so blessed of God, as the one just brought to a close. From the first meeting to the last, anxious souls have gone into the inquiry-room seeking the Lord, and many have left rejoicing in Jesus.

Some of the cases of conversion have been very striking. One man was on his way to a music-hall, but felt compelled to go into the meeting, and so marked by the power of God was that meeting that the man, in the deepest agony of soul, cried out for mercy, during the address, and we believe left that night a new creature in Christ.

The last Sunday night of Mr. Inglis's visit will not easily be forgotten. The huge building was crowded with nearly 5000 persons, who paid the greatest attention, as the preacher spoke on the solemn words, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting."

Mr. Inglis is now at Nottingham, where he expects to labour during the present month.

THE MARQUIS OF BUTE intends, it is said, to erect a Roman Catholic cathedral in the island of Bute, at a cost of £16,000.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. A. Lamb, of Melton Mowbray.

Our good friends at Hoxton Hall, E., celebrate the tenth anniversary of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance movement tomorrow (Saturday) evening, We trust there will be a large muster of sympathisers to rejoice with Mr. Noble and his helpers in what God has enabled them to achieve during these ten eventful years. They will also need cheer and encouragement in their future service, for the battle still rages fiercely, and the foe is strong.

A correspondent promised to pay us £5 if we would insert the following note. We were very pleased to accept the offer, which has been duly fulfilled, and shall remit the £5, with a like sum added by ourselves, to Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage. The note is this:—

> Those persons who censure Mr. Spurgeon's refusal to disclose the names of the preachers of the New Theology, might well ask themselves whether it would be just to call upon a lecturer on Sobriety or Morality for the names of the persons who transgress in the town in which he delivers the lecture. The disclosure of such names, were it generally adopted, would soon put an end to all preaching and lecturing, by poverty or imprisonment.

We shall be pleased to insert any reasonable number of notes of the same length and tenor, or in reply, for £5 each, and to send the proceeds to the Stockwell Orphanage.

Some weighty observations were made by Mr. Justice Butt in his "summing up" in a divorce case which recently occupied the attention of his Court for six days. As to the question of the drink, he said:—

> It is a common experience in this Court that there is nothing which more frequently leads to adultery, as it leads to other crimes, than the habit of excessive drinking.

A little judicious reflection might, perhaps, have led the judge to omit the adjective "excessive," for he must know well enough that there is an inherent tendency in alcoholics towards excess. The remark, however, qualified as it is, ought to carry great weight, and to quicken the zeal of all temperance reformers in seeking to remove out of the way this foe to family peace and purity.

In the course of the same charge to the jury, Mr. Justice Butt had occasion to allude to what is covertly termed "the social evil." One of the witnesses in the case was a young woman who had led an openly sinful life, but professed to be reformed. Her demeanour in Court was, however, of a highly unsatisfactory nature. This led the judge to say that, though sorrow and commiseration were the feelings which one ought mainly to cherish towards these unhappy creatures, often "more sinned against than sinning," the fact could not be overlooked that such a life as they lead inevitably produces a spirit of recklessness and disregard for truth. This only confirms the general experience of all who have had a share in rescue work, and who know something of its discouragements. And here also we find an added plea for the strengthening of preventive effort in all its varied forms.

A recent issue of The Agricultural Gazette contains an interesting sketch of the rise and growth of the leviathan seed-producing establishment of Messrs. Sutton & Sons, Reading. The story is a striking illustration of the success that attends business enterprise and commercial probity. In a postscript to a brief autobiographical note by Mr Martin Hope Sutton, the editor of the Gazette says:—

> Mr. Sutton's whole savings were devoted in the very outset, as they have been largely devoted since, to works of kindness and benevolence. His whole life has indeed been an illustration of both sides of his character. In illustration of the latter—as Sunday-school teacher and superintendent—founder, too, of one of the earliest ragged schools, distinct from national and Sunday-schools—observer and promoter of every good thing, in connection not only with his parish and his town, including a Y.M.C.A., of which he has been chairman forty-one years, but with the large body of young men whom the firm have gathered round them in their employment—it was not without reason that on the occasion of the jubilee celebration of the firm, in 1882, we referred to their various benevolent and religious institutions for the benefit of their people, as including everything that a father could desire for son, or brother for his brother.

Professor Mivart must, indeed, be sorry that he ever ventured to refer to the case of Galileo, perhaps the one subject which of all others a Roman Catholic ought to avoid. It is interesting to find him now declaring that he had no intention of compromising the infallibility of the Pope by contending that a mistake was made in the case of Galileo by theologians, cardinals, and the Sovereign Pontiff. However the professor and his compeers may quibble, the circumstances of Galileo's condemnation for heresy in holding that the earth revolves round the sun affords a complete disproof of Papal infallibility.

The silence of infallibility is, however, more remarkable than its utterances, but the Pontiffs have learned the wisdom of proceeding slowly. There are to-day scores of questions upon which it would be of tremendous importance to a Romanist to have accurate views. But the Pope refrains from giving a word of guidance to his flock, and is, perhaps, waiting until he sees on which side the scale goes down. It certainly does not need the gift of infallibility to enable anyone to be wise after the event.

Theory must give way to fact. Great stress is sometimes laid upon the alleged eagerness of the working-classes for the Sunday opening of libraries, but Canon Stowell, in a letter to The Manchester Courier, puts a somewhat different complexion on the matter. He points out that at Chester it was discontinued after three months' trial; at Maidstone the results of three years' Sunday opening were so unsatisfactory that the practice was abandoned; at Stoke-on-Trent it was found, inter alia, that those whom it was intended to benefit were conspicuous by their absence, and after four years' trial the experiment was given up; and one month's experience of Sunday opening was sufficient to convince the Worcester town council of its inexpediency. With regard to the fallacy that it would be a counter-attraction to the public-house, the Canon aptly suggests that "a more excellent way of promoting the interests of temperance would be to close the public-houses on Sundays." The fact is that in this anti-Sunday movement the working-classes are being made the stalking-horse for the idle and frivolous who find the Day of Rest hang heavily upon their hands.

Mr. Sankey has rejoined Mr. Moody, and is assisting in his meetings at Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. Denham Smith has passed another week free from suffering, and the improvement of his strength recently observed is still maintained.

The working of Prohibition laws in America well deserves investigation by practical Englishmen, more especially as, with the salutary progress of the Temperance movement in this country, the prospects of the adoption of similar legislation for ourselves are becoming more promising every day. The law has been found on the whole to work very satisfactorily in Kansas, despite the prognostications of the antagonistic and the lukewarm. A decision recently given by the supreme court in the United States has settled the difficulty on the score of compensation. The manufacturers and purveyors of liquor had claimed to have the losses entailed upon them by the law made good, but the court decided that the depreciation in the plant, buildings, &c., of the liquor trade could not be considered in law to be "a seizure of property for public use," and that therefore no case lay for compensation. This verdict should encourage other States which have not yet adopted the Prohibition law to entertain it, and must be warmly welcomed as a most important triumph in the crusade against the evils of drink.

Professor de Launay, lecturing on the Catacombs, said that, when travelling from Saratoga to Montreal, he was shown on the slopes of the Adirondack Mountains the tomb of John Brown, and the cottage where his family reside. He was hanged for striking, at Harper's Ferry, in the interest of the slave, the first blow which led to the American Civil War. M. de Launay asked if the family treasured and showed to visitors the rope with which he was hanged, or a representation of the gallows on which he was executed. The reply was, "Certainly not. Who ever heard of such a thing?" Yet professing Christians wear the representation of the ignominious cross on which their Lord by wicked hands was crucified and slain.

One of the first symptoms of the declension which followed the ages of the Apostles and martyrs was the praise of the cross in such artificial, extravagant, and unscriptural words as these:—

Bend thy boughs, thou Tree of Glory,
  Thy relaxing sinews bend,
And the weight of the world's Saviour
  On thy bosom gently tend.

O Tree of Glory, Tree of Light,
  O Tree with heavenly beauty dight.
One and only noble tree,
  Sweetest wood and sweetest iron,
Sweetest weight sustaining free.

And this is not only continued by Romish and Ritualistic churches; for even some who are nothing if not orthodox and evangelical sing—

The Cross! the Cross! oh that's our gain,
Because on that the Lamb was slain.

This is not the thought of the Apostle, who said, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world." He always speaks of the shame and humiliation of the cross, and glories in it only because he glories in suffering shame with and for his Lord.

After the praise of the cross, as the tree of life, comes the praise of sin:—"O felix culpa! quæ tantum et talem meruit salvatorem" (O blessed sin! which deserved such and so great a Saviour). This was an utterance of St. Augustine's, and shows how far a good man may be led, if he gets out of the highway of truth into some by-path meadow of error. The next step would be the heathen praise of the serpent, as the benefactor of the human race, because he was the giver of knowledge, which is power.

The Roman execution of Jesus painted by Verestchagin gives probably a more accurate conception of the crucifixion than any other representation in existence. Placed between a picture of the Russian execution of Nihilists by hanging on the one hand, and the British execution of Sepoys by blowing from the guns on the other, we feel that the death of the cross is more degrading than that of the gallows, and more barbarous than that of the gun. Gazing upon this picture, and with the thoughts reflected from those on either side of it, it is impossible to speak of those heavy timbers, with the tortured form suspended therefrom, in the false and sickly sentiment of the mediæval poets.

In a trenchant article on the religious state of South London, The Church of England Temperance Chronicle shows that if Christianity is not "in possession" the drink is; and that so long as the latter fact is true, the former follows as a matter of necessity. Here is the gist of our contemporary's indictment:—

> Let anyone test, by the rules of common sense and experience, the strength of combined opposition on the part of fifty public-houses in a single parish, and he will cease to wonder that the church is not thronged by poor parishioners. Who then is responsible for this, the foremost among many factors of misery, immorality, and irreligion in South London? We have no hesitation in saying that the sin and responsibility lie at the door of the nation and legislature; above all, of the Churches, which have never grappled conscientiously and courageously with the foe that has been so long sapping the life, moral and physical, of the country. The hard-working clergy are doing all they can to help the nation, but the nation cares not to help the clergy; and then there is a chorus of surprise, we had almost said indignation, that so little is accomplished by church and chapel for the masses. It is the drink which nullifies self-denying effort and baffles the most careful organisation; and as we listen to the chorus of horror that rises from every section of the Christian community over The Record's exposure of facts, we cannot help thinking there must be a strong element of Pharisaism or of self-deception in our national religious life. What section of the Christian Church has, as a united whole, risen to fight in real earnest against the sin of intemperance, to lessen—if possible, to remove altogether—the facilities for indulgence in this bestial vice, and do away with the pitfalls and traps which an overgrown traffic has mercilessly multiplied for the destruction of the people?

The easiest way to help Christianity into possession in South London, as in other parts of our great city, is to dispossess the drink. Until we do that, we may lament and wring our hands in vain.

The British Weekly is conferring a weekly benefit on its readers by its exposure of the temptations of Tempted London. The music halls and variety theatres of London, of which the latest issues speak, are not worse than those of the provinces, and both are disgusting and demoralising in the extreme. It is a fact that while high-class theatrical performances are witnessed with composure by large houses, low-class entertainments are attended, and songs having an immoral drift are listened to, by crowded audiences, which never weary in according cheers and applause. This conclusively shows that the tendency of the popular theatre is the opposite of elevating.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, preaching on "The Administration of Justice," on a recent Sunday afternoon, in St. James's Hall, said:—

> I have studied verdicts and judgments for years, and my blood has often boiled within me when I have noticed the fearful leniency with which crimes against women are treated, and the yet more fearful severity with which the crimes of poor women are punished. There was a case the other day of a poor starving girl who left her child behind her in the hope that someone would take it, and thus save them both, perhaps from death. For this she was sent to penal servitude for five years. On the other hand, I read to you two or three Sundays ago the cases of men who, for nearly murdering their wives, got only three or four months' imprisonment.

There is no doubt that much depends sometimes upon the health and temper of our judges. Christian people cannot but realise the necessity that the seat of justice should be occupied by pure and reasonable men. With a high-minded Parliament we might secure laws that would leave less to the caprice of the judges.

Preaching a few days ago on "Midnight Manchester," Rev. Dr. Macfadyen said that he had personally investigated the condition of affairs in that city, with the result that his heart had been made heavier than it had ever been during his ministerial life. Indeed, he said that he took shame to himself that he had for twenty-five years presided over a church in Manchester without knowing the facts of the case; and, now he knew them, he dared not utter one-tenth part of what he had seen and heard. This is a statement calculated to sadden the heart. On it The Methodist Times remarks:—

> We are persuaded that if Christian ministers will but leave their book studies for awhile, and read the open book of the streets, we should soon hear that the churches are setting themselves in array to wage a hand-to-hand fight with our national vices. Preachers, we believe, sometimes find it difficult to choose texts for their discourses. A peep at midnight life might be of service to such brethren.

Mrs. Besant has been preaching from a text taken from the Old Testament, "Am I my brother's keeper?" A contemporary describes the deliverance as "a profoundly Christian and most beautiful sermon," and declares it to be "one of the brightest, and also saddest signs of the times that some of the most enthusiastic advocates of applied Christianity seem to be blinded against Christianity." It ought to be clear to discerning minds that those persons who are in this way called "advocates of applied Christianity" are only praising that which their efforts are totally powerless to produce or sustain. As sure as effect follows cause, so "applied Christianity" owes its origin to a spiritual relation to God in Christ. We have yet to learn, however, that Mrs. Besant is willing to be regarded as an "advocate of applied Christianity."

There is a singularly striking article in this month's Contemporary Review on the subject of "Islam and Christianity in India," the object of which is to deprecate the excessive training of converts in Western conceptions. For it is to this, the author thinks, that the comparative failure, as he views it, of missions in India is due. We have given the natives too exclusively Western views, while Islam meets them as an Oriental religion, and keeps them Orientals. That it is a mistake to denationalise the native Christians no one doubts; but what method would the writer have us pursue so as to avoid this? We do not at all share with him the belief that, if the English were to withdraw from India to-morrow, Christianity would die out. We are, on the contrary, convinced that it would remain and develope. We wish the tone of the article were more truly Christian; but, for an analysis of the Hindoo mind, and for a noble tribute by an outsider to the Christ-like zeal of the missionaries, it is most interesting.

In the same Review Dean Perowne concludes his essay on the Pentateuch, and we rejoice to find that so erudite a scholar sees no reason to depart from the received view. He allows, indeed, that, in its present form, the Pentateuch, or, as he prefers to call it, the Hexateuch, including Joshua, has been touched up by a later hand than Moses, but on the great question, the relative date of its contents, he is convinced that the priority of the "Priests' Code" in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers to the Book of Deuteronomy is, on critical grounds, by far the most probable solution of the problem.

We have received a long letter from "A Student for the Church," in which there are some sad statements. The writer says that not more than two out of every fifteen of the divinity students of his acquaintance are "out and out" for Christ. We should be glad of information on the subject from correspondents who are well qualified to form an opinion. What is the present spiritual condition of our theological colleges, so far as the students are concerned? Communications signed by their authors will be specially welcome.

M. Renan is generally more entertaining than trustworthy. His latest deliverance is on the spirit and genius of the French language; and, while the manner is that of the philosopher, the matter is that of the pseudo patriot. M. Renan is by no means moderate in the virtues he attributes to his mother tongue as an instrument of civilisation. He says:—

> Was there ever a language that so advanced sociability, free thought, and human rights, as French has done since it was first lisped twelve centuries back? Liberty, equality, fraternity, the French trilogy, has made the tour of the world. One of my Oriental friends has nearly worked a religious revolution is Persia with these three words. The doctors of the Kerbela came to the conclusion that there was nothing in the Koran equal to them, and that nothing short of a Divine revelation could have impelled a nation to utter them, and accept them as expressing the active principle of modern civilisation. Our French clarion, with its high thin notes, often becomes, no one can say why, a trumpet of Jericho.

The ideas thus put together are not wanting in attractiveness. But as there is an end of all earthly devices, so "liberty, equality, and fraternity" is a trilogy of distinctly limited operation. Much more than M. Renan is able to say of the "French clarion" may be affirmed of another trilogy which we would commend to his attention—Faith, Hope, and Love—and one which is potent for the attainment of everlasting results. Wherever it has dominion a heavenly spirit is breathed, even as the formula itself is heaven-breathed.

Rev. Dr. Badenoch has resigned the secretaryship of the Protestant Educational Institute, and is succeeded by the organising secretary, Mr. Geo. L. Thomson.

The Bishop of Jamaica is the latest witness against Canon Taylor. In reply to the latter's assertion that "in Jamaica the negroes nominally Christian are lapsing into Oboism," it is pointed out that, although much remains to be done before the Jamaicans are thoroughly Christianised—for fifty years do not suffice to eradicate the superstitions of centuries—yet the following manifest improvements have already been effected by the preaching of the Gospel: simple and pure Christian worship has taken the place of idols and gross savage rites and ceremonies; the negroes are learning to be honest, truthful, self-respecting, and industrious; the sanctity of marriage is becoming better understood: and—in the very land of rum, be it noted—"nothing is more striking than their temperance with regard to drink." The writer of this reply states that the only drunken persons he saw during the Jubilee celebration at Kingston were whites. With justice, therefore, it may be claimed that "the religion which can so mould and improve the character of its votaries is something more than nominal."

By the time these lines are in print Parliament will have assembled. Is it too much to hope that the present session will witness a serious effort to grapple with the many pressing social and domestic questions of the day? The housing of the poor, the causes and cure of the present distress, work for the working man (not the habitual loafer), intemperance, impurity, pauperism—these and similar matters clamour for attention. The first duty of a Government is to govern for the welfare of the people. Power is becoming more and more vested in "the masses," and, unless something is done to improve their condition, they may make their power felt in a forcible and unwelcome manner. Let statesmen and politicians lift these questions out of the mire of party strife and jealousy. Let citizens and electors sit loose to mere party ties, and support only those conscientious, earnest men who will enter St. Stephen's with the fear of God before their eyes.

Although no new facts of importance relating to the condition of the working classes, nor any new remedies, were brought forward by the representative deputation which waited upon the Prime Minister last week, yet it is well that the attention of the Government should be officially drawn to this question. The schemes advocated by the several speakers were three—a general inquiry as to the extent and nature of the distress throughout the country, state-aided emigration, and the prevention of the immigration of foreign paupers. Judging from the limited experiment of last year, it is doubtful whether any practical benefit would accrue from the first of these; the last two have been more than once advocated in these columns. The Prime Minister confined himself entirely to pointing out the difficulties in the way of each of these proposed remedies, and undertook that the matter should "have full and careful consideration." But it is earnestly hoped that this will mean something more substantial and practical than a Royal Commission, a big Blue Book, and then—the shelf.

With the great pressure on our space we have this week omitted our usual contribution for the young, but would direct the attention of our youthful readers to Mr. Neil's interesting lecture on "The Land and the Book."

It is stated that the King of Sweden and Norway refused either to congratulate the Pope upon his jubilee, or to send him a present. Certain influential parties are reported to have remonstrated with His Majesty, and to them the Swedish Government replied:—

> Our king is the monarch of a Protestant people and he sees no cause, as he feels no obligation, to do honour to the Pope.

On this The Standard has made the following sensible comment:—

> One cannot but respect a logical and conscientious declaration like this. If a man really see no cause to give another a present, and feel no obligation, it is very stupid and not quite honest to spend money and trouble in doing so. But how many of us have the courage of these sturdy Swedes?

Both in religion and politics these are days of much thoughtless compromise, and it is quite refreshing to read an incident showing at once religious consistency and political shrewdness in high places.

In this month's Nineteenth Century Professor Huxley writes ably on the matter of technical education. But does it not show some misgiving as to his position, that the Professor must always introduce, as he does here at considerable length, his peculiar beliefs as to the descent of man? Primitive men, he says, were low savages. They knew nothing of meum and tuum. But there arose the ethical man who taught this and introduced peace and civilisation. But do we now see anything corresponding to this? Where, out of the bosom of the savagery of Africa, New Guinea, or Australia, has the ethical reformer arisen? And why are we to believe that he was evolved from a low type of savages at the first?

In the same Review Miss Sewell enters a long protest against pedantic methods of education in girls' schools. She contends that there is a despotism of fashion in our present systems of teaching which is quite as bad as any other tyranny; that a uniform routine utterly unsuitable to some girls is indefensible; that to treat thoughts of great authors merely as affording scope for grammatical analysis is a kind of intellectual vivisection barren of any adequate result; and that the professors in girls' schools whose sole aim is to develop the intellect, may produce pedants, but not really educated women. There is hardly a modern question of more importance than this. Perhaps the fault lies more with those who frame our education codes than with those who administer them.

Thrift is not generally considered an English virtue. All the more reason, therefore, why its growth should be fostered, especially in early life. How much may be accomplished in this direction is shown by the results which have attended the working of the Liverpool Penny Banks Association, of which some particulars were given at the recent annual meeting. There are, it appears, one hundred and seventy-five of these penny banks connected with elementary schools on the Mersey, and last year the deposits, "made up of the pennies of poor children," amounted to £22,660, involving 682,350 transactions. At one school, it is stated, 75 per cent. of the boys, 77 per cent. of the girls, and 78 per cent. of the infants, were depositors. Such a large average must surely, however, be the exception rather than the rule, for in very many schools the majority of the children must be unable, from sheer poverty, to deposit anything; but is not the Liverpool experiment worth trying in other towns?

SHALL WE?

'This is wrote sarcastical."—J. Billings.

Shall we have, in our churches, fairs, suppers, teas, concerts, operettas, raffles, &c., as a means of raising money?

I say yes, by all means, and I beg you closely to consider the following reasons.

(1) We must have money.—No enterprise ever yet was set on foot and successfully carried on without money. We must have money. The more the better. These things bring in money. The conclusion is plain. And, besides, we can get more of it for less return in this way than in any other I know of, unless, maybe, it might be on Wall-street. Why, only the other night the Methodist Church cleared ninety dollars on a ring cake! I did hear that two young men got into a difficulty about it, and the police had to be called in before order could be restored, but don't say anything about it, as the church authorities want to keep it quiet, and I promised the person who told me not to mention it. And that might have been in our church. I mean the money, of course.

(2) We don't have to give so much ourselves.—The winters are getting to be very hard and long, and what with the drought in Texas, and all, I feel we can't be too careful, nor begin too soon to lay up for a rainy day, and I like, now and then, to squeeze a dollar out of those wicked fellows who hold the Church in such contempt, and talk so dreadfully about Church piety. It is a kind of balancing of the scales, and does me good.

(3) It enlists outsiders.—A great many people never are seen inside a church except on these occasions. How important, then, that the Church should devise ways to attract them thither. And, between you and me, we have to hustle to keep something that will draw nowadays. It used to be that a plain oyster supper would bring a good house, but now it's got to be a pink tea, or a Japanese tea, or something of that sort. It's too bad, I think. Why, Annie caught a dreadful cold at our Japanese tea last winter; she exchanged her high shoes for sandals (she was one of the waiters, and had to be in costume), and you don't know the trouble I've had with her since. The anxiety has kept me awake many a night; but, la! you have to have something new and attractive like that or you won't get a cent; and it's the money we want, you know.

(4) We must have recreation for our young people.—As the Church is so severe on dancing and theatre-going, we must have something to take their place. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," says the Bible [?], and I believe it. Yes, I know that some people say that religion compensates for these things. I would not hurt anybody's feelings, nor say anything that would be unpopular—not for the world; and, mind, I don't say there isn't any such thing, but what I do say is, that if there is, I don't know anything about it."—New York Observer.

MISS DE BROEN'S PARIS MISSION.

BY the blessing of God, many have come to the knowledge of Him through the Mission during the past year, and the present one opens with encouragement. In the very first week a young man rose, after one of the services, and gave thanks that Christ had saved him. Another man, who had been long visited by one of the evangelists, at last overcame his indecision, and in due course was invited to the special meeting of Christians—a peculiarly happy and friendly gathering. Two days ago he came for the first time, and at the end of the evening said, "I thought that in leaving my old friends and ways I should be entering a desert, but I find now that I have entered a happy family, and that the desert was where I was before."

The medical mission continues to bring many who would otherwise probably never hear of the love of God. People take any amount of trouble to come from far, and even in this extreme cold, which many of the sick dare not face, there are upwards of a hundred on each medical mission day. Last year the total attendance was 23,397. Among other touching letters received by Miss de Broen was the following:—"I can never say often enough that it is from you I have got bodily benefit and health of soul, which is much more precious. I am still ill, but have reason to be very grateful to the dear Saviour, for He is with me, and I live in precious communion with Him." Is it not worth while to work among the infidels of France to have, from time to time, such firstfruits?

Besides the medical mission, as above stated, the attendance at the other meetings last year was 25,257. That at the Sunday-schools 5392, and at the other schools (day, night, and Thursday), at all of which religious instruction is given, was 10,463; besides 3000 visits in the homes of the poor. 1534 Testaments were bought by the people; and we know many cases in which they are truly valued. 30,000 tracts were given. Add to this the work connected with the Orphanage of twenty children, and the many thousand conversations with the sick in the waiting-room.

It is anxious work keeping all going, and providing for the needs of the Mission. Amidst all the home work of England, let her still stretch out her hands to give of her bread to the perishing in Paris.

Belleville, Paris. A WORKER.

THE SHAFTESBURY INSTITUTE, BURTON-ON-TRENT.—The first quarterly tea-meeting of the members of the Y.W.C.A. and the Shaftesbury Institute, Burton-on-Trent, was held a few days ago, under the presidency of Mr. H. Wardle, M.P. It was stated in the course of the proceedings that fifty-two members had joined the Association.

HOLLOWAY EVANGELISTIC AND OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The annual report of this Mission tells of much blessing bestowed on the work during the past year. The indoor and open-air services have been well attended; free breakfasts and teas to the poor have occasionally been given; frequent visits have been paid to the sick and the dying, a number of fallen women have been induced to give up their life of sin, and lodging-house visitation and other agencies have been regularly carried on. The superintendent, Mr. H. Putterill, 28, Wray-crescent, Tollington-park, N., will send a copy of the report on application.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—We understand that Mr. James Knott, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, has just presented to the Council of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen a valuable 58-ton sailing yacht, suitable for their work amongst the smacksmen on the North Sea. It is to be hoped that this generous gift will stir up others to aid the Association in their much-needed efforts, especially in view of the fact that each acquisition to the Mission Fleet involves a heavy additional charge upon the general expenditure. The summary of work for 1887 shows that nearly 4000 cases were medically or surgically treated on the various vessels during the past year, and over 1700 services were held in the different fleets.

CURE for a DULL PRAYER MEETING.

IN the current number of THE CHRISTIAN TREASURY (6d. Marshall Bros.), there is a characteristic discourse on "Peter's Deliverance," by Rev. John McNeill, the popular Edinburgh Presbyterian pastor. We extract the following quotation:—

"He came to the house...where many were gathered together praying." Any man who cannot see a parable looking at him there should pray God to perform an operation on his eyesight, for he must be blind. What should one do who has got a great deliverance, but come into the company of God's people, to give us the benefit of it, to make our faces bright with the reflected glory that has fallen upon himself, to make our songs fuller, to take the cracked tone out of them, and to put a truer music into them by joining his voice in the choir? I do not suppose it took Peter very long to consider before he went straight away to the little house of prayer, where his friends were gathered in instant, earnest supplication for his deliverance, as the beginning of the chapter tells us. And some of you, perhaps, need this word, "Not orsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is." You remember that other time in the experience of the disciples, where they had been buffeted and threatened by the world; when they were let go they went to their own company. As surely as the horse makes for the stable door when he comes out of the shafts at the close of the day, so surely do Christians, when they are free, make for each other's presence, and for the place where prayer is wont to be made.

Well, if that kind of thing went on, what a delightful exercise prayer would be. How the prayer and the answer would be continually coming, one upon the heels of the other, and the prayer would be sublimated into praise. Here is the cure for a dull prayer-meeting: Set yourselves to pray for some definite and distinct object, with honest sincerity and dead earnestness—something that binds together your praying powers; that tests God's promises and tests your own earnestness. While you are doing that, the answer will come knocking at the door to get in, straight from heaven. You will rise off your knees and understand that prayer is a reality, because prayer will pass into praise. Why should such exercises ever stop? There are always plenty of things to be prayed for; and God will give definite answers, largely as there is definite thanksgiving for deliverances received. So the circle will go on—prayer, earnestness, strenuousness, almost agony; then a relaxing when the answer comes, and the sending up of special thanksgiving; then to it again in prayer for something else. This, I repeat, is the cure for a dull prayer-meeting.

MR. CHAS. COOK continues to hold large evangelistic meetings every Sunday night at the Metropolitan Music Hall, Edgware-road, which accommodates 2000 persons. An excellent choir does good service in singing the Gospel. On Tuesday evenings and Sunday afternoons meetings are held in the Hyde-park Hall, which has now been occupied by Mr. Cook for over fifteen years (and stands greatly in need of repairs). The address is, Stourcliffe-street, Edgware-road.

THE DOWN-GRADE CONTROVERSY.—At the annual meeting of the church worshipping at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, held a few days ago, a resolution was passed expressing sympathy with Mr. Spurgeon in his testimony for the truth, and endorsing his action in withdrawing from the Baptist Union. A meeting of London ministers educated at the Pastors' College was held on Friday last, when a resolution was passed protesting against the censure passed upon Mr. Spurgeon by the Council of the Baptist Union and appealing to the Assembly to reverse the vote. In his sermon at Carr's-lane last Sunday evening, Dr. Dale referred to the discussion, stating that while his affection for Mr. Spurgeon prevented him from becoming his critic and judge, some of the charges made by Mr. Spurgeon might do great harm if they led to the Church indulging in suspicious criticisms of their pastors instead of caring supremely for their personal loyalty to Christ.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

THIS important Mission has, from the wide scope of its operations, assumed very considerable dimensions, and great blessing is apparent wherever a branch of it exists. On Tuesday, last week, a capital meeting was held at Cambridge, in the Guildhall, to report progress and to enlist new and continued interest in the work. About eight hundred persons sat down to tea, and the large hall was densely crowded, aisles and all, at the public meeting which followed.

Since the inauguration of the movement some years ago, the work of evangelisation among the railway servants of Cambridge has made steady advance, and the Mission has in many ways exercised an inestimable influence for good. Mrs. Paine, a lady who took a deep interest in the welfare of the Mission, and whose services were highly appreciated by those among whom she has worked for several years, has recently left Cambridge; a good substitute has, however, been found in the person of Mrs. Brown, who is already a great favourite with railway men.

Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and Mr. D. Spencer, the general secretary, told how the work had developed during the past six years from small beginnings to a powerful influence for Christ and the Gospel from one end of the country to the other. Addresses were given by the Chairman, and Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard (treasurer of the Mission), Lady Sebright, and local ministers and friends.

A leading feature was the brief but effective testimony given by delegates from various places. Their glad faces and bright cheering words went far to enlist the sympathy of the audience on behalf of this great and good work. Considering how much the safety of the public depends upon the sobriety and steadiness of railway men, the Mission has a special claim for support. The circumstances in which the men are placed renders hypocrisy impossible. Those converted have to stand to their colours amid much derision, and in consequence they become strong in the faith and joyful in the Lord.

Volunteer missionaries are greatly needed to evangelise the railway men of South Africa and India. A lady and gentleman have promised £200 in furtherance of this. Ladies who will undertake to supply a monthly packet of healthy literature to some railway man are invited to communicate with Mr. Spencer, at the office of the Mission, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C. Nearly a thousand ladies are thus engaged, but hundreds more are needed.

WARNING.—Miss de Broen, of Paris, begs to warn readers of THE CHRISTIAN against a man who attempts to obtain money from Christian people on the false pretence of being a relative of hers, or a helper in the Mission.

LADIES' SAMARITAN SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this Society, in connection with the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, was held on Tuesday, January 31, Mr. R. Denny Urlin, F.S.A., treasurer, in the chair. The report and balance-sheet were presented and approved. As the work of the hospital grows, and the out-patients' department becomes more and more used, the scope of the Samaritan Society necessarily widens, and the committee need extended help.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.—A good work has been carried on among the men engaged in the Fish Market and its surroundings. The scope for such a work may be imagined from the fact that some 10,000 men in this locality, comprising fish and fruit salesmen, buyers, clerks, porters, &c., daily frequent the locality. In 1886 the Mission premises were required for municipal purposes, which seriously impeded the work, though Gospel meetings have regularly been held in the subscription rooms of the London Fish Trade Association. An excellent site has been secured, facing the Market, on which it is intended to erect a suitable building. The hon. sec. is Mr. A. Walters, 10, Billingsgate Market, E.C., and the treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

AMONG THE SOUTH AFRICANS.

MALAN CLIFF.

Mr. W. Christison, who carries on an undenominational mission at this place in Natal, sends to a friend an account of visitation work among the native kraals. After describing a visit to one at some distance from the mission house, where the Gospel was preached for the first time, and where a favourable reception was given to the message, Mr. Christison says:—

"On our return we stopped at a kraal where I had often before preached the Word. On this occasion the women asked me to stop and speak with them. I read and explained to them the parable of the sower—a portion they always like, especially the women, as all the digging, sowing, hoeing, reaping, &c., falls to their share. That I might see that they understood, I asked some of them to repeat what they had heard, and with a little help they managed fairly well. They said, 'Oh! that good, very good, but our hearts are bad and hard, and we always forget what you tell us.' In different ways I showed them how they might become happy, and how they might redeem the time. I also taught them this short prayer: 'Great King, enlighten me, help me, save me.' They seemed delighted to have a prayer so short and easy, and they promised to repeat it morning and evening. When we got outside we heard them saying it over again amongst themselves. Poor things! their case is pitiable. They are bought for so many cows, and thereafter they are completely in their husband's power. They can do little of their own accord, indeed they scarcely dare think for themselves. These women would, I believe, under a better system, know how to act in the matter of religion, but to do much as things stand, means more than many of them could face.

"I cannot tell you how great a burden these poor benighted creatures are upon my heart, or how often I ask God to help us so as to be able to do more for them. Going from krral to kraal, although to me delightful work, is at the same time terribly exhausting: so many hills to climb, and so often to use the voice, while frequently the heat is intense. If I had the means I would get up a few large huts as preaching places at convenient centres amongst the people, and visit them regularly, when I believe hundreds would turn out to hear the Word. It is only a matter of a few pounds, but I cannot do anything in the matter till the Lord raises up a few more friends for us who might assist us. Will you pray to God on our behalf, that in his mercy He may save thousands of these Zulus and Pondos about us."

IKWEZI LAMACI.

Mrs. Aitchieson, of this mission, writes on Dec. 12, telling of a terrible storm, during which two horses were both struck dead in the stable They were much used in the work, and the loss is a heavy one to the Mission. After some particulars as to individual converts, Mrs. Aitchieson says:—

Umpekna, the Majalie chief, still insists upon our giving him a teacher. Services are regularly kept up by some of our helpers, so that if we cannot yet give him a teacher the hut which he is building will be nice for Sabbath gatherings. It has long been on my heart to open a boarding-school for girls, that they may not require to go home to the daily contact with all that is so opposite to our teaching; greater good would result, but I would need a trustworthy person to take charge, and this and the necessary building means increased funds.

Any aid towards replacing the lost horses, or for any of the objects of the Mission, will be acceptable. Parcels of material and clothing will also be gratefully received by Miss Macpherson, Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal-green-road, London, E.; or by Miss Agnes A. Bryson, 1, Belmar-terrace, Pollokshields, Glasgow.

BOSTON and OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.

The Christian population of Boston, Massachusetts, U.S.A., are greatly incensed at the conduct of their civil governors, who are doing their best to hinder the out-door proclamation of the Gospel. Of all the places in which open-air preaching can be carried on in the city, none is so desirable as the park known as Boston Common. The city governors, however, steadily refuse to allow preaching on the Common without permits being first obtained, and they persist in refusing to grant such permits when application is made for them.

There are in Boston some Christians who hold that the governors of the city are acting tyrannously in refusing permission to preach on the Common. Some of these earnest men, knowing that on the Common an audience is always assured on Sundays, have not hesitated to assert their right as citizens to preach within its borders. Thither they have repaired, and done their best to rebuke the world of sin, and arouse the people from the prevailing indifference to the command which has gone forth calling upon all men everywhere to repent. The Common is continually the scene of concerts and dancing parties on Sundays. Must the name of God and the honour of Christ only be heard therein in the oaths and curses of the blasphemer?

Several highly respected Christian workers have been prosecuted for breach of the obnoxious law which the city authorities are administering in opposition to the wish of the most religious and patriotic of the inhabitants. Among these was Mr. H. L. Hastings, well known all the world over as editor of "The Anti-Infidel Library"; for reading the Bible and preaching on the Common he was sent to gaol for a term of four months, in default of paying fines. Indignant friends in a short time secured his release by paying the fines. Mr. W. F. Davis, another out-door preacher, has been repeatedly fined for preaching on the Common, and recently, in default of paying a heavy fine, he was committed to prison for twelve months! The sentence is disgracefully severe, and the proceedings are a stain upon the fame of the city of Boston. It has not been alleged by any reasonable person that open-air preaching on the Common was an annoyance to the public, nor has it been insinuated that it caused obstruction of thoroughfares. The fact is, the city governors are perverse and cruel. Their conduct, however, finds ready explanation in the fact that they are, in great part, Irish Roman Catholics, who do the bidding of their priests. With large stakes in the liquor traffic, encouraging rum-drinking rather than Gospel-preaching, these rulers of Boston may think that their summary removal of unoffending, submissive people is firm and creditable government. It is sincerely hoped, however, that they have over-reached themselves in dealing with Mr. Davis, and that public sentiment will bring about such a change as will enable Christians in Boston to enjoy the liberty and privileges which until recently they thought they possessed. There has been a vigorous protest, led by Drs. A. J. Gordon, A. H. Plumb, Joseph Cook and others. We are sure that Mr. Davis will not want sympathisers, but that Christians everywhere will pray that his bonds may be blessed to the furtherance of the Gospel.

PLATELAYERS' MISSION.—I am anxious to interest the Lord's people in the work amongst the platelayers on the Midland Railway, which commenced a year ago. Now, eighty-five men receive monthly packets of Gospel papers. Some have written, testifying of the blessing they have received; in two or three cases souls have been led to the Saviour by means of these papers. I have still a number of men unsupplied, and shall be glad to give all information to anyone who will help forward the work.

MR. AITKEN AT ROXETH.

[From a Correspondent.]

A most interesting and successful parochial mission, extending over a fortnight, has just been held in the parish of Christ Church, Roxeth, Harrow. Much prayer had been offered by believers for many weeks before, in public meetings and in private. The vicar of the parish, Rev. J. F. Andrews, who formerly assisted Mr. Aitken in parochial mission work, realised fully that all the power for successful work must be of God, and held daily meetings for prayer, when he not only invited, but urged the privilege and duty of united supplication. He also instituted daily house-to-house visitation, and by this means evangelical mission literature was widely distributed. At each house in the parish an endeavour was made to speak to and plead with the inmates, and invite them to the services. It is solemn to think that even before the mission began, all were "without excuse" for neglecting salvation.

This earnest preparation increased the faith of Christians, and the sense of expectation of blessing, which expectation has not been disappointed. The mission preacher, Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, came in the power of the Spirit, indeed in very fulness of power, for his words were manifestly of God, not of man. The opening prayer-meeting in the church room, on Saturday, January 14, was a very hallowed time, when he urged an entire dedication of our whole selves to God. "None of self, and all of Thee," may be called the keynote of this meeting, as it truly was of all the subsequent services in the church, mission rooms, and school-rooms. Each day throughout the fortnight there was a short service, with an address on the Spiritual Life in the morning, and a mission service in the evening. These were well attended from the first, but each day the numbers increased, and towards the close of the mission the crowds became very great, many who had never been to a place of worship being attracted by what they heard from others.

The pleadings of the mission preacher were very powerful as he set Life and Death, Heaven and Hell before his hearers, and urged them for the love of God and for the safety of their own souls to forsake sin and accept the gift so freely offered to them. He set forth the danger of hypocrisy, formality, and lukewarmness. Not only were sinners saved, but the Christians were roused and refreshed, and built up in their most holy faith. The half-hearted ones were warned against trying to serve God and Mammon; the weak, desponding ones were shown that the grace of God is sufficient even for them; and those in danger of spiritual pride were reminded of the requirements of God's holiness in such a way as must have left on all who were not blinded by Satan a deep sense of their own unworthiness. All were constrained to utter from the heart—

> "Just as I am, without one plea,
> But that thy blood was shed for me,
> O Lamb of God, I come."

Besides the morning and evening services, Mr. Aitken had a short afternoon service with an address in the parish church of St. Mary's, Harrow, distant about half a mile from Christ Church, Roxeth. This service was also well attended. Rev. F. Hayward Joyce, vicar, gladly welcomed the mission preacher to his pulpit. Though not seeing eye to eye on every point of Church administration, nor perhaps even of doctrine, it may be truly said of the two vicars, and of the workers, in the two parishes, "See how these Christians love one another."

On Sunday afternoon a special service was held in St. Mary's Church for men, and it was largely attended, there being between 500 and 600 present on the last occasion. Two lady missioners came to the parish at the same time, and held meetings and gave school-room addresses in outlying parts of the district.

WINTER STORMS AT SEA.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm, may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

FIRE AT GIRLS' TRAINING HOME.

On the morning of the 16th January, one of our Preventive Homes was TOTALLY DESTROYED BY FIRE, with the loss of the life of one poor afflicted inmate.

The Matrons and all the other inmates escaped in their night-dresses, having lost everything but their lives.

The rebuilding must commence as soon as possible; but to reinstate the Home in full working order will probably necessitate an outlay of at least £1,000 beyond the amount of insurance.

This has occurred when our Funds are absolutely exhausted, with OVER 150 GIRLS IN OUR HOMES.

Will not every reader send a Contribution to help at this time of great and dire necessity?

Contributions will be kindly received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; and the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & Co., 54, Lombard-street; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Graham does not come forward as an advocate of what is called 'sinless perfection'; and his arguments in favour of striving towards the attainment of a higher life than any of us live are sound and Scriptural."
The Rock.

"His treatment is simple and Scriptural, and not the least satisfactory point in his argument is his refutation of the idea of 'sinless perfection' from the writings of that very apostle who is supposed by some people to teach it."—The Baptist.

"The book is full of the marrow of the Gospel, and will do anyone good who reads it."
Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Mr. Graham clearly teaches the truth of complete and certain victory, always within the reach of all believers. He teaches also how this victory is to be sustained day by day, and how also it may be lost. Our readers will do well, with open Bible, to read this little eighteenpenny Book."—Pennel.

By ARTHUR AUGUSTUS REES, Brother-in-law to Rev. H. J. PRINCE, and late Minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland. Price 1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

"As soon as the judgment and the Word of God were given up, a wide door was opened for the entrance of the devil; nor did that wicked spirit lose the opportunity thus presented to him, but at once walked in, took charge, and assumed the character of the Holy Ghost. Having thus obtained the complete control of Mr. Prince, he led him on step by step, in mockery of the Blessed Spirit, to do and say the most outrageous things, in the awful name of God; and left him without any means of detecting the delusion, by having first persuaded him to abandon the only test by which he could discover it.

"Thus fell that dear child of God, HENRY JAMES PRINCE; and thus he will remain fallen till Jesus signally interposes to deliver him."—Extract.

"I desire to lift up my voice against his [Mr. Prince's] teaching, and I declare that the 'Agapemone' heresy is one of the vilest that has ever been foisted upon the Church of Christ. Mr. Prince claims to be the Holy Ghost personified, the introducer of a new dispensation; and assures his followers that whosoever believeth in him shall not die, but henceforth be without sickness or pain."—Extract.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

This case was brought under my notice by a ministerial friend of the patient on the 16th of February last. She had been ailing for six months, unable to do any work, and under medical treatment. There was every indication of commencing lung disease.

In less than one month I received a letter stating that she had derived much benefit from my medicine, also from use of liniment prescribed by me.

In May she had been doing too much, and too early, and her progress was retarded for a short time, after which, however, she speedily recovered.

On September 14 I received a letter, in which "Miss Richardson desires to say how much benefit she has received from your treatment. She is wonderfully better."

And on the 11th of November last:—"Miss Richardson continues in an improved state of health. She has had a severe test in the nursing of a sister and sitting up with her at night. But she says she is better than she has been for years. All pain and cough is gone. She is very grateful to you."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIANS AND THE THEATRE.

DEAR SIR,—If the arguments in the article by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, in THE CHRISTIAN, of January 20, are right, I would like to ask:—Should Christians withdraw their support from public companies systematically breaking the commandments? The majority of the railway, tramway, and omnibus companies run vehicles on Sunday, and so break the fourth commandment. Is it not just as wicked to break one commandment as another?

Are Christians holding shares in companies, or attending theatres in the way Mr. Hallowes describes, really sinning in "giving their moral and financial support to the whole institution which ministers to their pleasure." Dramatic performances are now quite common in connection with Christian churches and schools, and it is high time this question should be threshed out and settled once for all.

Arguments such as those brought forward in the article I refer to cannot, in my opinion, do much good. Most Christians are agreed that the Drama might be made pure and good and profitable. Why, then, cannot Christians, who regard the Drama in the same light as poetry, music, sculpture, painting, and the other fine arts, lead the way, and show "the world" how to do it?—Yours faithfully,

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

REJOINDER BY MR. HALLOWES.

SIR,—Please allow me to reply to "An Old Subscriber," who fails to see the force of my argument against theatres, in the article published in your paper. The substance of the argument was as follows:—"Some persons, admitting that immoral plays are acted in certain theatres where also moral plays are exhibited, patronise only the latter, and regard themselves as having no responsibility for the former. This conclusion, however, is illegitimate, as they are giving their moral and financial support to the whole institution which ministers to their pleasure." Your correspondent questions whether Christians are really sinning by such partial and guarded patronage.

He instances the case of public companies habitually breaking the commandments of God; and, broadening the matter at stake, inquires as to the moral liability of their shareholders.

Doubtless the conscience of the Christian community needs to be quickened on these points, if there is to be that "ethical revival" which is one of the wants of the age. Though public companies have "neither a body to be kicked nor a soul to be saved," they have responsibilities which must, to a certain degree, reach the shareholders, who never attend their periodical meetings. It has been the recognition of such responsibilities which has prevented consistent "total abstainers" from taking shares in Limited Liability Brewery Companies lately formed from private businesses. Such persons, conscientiously and intelligently alive to the overwhelming evils of the "drink traffic" in England, must needs shrink even from a remote participation in their maintenance and extension though they have to forgo an investment financially profitable.

And he, too, who knows the history of the theatre in this country, and its influence as a whole upon the morals of the community, may well regard himself as bound to refrain from attending moral plays when these are often exhibited on the same evening with others distinctly vicious in character. A certain section of well-meaning persons have, for at least a century, been uttering lamentations over the English theatre, begging it to see the error of its ways and to reform the looseness of its morals, occasionally cheering themselves with anticipations that the time of its repentance was at hand, and that the prodigal of the present would become the prophet of the future. But, alas! the prodigal wooed, awed, blessed, and cursed, remains obdurate still. So much preaching ought to be followed by a little practising, and should at least have prevented the English stage being inoculated with the poisonous virus of the French play.

Your correspondent finally asks, "Why cannot Christians lead the way, and show 'the world' how to do it?" that is, how to conduct a theatre on strictly Christian principles. Nothing need hinder them trying, if only they have sufficient financial faith in the realisation of such a scheme. Have any of them? Has "An Old Subscriber"? A series of plays emended and commended by the Church would run a terrible risk of being voted dull by the world.—Yours faithfully,

J. F. T. HALLOWES.

TRUTH AND LOVE.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to express my sense of the timeliness, and very great importance of the article on "The Up-Grade," in your issue of January 27, bearing the signature R. Scott Moncrieff? No candid observer can fail to perceive, nor should he hesitate to admit, that deep spirituality may and does exist in the case of Christian people whose beliefs on confessedly important theological or ecclesiastical points are very dissimilar. The sacred instincts which are born of love and loyalty to the adored Redeemer, manifest themselves in all these persons, in an earnest craving for fellowship with fellow-saints, however divergent their convictions. Surely it must be regarded as acceptable to their common Lord that they should dwell together in love, and in the interchange of all the amenities which love inspires. For myself, I can affirm that I thirst for, and when realised exceedingly rejoice in, association with brethren from whom on points of doctrine I greatly differ, but in whom I discover that peculiar taste for, and delight in, the truly spiritual, which we shall all agree in attributing to the indwelling of the Spirit of God.

By no means would I advocate concealment of principles. I regard it as both unmanly and unchristian. Only let not infallibility be assumed, nor that oneness of belief is essential to oneness of heart. Fidelity to truth itself requires that we should ever breathe the loving spirit of Him who is "The Truth," and whose name we bear. Such a spirit, more than anything besides, will disarm prejudice, and dispose those from whom we differ to consider candidly our positions, and the arguments by which we support them.

It is the fact that very often, where union among the faithful is advocated, language is employed which carries the implication that only of brethren who subscribe to some certain formulation of theological truth can it be recognised that they are faithful; which fact has impelled me to make this communication.

If we really answer to the description, "the spiritual," "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit given to us." This love, when duly developed, originates the sentiment, and prompts the benediction, "Grace be with all them who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." By all means let us cherish this love, and be jealous of any such zeal for individual conviction as would either diminish its intensity or qualify its expression.—Yours very faithfully,

WILLIAM MIALL.

PRAYER-BOOK REVISION.

SIR,—There can be no doubt that Prayer-book revision occupies men's minds more than many are willing to confess. I am aware that many Evangelical Churchmen hold aloof from this movement, through fear lest revision, if it should be attempted, might be carried out in a wrong direction. Whilst sympathising with their fears, I would at the same time ask if fear always dictates a wise policy. If Prayer-book revision were a mere abstract theory, one might be disposed to say with them, "Let well alone." But is it well to hesitate? Sooner or later the revision of the Prayer-book must and will come. What, then, is our plain duty now? My answer is emphatically: Instruct, instruct, instruct!

Other revisions (1552, 1559, 1604, 1637, 1662) have taken place when the people knew little, if anything, of the subject, and when no one had experienced the advantage taken by Ritualists of a few errors in the Prayer-book. How shall we answer before God if another revision should overtake us while in similar ignorance, but with the vantage ground of error taken up by the Romanisers? Through the ignorance and supineness of the people, the work of revision would then be left in the hands of the Romanising confederacy to be moulded to the advantage of Popery.

The Prayer-book Revision Society has the sympathy of nearly fifty members of both Houses of Parliament (several of whom have recently joined the Society), and they are, I believe, unanimous in the opinion that the people must be educated up to the necessity of the crisis.

The aim is not to force on a revision, but to strengthen our position by instructing the people. This involves an expenditure of money, and the Society earnestly pleads for financial aid. Their exchequer is very low, and they urgently need increased subscriptions and donations. Will the friends of our Protestant religion give some assistance?

The Bishops of Liverpool, Gloucester and Bristol, and Peterborough have spoken within the last few months in favour of revision, and the Secretary is working most energetically, addressing meetings on Prayer-book Revision and on the work of the Reformation. Almost daily applications are made to him for lectures (with dissolving views) adapted both for adults and children. Over forty applications for lectures are now in his office.

I earnestly trust that this appeal will not only have the effect of gaining new members, but also of inducing many of the Society's old friends to spare a special donation. Mr. James Butcher, 17, Buckingham-street, Strand, will receive and acknowledge any help.—Your obedient servant, 41, Queen's-gate, W. ROBERT MONTAGU.

PERPLEXED.

DEAR SIR,—Can you or any of your readers find the solution of a question that has often puzzled and troubled my mind? Perhaps I can best explain my difficulty by relating an incident that occurred to myself. In the course of a conversation with a gentleman whose life I knew to be outwardly pure and most beautiful, but who was a Freethinker, and on whom I was urging the importance of a prayerful study of the Bible, with the certainty of true light being eventually given, he answered, "Mrs. S., for years I have searched the Scriptures, and have entreated God, have agonised in prayer that He would reveal Himself to me; but I got no light, and so at last I turned unbeliever."

In my own mind I feel there must be something wrong about that man, but wherein his mistake lies I cannot quite make out, and the whole thing is a mystery which I cannot solve. Why should such a one not find the truth? Was he self-deceived as to the reality of his seeking? Is there a chance of its being revealed at the last moment of life, if not sooner, or even in eternity itself? Will some of your readers think this subject out, and see if they can find any satisfactory answer to my question? As the wife of an officer in India, whither I hope shortly to return, I not unfrequently meet with instances of those who say they would believe if they could, and when they tell you this with unmistakable earnestness and sincerity, it is so hard to know what to say—one seems to be silenced, nonplussed.

For myself, I have implicit faith in God's Word, and in God's love in Christ to man; but I want to know better how to meet and deal with such cases as these.

Another puzzle is the outwardly pure and blameless lives of many such. In some ways I have found them apparently better men than professing Christians, having more control of the temper, being more high-minded, honourable, and kinder in speech, and act, and so forth. Why is this? Is the great enemy of souls content to leave them alone, knowing them to be safely his, and, therefore, as it were, not worth the trouble of outward temptations, but, on the contrary, more likely to remain in his camp because they do not openly transgress?

I enclose my card, and beg to remain, yours very faithfully,

B. S.

["Let God be true, and every man a liar!" There must have been some hindrance in the heart of him who thus prayed and got no answer. Many things prevent belief. "How can ye believe who receive honour one of another?" Any known sin unrepented of; any pride, self-will, or sense of personal sufficiency or merit; any unforgiveness of others—these are among the things which restrain God from answering prayer. It is evident that the officer referred to did not believe God, otherwise he would have been satisfied that God would be as good as his word. If the suppliant had really prayed, not regarding any iniquity in his heart, God would have given him an answer in peace.—ED.]

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—We are asked to state that in his remarks at the recent devotional meeting in connection with this society, Mr. Christien did not refer to meetings held in Dublin, but in Ireland.

THE GOVERNESSES' INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTION is the name of a society in Paris, having for its object the providing of engagements for young members, the giving of information, advice, and addresses of cheap places of residence in France and elsewhere, and the helping of members by facilitating mutual intercourse by means of weekly receptions at the houses of ladies of practical experience. While desirous of discouraging young girls from going to Paris with the idea of being governesses, there being already far too many governesses in the city, these ladies are anxious to render all possible help to those whom necessity obliges to repair to the Continent for educational purposes. One of these ladies is Miss Osborne, 65, Avenue de Neuilly, Neuilly-Seine, near Paris.

MISCELLANEA.

MISSIONARY VOLUNTEERS.—Seven members of the Hastings Y.M.C.A. have offered themselves for foreign service, if the way is opened.

MR. WM. NOBLE has been addressing a series of successful meetings at Stratford Conference Hall (where over 150 came forward as the result of two addresses), Dorking, Basingstoke, Hitchin, Clacton-on-Sea, and other places.

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS' HOME.—This new Home, situated near the West Indian Docks, E., will be opened, not at the beginning of March, as recently stated in our columns, but on Monday next, February 13, by Prince Oscar of Sweden and Norway.

MISS HAVERGAL'S CONSECRATION HYMN.—Rev. J. T. Wrenford writes in reference to the letter under this title in our issue of January 20:—It was quite erroneous to say it was sent by Miss Havergal to "the head of the Irish Society," and by him made known and published. It was sent to myself, and through the late Mr. Bewley first printed and published.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—Nine hundred and sixty-five Christian captains have joined the Bethel Union Register of this Society. Will friends who have CHRISTIANS and other literature of the right kind, never forgetting Testaments, send them, with any book-bags, cuffs, &c., to the Secretary of the Society, Rev. Edward W. Matthews, Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, London, E.

A WAY OF HELPING THE POOR.—A correspondent suggests that a plan should be devised for collecting scraps of food from houses in the West-end of London for the satisfaction of the needs of the poor in the East-end. "There might be a depôt to receive contributions brought in by carts, and means might be arranged for conveying the collection to some mission agencies in the East-end."

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—At the monthly prayer-meeting at the Mission House, Blomfield-street, on Monday, an address was delivered by Rev. Nundo L. Doss. The subject was Hindu Home Life in Bengal, with special reference to religious training. It was shown that all the religious acts of the Hindus are outward and without any spiritual counterpart or bearing. Mr. Doss leaves England this week for America, and will extend his travels to Australasia.

BIRMINGHAM.—During this week all the Episcopal churches are holding a Gospel mission. The Bishop of Durham spoke at a meeting of the White Cross Army in the Town Hall last Friday. In the same hall on Monday evening a very successful meeting of the Midland Counties Vigilance Association was held, presided over by Mr. Alexander M. Chance, of the firm of Chance Brothers, glass manufacturers. Among the other speakers were Mr. Samuel James Capper and Mr. R. C. Morgan.

A CORRECTION.—The Christian Leader, of Glasgow, points out that we made a mistake in our sketch of Canon Wilberforce. Commenting on the Canon's praiseworthy willingness to fraternise with Nonconformists, it was stated that on one Sunday the "whole body" of the Nonconformist ministers of Southampton received the sacrament at his hands. The fact is, says our contemporary, that only three out of about a dozen ministers did what our sketch attributed to all. The incident, also, took place on a week-day, and not on a Sunday.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S NESTORIAN ORPHANAGES.—Dr. J. H. Shedd and Rev. J. G. Coan, American missionaries, resident in Oroomiah, Persia, speak highly of these Orphanages. The boys are instructed in religion as well as morality, and are taught to work. The accounts for the last financial year show that nearly half the expenses were met by the products of the Orphanage lands and the earnings of the school. The remainder of the money was received from England. Though last year's working incurred no debt, there is a debt of nearly £300 on the institution, handed down from preceding years. Every day there are applications for the admission of needy children; but, through lack of funds, they have to be turned away. Deacon Abraham's Orphanages are declared to constitute one of the greatest blessings ever introduced into a land utterly lacking in philanthropic institutions. The Metropolitan of Nowchiah has expressed pleasure at the work that is being done. Mr. Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover, Hants, will be pleased to forward any sums that may be sent to him towards this work.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. J. B. Bain is conducting a fortnight's meetings at the Farnley Mission, Queen's-road, Chelsea, with tokens of blessing.

Canisbay, Caithness, N.B.—Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist, has concluded a successful series of meetings in the Free Church here.

Rayleigh, Essex.—Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a fortnight's mission here with encouraging results.

Rev. W. Haslam, having completed his visit and work at Cannes, has gone to Amsterdam and the Hague. He requests prayer for his work in Holland.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has just conducted a Gospel mission at Portland-street Congregational Church, Southport. The services were calculated to quicken the life of the church and to be productive of lasting results.

Llantrissant, South Wales.—A successful mission has been conducted here by Mr. John Elliott during the past three weeks. Several have professed conversion to God, while backsliders have been restored, and believers greatly blessed.

Gloucestershire.—A successful series of mission services was held during last month at Poulton, Maiseyhampton, and Ashbrook, in Gloucestershire. Mr. James Sprunt, superintendent of the West Marylebone Mission, London, was the mission preacher.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has held a week's special mission in connection with the Congregational Church, Cockermouth. The congregations were large, and at every service numbers were led to decide for Christ. The church has received quite a Pentecostal blessing.

Chirk.—The first mission ever held in this parish is now being conducted by Rev. Walter Bradbury, of Weston-super-Mare. The colliers showed much interest, and crowded into the vestry for prayer amongst themselves before and after sermon. The mission will be remembered as a refreshing season.

Wishaw, N.B.—Mr. J. W. Moodie had a series of meetings in the Baptist Chapel here in January, which were very successful. The people came out in large numbers, and the truth plainly and faithfully spoken told upon many. About one hundred were dealt with personally.

GEORGE WHITTET.

Baptist Manse, Wishaw, near Glasgow.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A., has concluded an eight-days' mission at Cirencester. The meetings were full of interest, and well attended, many testifying to good received. Special features of the mission were an address on "The Claims of Foreign Missions on the Christian Church," and a Sunday afternoon meeting for men, when a large company assembled to hear an address on "Purity," and steps were taken for forming a branch of the White Cross Army.

Brighouse.—A most successful twelve-days' mission has been held in connection with the Congregational Church, Brighouse. The meeting was conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie, during the first week, and continued by Revs. S. R. Antliff, Huddersfield; H. Sturt, Dewsbury; and A. Galbraith, pastor. A deeply solemn, earnest feeling pervaded all the services. Upwards of one hundred and forty, chiefly young persons connected with the two Sunday-schools of the church, have declared their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour and Lord.

Wisconsin.—In this far western town, the Lord is wondrously pouring out his Spirit. Mr. Swayne, who sings the Gospel, and myself, have been here but a short season, and yet the word has taken deep hold upon the hearts and consciences of the people. Between seventy-five and one hundred have confessed Christ, and the work seems only begun. Will your readers earnestly pray for the salvation of multitudes in this great north-western region of the U. S. Infidelity, Unitarianism, and general indifference characterise the masses.

J. E. WOLFE.

Lancaster, Wisconsin.

Mr. William Grove has concluded a mission at the "New Hall," Rudmore-road, Landport. His earnest, stirring addresses have been blessed alike to saved and unsaved.

Ayr, N.B.—A most successful three weeks' mission, conducted by Mr. John Climie, in James-street Hall, has been brought to a close. Christian workers were drawn together, and the spirit of prayer was very manifest. Mr. Climie's addresses were full of real Scripture truth, and told upon the consciences of many openly ungodly men and women who gathered in the hall. Numbers were led to turn their back upon their old life and make a confession of faith in Christ.

Mr. Henry Thorne in Lancaster.—Lancaster has again had a visit from Mr. Henry Thorne for evangelistic work. For a week previous to his coming meetings were held in seven evangelical churches of the town to ask God's blessing on the mission. Mr. Thorne opened with a preliminary meeting with the workers and committee of the Y.M.C.A., on Saturday; then for nine days, to January 29, he was in the Palatine Hall, generally with three meetings daily. The afternoon Bible-readings especially brought out Mr. Thorne's aptness to teach, and in them the word was with power. The Gospel addresses at night were very earnestly given. The mission closed with praise and testimony of Christians and converts. Mr. Thorne has again left a blessing behind him. S.

MR. W. SPENCER WALTON commences a ten-days' mission at Plymouth on Saturday next, which will be followed, on March 1 and 2, by a conference on The Spiritual Life.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Cambridge, Feb. 9—15.
Rev. J. Simpson, Wortley (near Leeds), Feb. 25—Mar. 7.

LADY DUFFERIN'S SCHEME.—In the current issue of Medical Missions, Dr. Burns Thompson writes:—"I have read with sorrow the reply of Lady Dufferin to the article by Dr. Maxwell, in which he points out a blemish in her otherwise admirable Association for providing medical aid to the women of India. There is so much in that scheme to commend it to our profession that it would give us unfeigned pleasure to be able to wish for it the fullest success. We regret, therefore, sincerely, that Lady Dufferin utters no word to encourage the hope that the unchristian pledge required of the agents of the Association may be withdrawn. It seems to me that the gravity of the restriction imposed by the National Association on Christian liberty and Christian obligation is not adequately realised."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a three-weeks' mission at Croft, conducted by Mr. G. Hefford.——For blessing on mission work at Watford, Herts, and Aylesbury, by Mr. J. C. Rainey.——For blessing upon addresses now being given on "The Pilgrim's Progress," at Chalford, Brimscombe, and Brownshill, Gloucestershire, by Rev. J. Hixon Irving.——For blessing upon a special mission in Lower Tooting, to be conducted by Mr. Packer (of the Evangelisation Society), from Feb. 12 to 26.——For much blessing on the mission being conducted in Birmingham, in upwards of forty churches, commenced on Sunday last.——For blessing on a mission to be held by Mr. W. R. Lane, at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road, S.W., from Feb. 12 to 17.——For blessing on a mission at Tunbridge Wells, being conducted by Mr. John McAuliffe.——For blessing on meetings being held at Northampton, by Lord Radstock.——For the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Wangamu, New Zealand.——That the indifference which prevails amongst Christians on the Vivisection question may pass away, and that the tortures and cruelties performed in the name of science may be made illegal.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12.—EZEKIEL XLVIII.

2.—And by the border of Dan.—"From north to south seven tribes succeed each other: Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, Judah, each occupying the full breadth of the land from east to west. Then comes a portion separated as an offering to the Lord, subdivided into: (1) a northern portion for the Levites; (2) a central portion for the priests and the Temple; (3) a southern portion for the city and those who serve it. These three form a square, which does not occupy the whole breadth of the land, but is flanked on either side, east and west, by portions assigned to the prince. Then follow, south of the city, five portions for the five remaining tribes — Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad—similar to those assigned to the seven. Thus the Levites, the Temple, and the city are guarded by Judah and Benjamin, the two tribes who had throughout preserved their allegiance to the true Sovereignty of Jehovah."—S.C.

35.—It was round about eighteen thousand measures: and the name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there.—Ezekiel's city is nine times larger in circuit than the Jerusalem of our Lord's time, the circuit of which Josephus reckoned as four miles. This is more than thirty-six English miles. This city, great and glorious as it is, must also be distinguished from that of the post-millennial new heaven and earth as described in Rev. xxi. 10—27, one essential feature of which is, "I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." Ezekiel's millennial temple will probably fulfil an educational purpose, and when the earthly Israel and the nations (through them) have learned the deep spiritual lessons which even Christians now derive from studying the Levitical law, it will in the next dispensation (Rev. xxi.) give way to a higher and holier state, in which no temple will be needed.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13.—DANIEL I.

1.—In the third year of Jehoiakim king of Judah.—"It appears from Jer. xxv. 1 that the fourth year of Jehoiakim was the first year of Nebuchadnezzar. It is clear that Nebuchadnezzar is called king by anticipation."—S.C.

8.—But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself.—"Not so much because the food was not prepared according to the Levitical ordinance (Lev. xvii. 13), or perhaps consisted of the flesh of unclean animals, for then there was no necessity to refrain from the wine; but because the heathen at their feasts offered up in sacrifice to their gods a part of the food and the drink, whereby the meat and wine, as a whole, were the meat and the wine of an idol sacrifice (1 Cor. x. 20)."—Keil.

12.—Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days.—"The request is perfectly intelligible from the nature of living faith, without having recourse to Calvin's supposition that Daniel had received by secret revelation the assurance that such would be the result if he and his companions lived on vegetable diet."—Ibid.

17.—As for these four children.—Better in R.V., "youths." The Hebrew word is used of Joseph when he was seventeen years old (Gen. xxxvii. 30; xlii. 22).

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 14.—DANIEL II.

21.—He changeth the times and the seasons.—This power which Daniel attributes to God, Antichrist "thinks" to exercise himself (vii. 25).

38.—Thou art this head of gold.—Though spoken to Nebuchadnezzar personally, this really applied to his dynasty. So that "after thee" meant after Belshazzar, the last of the Babylonian kings.

39.—Another kingdom inferior to thee.—The Persian Empire which lasted 200 years from A.D. 536 to A.D. 331, when Alexander the Great defeated Darius Codomanus at the battle of Arbela, and broke up the Persian power. Another third kingdom of brass.—The Grecian or Macedonian kingdom, set up by Alexander the Great, and carried on by his successors for 300 years, till Cleopatra, the last of these, was defeated by Augustus Cæsar at the battle of Actium, A.D. 31.

40.—The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron.—The Roman Empire, commencing with Augustus Cæsar and continuing (in its divided state) till the Lord's second coming, which is the falling of the Stone upon the feet of the image, breaking it all to pieces.

41.—The kingdom shall be divided.—This was fulfilled when the Goths poured down upon the Roman Empire in the fifth century and broke it up into its present divided state.

43.—They shall mingle themselves with the seed of men.—For "with" R.V. has in margin "by." It seems to denote that by intermarriage there will be an international mingling of the Gothic and Roman elements, but the essential features of Roman rule (iron) and Gothic liberty (clay) remain distinct to the end, monarchial and democratic principles never coalescing.

44.—In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom—These are evidently the kings or kingdoms corresponding to the toes of the image. Hence the kingdom "set up" is that of Christ at his second coming.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15.—DANIEL III.

1.—Nebuchadnezzar the king made an image of gold.—The object of this image is disputed. Some consider it to have been a proud self-deifying act, and one in which the king claimed worship for himself as God; but this does not accord with vv. 12 and 14, in which there is a distinct recognition of "gods" whom he served, and whom the worshippers of the image also were supposed "to serve." Others consider it to have been an image of his god "Bel," but this is not stated. The true view seems to be that the king, filled with pride, from the vision of the last chapter, set on foot that deification of empire in subjection to, and connection with, the gods of the nation, such as afterwards prevailed extensively in the days of the Roman Empire, and which led to the requirement of divine honours being paid to an image of the Emperor, as a test for persons suspected of Christianity. Nebuchadnezzar's conduct would thus be a foretaste of how Gentile powers would, more or less, act during the whole period of Gentile domination, and thus this chapter is, and has ever been, a storehouse of consolation to God's persecuted people. The idea symbolised by thus paying divine honours to the image of empire is well expressed by Luther (as he felt it in his day), in a letter to the Emperor Charles V., written ten days after his stand at the Diet of Worms: "God, who is searcher of hearts, is my witness that I am ready most earnestly to obey your Majesty in all affairs of this present life. But when eternal interests are concerned, God wills not that man should submit unto man; for such submission in spiritual matters is a real worship, and ought to be rendered solely to the Creator" (see Rev. xiii. 15).

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16.—DANIEL IV.

"The verses 1—3 are, by the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin texts attached to chapter iii., from the view that the king wished to proclaim by his edict the 'signs and wonders' wrought by God in the deliverance of the three youths. There is no question but that A.V. is right, and that the royal edict is to be associated with the events of chapter iv."—S.C. What is here related evidently occurred at the close of Nebuchadnezzar's long reign of forty-four years.

4.—I...was at rest in mine house.—"Significant words, which go far to indicate the period of his life referred to. He was resting in undisputed possession of a dominion which extended 'to the end of the earth'" (22).

8.—In whom is the spirit of the holy gods.—"The language of the king constantly vacillates between polytheism and monotheism, but he never admits one God to the exclusion of all others; his monotheism only implies that one God is supreme among many."—Archdeacon Rose.

27.—Break off thy sins by righteousness, &c.—"It is a frivolous objection, that Daniel here teaches the atonement of our transgressions by virtuous actions. The word simply means 'break off'—make an end of thy sins by a change of life. It is almost equivalent to 'sin no more and change thy ways.'"—Ibid.

33.—He was driven from men, and did eat grass, as oxen.—There is abundant medical testimony that this is a well-known form of madness. The "head of gold" (ii. 38) thus becoming a beast is a preparation for the second series of visions (vii.), where the various parts of the metallic image of chapter ii. reappear as "beasts," and it also suggests that the mystic period of "seven times" (16) points to the whole period of Gentile domination, or the twice 1260 (i.e., 2520) prophetic day-years which, reckoning from B.C. 606, are not far from their close.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17.—DANIEL V.

1.—Belshazzar the king made a great feast.—It used to be one of the objections urged against the Book of Daniel that a king Belshazzar was unknown to history. "Cuneiform discovery now comes in to explain the existence of Belshazzar." The last king of Babylon known to Herodotus is Labynetus (or Nabonahid of the inscriptions); but an inscription has been found at Mugheir (Calneh) in which this king writes, "and for Belshazzar, my eldest son, the offspring of my heart," &c. He was "associated with his father in the government." —S.C. Hence Daniel (29) is made only "third ruler in the kingdom," Belshazzar himself being the second. Thus wonderfully is the truth of Scripture confirmed.

11.—Whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy father.—Four kings reigned between Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar, and there was no connection in blood between these two, but Nabonahid (Belshazzar's father) married the daughter of Nebuchadnezzar. Hence she could call her father (in the prevailing free use of the term father) her son's father.

25.—Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin.—The interpretation is an expansion of what the words express. "Mene" means "numbered," repeated for emphasis, "surely numbered." "Tekel" is "weighed," with the result added, "found wanting." "Upharsin" signifies "and breakings," with a play upon the word (brought out in "Peres") that the breaking up would give the power to the Persians.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18.—DANIEL VI.

1.—It pleased Darius.—Who this "Darius the Median" can have been is one of the problems of Scripture, which many consider as yet unsolved. That he was appointed to the kingdom as a sort of Viceroy by Cyrus who was the real king, appears from the words of the last verse of chap. iv., "took (or received) the kingdom." Darius is not a proper name, but an official name, like Cæsar, so that it is no wonder that history knows nothing of him by that name.

7.—Shall be cast into the den of lions.—Another form of persecution to which Christians under the Roman Emperor were constantly subjected, is here anticipated and tested by Daniel (whose absence during the fiery trial of his three companions may have been designed to link his testimony to theirs as to God's power of deliverance in every form of persecution). "The cry 'To the lions' so often raised in the days of the early Christian Church against those who would not sacrifice to the deified Cæsar was first raised against Daniel." —S.C.

10.—He kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed.—Mere kneeling is not prayer, so it is added "and prayed." This form of persecution is different from that of chap. iii. There there was a positive requirement of idolatrous worship which had to be refused. Here it was a prohibition of legitimate worship which had to be disregarded. This form of persecution is more common in the present day as many a schoolboy amongst scoffing companions, and many a pious soldier in his barrack-room, can testify.

14.—The king...was sore displeased with himself.—The gold of absolute monarchy had thus given place to the silver of law-bound constitutional monarchy.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, February 19.

Matt. xviii. 21—35. Golden Text: Matt. vi. 12.

On Forgiveness.

Then came Peter, &c. (ver. 21).—Jesus had been telling them (ver. 15—17) how to act towards one that had trespassed against them. There was to be the private and brotherly remonstrance, with a view to winning the offender. This failing, a further remonstrance, in the presence of a friend or two as witnesses. Last of all, the affair must be brought before the Church. Having said this, our Lord began to speak about united prayer. But meanwhile Peter is lost in this question of forgiveness—is thinking, perhaps, of certain enemies. So he breaks in, at the first chance he gets, with "Lord, how often," &c.; "till seven times?" The Rabbis set the limit at the third time. Doubtless, Peter considered a sevenfold forgiveness was the utmost to be expected. But the really forgiving consider forgiveness a privilege, not a hard duty to be avoided. They give pardon without grudging, only too glad to forget the offence that hurt them. "Until seventy times seven,"—i.e., without limit. It is a question of spirit, not of numbers. Get the right spirit, and you will not count the offences forgiven. When you forgive, you will forget, as God does.

Ten thousand talents.—An incalculable sum, probably two millions and upwards. "Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." How little he comprehended his vast indebtedness! What could he pay? Nothing. So each of us before God. This speech explains what follows. Not realising debt and helplessness, he does not realise value of pardon. Is frightened, not humbled or softened. If we think that by prayer and pains we can make up for past sin, we are as blind and foolish as he.

His lord...forgave him. Without any idea of repayment—grace free and full.

One of his fellow-servants, which owed him 100 pence (about £3 8s.)—Mark, the pence were really owing. He was claiming only what was legally due. Show children from this that it is no answer to say, "He has wronged me; I have a right to satisfaction." If God insisted on his rights, as we do on ours, where should we be?

Have patience with me, &c.—His fellow-servant repeats his own plea in his own words, and in his very manner—a touch in the parable which exposes afresh the hideous nature of unforgiveness.

His fellow-servants were very sorry...his lord was wroth.—Good men are indignant in presence of great sin; but, remembering their own sin and frailty, they are more sorry than angry. The sight of sin in others humiliates the truly good. But God is more than sorry—He is wroth. The grieved indignation of good men is terrible: what must the "wrath of God" be! "A man without compassion has all against him, God and the world." "If ye from your hearts forgive not." Show how real forgiveness must be. Expose the hollowness of saying, "I'll forgive, but I can't forget." Real forgiveness forgets.

We should remember the distinction between forgiveness, and readiness to forgive. A comparison of Luke xvii. 3, 4, with Matt. xviii. 15—17 shows that confession of the wrong must go before pardon. As it takes two to make a quarrel, so it takes two to effect forgiveness. There must be, on the offender's part, repentance, confession, and grateful acceptance of the pardon offered. In the parable the servant is frightened, but not repentant: he accepts the relief, but is not touched by the goodness; just as a child may accept a gift, and yet never comprehend the love that gave it. Even God cannot pardon an unrepentant and unbelieving sinner. But He is always ready to forgive (Psalm lxxxvi. 5)—sincerely, eagerly desirous to pardon, waiting to be gracious at any cost but that of making light of sin, by pardoning the unrepentant.

LESSONS.

The awful contrast between our wrongs and our sins, i.e., the offences offered to us, and our sins against God. According to one calculation, 100 pence are to 10,000 talents as 1 is to 1,250,000! Teachers should supply themselves with some strong examples of offences hard to be forgiven—especially such as rouse intense indignation and hatred in children. Strive to realise to the full man's inhumanity to man, and then add:—Yet this is but the 100 pence! What must our sin be before God!"

The hideous nature of an unforgiving spirit. It fills men with shame and sorrow, and God with burning wrath.

Our want of forgiveness is a sure sign that we do not understand God's pardoning love. Either we have forgotten it for the time, or we never knew it. Tender readiness to pardon is a necessary proof of faith in God's pardoning grace.

The only way to learn true forgiveness is to receive and rest in God's pardoning love.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

When Mr. Wesley was on his voyage to Georgia, General Oglethorpe, threatening revenge on a servant who had offended him said, "I never forgive!" "Then, I hope," said Mr. Wesley, "you never sin."

In the early Christian times two Christians at Antioch quarrelled. One sought reconciliation; but the other, a priest, refused. Soon persecution arose; and the priest, Sapricius by name, having boldly confessed Christ, was condemned to death. On his way to the place of execution, the other, Nicephorus, met him, and once more sued for peace. He was refused, and was actually pleading with him when they arrived at the place of death. Here the condemned man was offered life and liberty if he would sacrifice to the gods. Nicephorus pled with him to stand firm for Christ. But his faith failed—he made shipwreck of his faith; while Nicephorus, confessing Christ, was seized in his stead, and so gained the martyr's crown, which Sapricius had lost.

"A traveller in Burmah, after fording a river, found his body covered over by a swarm of small leeches, busily sucking his blood. His first impulse was to tear the tormentors from his flesh, but his servant warned him that to pull them off by mechanical violence would expose his life to danger. They must not be torn off, lest portions remain in the wounds and become a poison: they must drop off spontaneously. The native forthwith prepared a bath for his master, by the decoction of some herbs, and directed him to lie down in it. As soon as he had bathed, the leeches fell off. Each unforgiven injury in the heart is like a leech sucking the blood. Mere human determination to have done with it, will not cast the evil thing away. You must bathe your whole being in God's pardoning mercy. You will stand up free."—Arnot.

"WHO WAS JESUS CHRIST?"—The course of lectures on this topic is being continued at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday evenings. On Tuesday week, the lecturer, Rev. T. T. Waterman, gave an historical sketch of early Christian writers, showing how impossible it was at any period to introduce a fictitious and exaggerated account of the life and character of Jesus Christ for the acceptance of Christians. Last Tuesday he dealt with the historical value of the letters of the Apostle Paul.

SEIZING THE OPPORTUNITY.—On Sunday evenings during summer scores of persons flock to our railway station to see the passenger trains come in, and loiter away an hour. Last summer a few Christians determined to sow the good seed of the kingdom. Accordingly, they appeared on the scene. Hearty singing was mixed with short, stirring addresses. As the trains steamed in a lady was ready with Gospel leaflets, which were given to guards, drivers, and passengers. The work continued all the summer, with increasing congregations seated ready for service. Results are with the Lord of the harvest. Some of the hearers were pricked in their hearts, and asked, "What must we do?"

NATURE AND FAITH.

We wept—'twas Nature wept; but Faith
Can pierce beyond the gloom of death,
And, in yon world so fair and bright,
Behold thee in refulgent light.
We miss thee here, yet Faith would rather Know thou art with thy heavenly Father;
    Nature sees the body dead;
    Faith beholds the spirit fled.
Nature stops at Jordan's tide;
Faith beholds the other side;
That but hears farewells and sighs;
This, thy welcome to the skies.
Nature mourns a cruel blow;
Faith assures it is not so.
Nature never sees thee more;
Faith but sees thee gone before.
Nature tells a dismal story;
Faith has visions full of glory.
Nature views the change with sadness;
Faith contemplates it with gladness.
Nature murmurs, Faith gives meekness;
"Strength is perfected in weakness."
Nature writhes, and hates the rod;
Faith looks up, and blesses God.
Sense looks downward, Faith above;
That sees harshness, this sees love.
Oh, let Faith victorious be,
Let it reign triumphantly.
But thou art gone—not lost, but flown:
Shall I then ask thee back, my own?
Back, and leave thy spirit's brightness?
Back, and leave thy robes of whiteness?
Back, and leave thy angel mould?
Back, and leave those streets of gold?
Back, and leave the Lamb that feeds thee?
Back from founts to which He leads thee?
Back, and leave thy heavenly Father?
Back to earth and sin? Nay, rather
    Would I live in solitude.
I would not ask thee if I could;
But patient wait the high decree
That calls my spirit home to thee.

THE GOSPEL IN SEVILLE.—Some months ago a portion of the roof of the Church of San Basilio in Seville, a fine old Roman Catholic church, which has long been used for evangelical work, suddenly fell in. The workers were in great distress, but the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society came to their help; repairs were rapidly effected, and the church was recently re-opened. The work in Seville is in a very healthy condition. Mr. Caldwell, the United States Consul, is a member of the Church of San Basilio, and renders important service in the cause of evangelisation. The pastor, Rev. F. Palomares, is also working with great energy. He not only preaches the Gospel, but, as a licensed medical practitioner, attends to the bodily ailments of the poor. He has opened a free dispensary, which is the means of reaching many who might otherwise never come under religious influence.

A BARBAROUS LAW.—The correspondent of The Times in Victoria, writing with respect to the recent Acts passed in that Legislature, says:—One of these, it must, as I think, be admitted, is a distinct and substantial improvement in the law of libel, which has been, by lawyers and laymen alike, regarded as a disgrace to English law. It seems a strange anomaly in this our age of professed regard for even-handed justice to man and woman alike that—as the cases tell us—"words imputing unchastity or adultery to a woman, married or unmarried, however gross and injurious they may be, are not actionable, unless she can prove that they have directly caused her special damage." The only exception is when the words are spoken within the jurisdiction of the local Courts of London, Southwark, and some say Bristol. Lord Campbell once described this state of things as "unsatisfactory." "Instead of the word 'unsatisfactory,' I should substitute the word 'barbarous,'" said Lord Brougham. The Spiritual Courts once dealt with such matters in England, but as that jurisdiction is at an end at home, and never existed here, our Parliament have, nem. con., passed an Act which gives a right of action in such cases without the necessity of the plaintiff proving special damage. We may, therefore, on Lord Brougham's authority, claim in this advance to be less barbarous than are the old folks at home.

Among the Churches.

BAPTIST.

In the current number of The Missionary Herald there is an able article on "Christianity and Mohammedanism," by Rev. E. S. Summers, of Serampore, Bengal.

Mr. Spurgeon has written to Rev. F. Lawrence, secretary of the Funeral Reform Association, saying that anything which will lessen the foolish expenses of funerals and make them less pompous has his hearty approval.

Rev. E. H. Ellis, in a paper read before the London Baptist Association, complained that the Theological Colleges in many instances turn out schoolmasters and not preachers, ministers who reach the heads and not the hearts of the people.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

George Wood, who has been holding a mission in Norwich, has had to take rest on account of his health failing.

A lady Friend, Susanna M. Salter, has been elected mayoress of Argonia, in Kansas. The "W.C.T. Union" elected her in spite of the anti-prohibitionists.

Frances C. Jenkins, a minister of Western yearly meeting, U.S.A., has begun her service in this country by attending Lancashire and Cheshire quarterly meeting at Bolton. Such friendly exchanges of visits strengthen the existing unity of England and America.

Frederick Sessions and Isabella Young have completed a very successful mission in Birmingham. A large number received and believed the Gospel message, and are to be visited. Children's meetings, lectures on the Bible, temperance meetings, and four addresses to about one thousand of Cadbury Brothers' workpeople formed part of the service.

METHODIST.

In connection with Liverpool-road Wesleyan Chapel, Islington, an effort is being made to reach the young men and women engaged in the shops and warehouses in the North of London.

About 220 persons have professed to find Christ in connection with special revival services at Shildon, near Darlington, including a number of drunkards and gamblers, most of whom have signed the pledge.

As a further development of the West London Mission, Wardour Hall is now opened for services every night in the week. A band of open-air workers go out into the streets, bearing lamps to illuminate the hymn-sheets.

A district convention was held at Lincoln last week. Speaking on "Village Methodism," Rev. Thomas Champness said a great revolution was about to be witnessed in this country, and the Church that loved the people most, and was prepared to suffer for the people, was the Church that would have the people, whatever Church it might be.

Barry-road Chapel, Peckham-rye, where Mr. Price Hughes at one time laboured, has another popular minister. It is only a few weeks since Rev. J. H. Hopkins, a Manchester man, commenced his duties at Barry-road, and he is already making for himself a name in the district, and whenever he preaches the congregations are always large.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John Baird has delivered a series of addresses on the spiritual life, in Moray Free Church, Edinburgh. Deep interest was awakened.

In connection with Camberwell congregation there are five cottage missions in operation. The office-bearers are nearly all earnest preachers of the Gospel.

At the annual meeting of the church at Somers Town, of which Rev. Z. B. Woffendale is the pastor, it was reported that there are now 916 members, of whom 180 were received into fellowship during the past year.

The Presbyterian Mission Chapel at Seacombe, Cheshire, has been distrained upon for £2 due for tithes. The Presbyterians, "for religious reasons," declined to pay, and the harmonium was seized by the bailiffs.

Rev. Hugh Stevenson, of Melrose, in a recent sermon referred to those young men who have "gone mad over cricket, and madder over football." Are these contests, he asks, which take place from Saturday to Saturday, fit preparation for the Sabbath day?

At the quarterly meeting of the congregations of South London a discussion arose on the subject of "The Church Services." Rev. A. N. Mackray said that if there were occasional interchanges of pulpits, the ministers would be less overworked and the congregations more united.

We much regret to learn that Dr. Somerville has been laid prostrate at Buda-Pest with severe cold and influenza, the winter in the regions where he has been so successfully labouring having been very severe. Much anxiety will be felt by the Doctor's numerous friends in this country concerning him.

Referring to Mr. W. S. Caine's attack on the Presbyterian Mission in Singapore, Dr. Donald Fraser says that the official statistics for 1886 show that the small congregation at Singapore provided £170 19s. 6d. for their local mission to the Chinese, and that the converts themselves proved the genuineness of their faith by giving more than six hundred dollars to the work, as well as by much voluntary effort.

Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser is delivering a series of striking discourses on Sunday mornings on "Our Lord's Relation to Collective Life," in his church at Marylebone. The first was entitled, "Christ and the Family," and was followed by "Christ and the Social Order," and "Christ and Industry." "Christ and Culture" will be the subject on Sunday next, the rest of the series being entitled, "Christ and the State" and "Christ and the Church."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Under the pastorate of Rev. Henry Simon the congregations at Hare-court Chapel, Canonbury, have greatly improved.

During the past year the Congregational Church at Upper Norwood raised £441 towards the London Missionary Society.

The young men of the Bible class in connection with the church at Vicar-lane, Coventry, have completed the erection of a village mission chapel at a cost of over £200.

Dr. Parker will resume his ministry in the City Temple next Sunday, February 12. The noonday service will be resumed the following Thursday, February 16, at twelve o'clock.

Miss Meachen, a member of the congregation at Chapel-in-the-Field, Norwich, sailed last week for Bombay to labour in connection with the London Missionary Society at Almora, Kumaon, North India.

Rev. C. Houghton, preaching at Holbeach on the social problem, "Unemployed Labour," as a remedy for existing distress, urged that steps must be taken to reinstate upon the land a large number of people, under conditions that would enable the land to sustain to its fullest extent human life.

Mr. Albert Spicer, who accompanied Dr. Dale to Australia, sailed from Sydney for England on January 23, and is expected home early in March. He has lately visited Samoa with a view to establish, if possible, satisfactory relations between the missionaries of the London Missionary Society and the German authorities, who are now supreme in the group.

Rev. Edward White, speaking at a meeting at South-place, Finsbury, said we are the slaves of writings, institutions, and ancient words and phrases; we require to have freedom to consult the Divine oracles and revelations. Such freedom would end in the diminution of the authority of priests and Parliament, but would increase individual freedom of men, and tend to the greater glory of the Christian religion.

A remarkable career has been closed by the death, at the age of fifty-eight, of Rev. Edward Hayton, for thirteen years pastor of the church at Blennerhasset, Aspatria, Cumberland. The son of a mariner at Flimby, with an education well-nigh limited to a knowledge of the alphabet, between eight and nine years of age he had to contribute to his own maintenance, and was apprenticed to a blacksmith. When blowing the bellows his habit was to have a book before him, and intervals allowed for rest were similarly utilised, until he had succeeded in acquiring a large amount of information. Before twenty he joined the Primitive Methodists, and became a local preacher. In 1875 he was invited to the pastorate of the church at Blennerhasset: here he laboured with much acceptance until his death.

SALVATION ARMY.

At Croydon, where a new barracks was lately opened, the work is progressing rapidly. Large numbers of conversions are reported.

In Rome the work goes steadily forward; the meetings are gradually getting to be more largely attended, and numbers of conversions are reported.

Work has been commenced at Highgate, N., under favourable circumstances. Large numbers attended the opening meetings, and several persons professed conversion.

At a town in New Zealand recently a magistrate passed a sentence of imprisonment on a Salvation Army officer, and after two days of unrest, himself went and paid the fine for his release.

Last week's War Cry contains an article in reply to the question, often asked, "Does the Salvation Army reach the masses?" and facts are given which, according to the writer, "are simply unanswerable."

Captain Elizabeth Fry writes from Ceylon that a strict Buddhist recently sent for two of the officers to talk to them about the "new religion." If they could convince him that their religion was better than his own he was willing to change.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

During this week a special evangelistic work is being carried on under the direction of the Presbytery over the whole town of Belfast.

A most blessed work of grace has been going on for a few weeks in Maralin, near Lurgan. Many young men have come to a knowledge of Christ, and openly confessed Him.

Successful evangelistic meetings have been conducted in Limerick by Rev. Thomas Greer, Methodist minister, of Rathkeale, who lately has had showers of blessing in his own circuit.

A four weeks' Gospel mission has been held near Irvinestown by Rev. G. W. Rea, Methodist minister. As the result, whole familes have been converted, backsliders have been restored, classes have been revived, many new church members have been enrolled, a Sabbath school has been started, and sixty persons have signed the pledge.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Allan, for forty-four years parish minister of Peterculter, N.B.—Rev. A. S. Patton, D.D., editor of the New York Baptist Weekly.—While on a short visit to this country on account of his health, Rev. D. Wareing, Baptist minister, of Belize, British Honduras, and formerly of Leigh, Lancashire.—Rev. John James, for nearly thirty years vicar of Long Sutton, Somerset.—Rev. J. F. Trimble, of Enniskillen, in the ninety-first year of his age, proprietor and editor of The Impartial Reporter, and a leading member of the Presbyterian Church.—Mr. Alex. Beckett, M.D., J.P., of Moneymore, an attached member of the Presbyterian Church, and a man of high Christian character.—At Chefoo, Mr. John Henry Sturman, for four years a successful missionary in China, in connection with the China Inland Mission.—Rev. A. M. Wilson, minister of Bathgate Evangelical Union Church, N.B.—Rev. D. Hardin, M.D., a medical man who practised at West Drayton, where for years he carried on a Free Church of England mission side by side with his medical work.—Mr. George Vine, at Bournemouth, Jan. 30. A devoted and faithful evangelist connected with the Open Brethren. For twenty months he suffered intensely from a most painful malady, but without a murmur. His last words were, "God is love."

HOME.

Bishop Dowden, of Edinburgh, laments the fact that "Bible-loving Scotland is not sobriety-loving Scotland."

The final re-union of the two sections of the Good Templars in England is expected to take place at Easter, at Sunderland.

Mr. George King, of Norwood, has recently been addressing good audiences in Kent, Surrey, and Suffolk on Gospel temperance.

The Secretary of the Sunday Closing Association asks voters to urge their representatives to support Mr. Stevenson's Bill in the ensuing session.

The British Women's Temperance Union recently entertained the showmen in Edinburgh, at Carrubber's Close Mission. Rev. J. Neil gave an address.

A plebiscite on the liquor traffic was taken recently at Middlesborough, and the papers returned showed an overwhelming majority on the temperance side.

It is stated that in connection with the Diocesan Temperance Sunday, January 29, about two hundred sermons were preached in 136 churches in Liverpool.

The Birmingham Daily Mail recently gave an account of the temperance movement in that town during the last fifty years, which was a striking record of progress.

In The League Journal a life abstainer urges that temperance owners of property place themselves in a false position when they let their houses for the liquor traffic.

About a million of Four and a Half per Cent Debentures were offered at £107 recently by the Bass (Brewing) Company, and, it is said, offers were received to the extent of £30,000,000!!

A social meeting and conference of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association was held recently at the Baptist Mission House, Rev. Dr. Burns in the chair. Rev. J. M. Henson gave a cheering account of his mission work.

The Pastors' College Temperance Society would send speakers to any meetings in and around London on payment of travelling expenses. Application should be made to Mr. P. A. Hudgell, Pastors' College, Newington Butts, S.E.

Alderman Berkley, Jarrow-on-Tyne, said, recently, that in spite of the prevalent distress in that town the consumption of liquor averaged £3 per head per annum for each person in the town, including children and teetotallers.

Under the auspices of the Vegetarian Society, Dr. B. W. Richardson lectured recently in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on "Foods for Man." The lecturer said "a properly cultivated vegetable diet" was as nourishing as an animal or an animal and vegetable system of feeding.

The Bishop of Liverpool, at a meeting to promote a home for inebriates in that city, attributes the deplorable increase of intemperance among women to grocers' licences. Archdeacon Lefroy said female drunkenness was not confined to the poorer class. Among the luxurious and influential there might not be excessive drinking of wine and spirits, as generally understood, but ladies who resorted to sal volatile took spirits in a form inaccessible to the poorer classes.

At the annual meeting of the Women's Temperance Association, in Dublin, Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., made the startling statement that, in Killarney, with about 3000 inhabitants, there are 78 public-houses; that in Mitchelstown, with 2500 inhabitants, there are 62 public-houses; that Castleisland, with over 1500 inhabitants, has 52 public-houses; and that in the village of Caherciveen there is not a shop of any description that does not sell drink. According to the report of the Registrar-General, Dublin is the most drunken city in the universe.

FOREIGN.

Good Health says a peculiar kind of "ginger drinking" is becoming prevalent in some American States. The liquor is said to be more intoxicating than whisky.

Dr. F. Srungmucht, a German chemist, has gone to California to make experiments as to the possible profitable use of the unfermented juice of grapes. Hitherto it has been difficult to utilise.

The Texas liquor interest, in revenge upon their prohibition ministers, propose to put a special tax on the clergy, and also to repeal the laws exempting the clergy from militia and jury duty and from working on the highway.

At Regina, North-West Territory, Dominion of Canada, a North-West Prohibitive Alliance has been formed with a view to make prohibition real. Delegates were present from various parts, and the prohibition law was declared to have done immense good.

Toronto, says The Christian Leader, has taken a decided backward step, the liquor party having carried their candidate for Mayor by a majority of nearly a thousand. The bye-laws for the further decrease of licenses were also defeated, so that the hopes of continuing the good work so successfully initiated by Mr. Howland have been for a time disappointed.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY are sending out three young men, who have in different ways shown a strong desire and aptitude for the work, to strengthen their staff of European colporteurs in the Malay peninsula, of which Singapore is the headquarters.

MR. RABINOWITZ, the energetic Jewish reformer, has recently had an embargo laid upon him by the Russian Government, whereby he will in a great measure be prevented from carrying out his Christian and missionary intentions towards his brethren under the dominion of the Czar in the south and west.

A LEADING JAPANESE STATESMAN, who only four years ago wrote in favour of the exclusion of Christianity from Japan, has now entirely changed his views, and is strenuously advocating the Christian faith. Some members of his family have become Christians, and two of his sons have been sent to America to study.

TONGA.—Some weeks since, writes a correspondent of The Leeds Mercury, I spoke of an improved state of things in Tonga. Latest reports represent religious persecution to be as bitter as ever; that the governing authority as represented by "Rev." Mr. Shirley Baker utterly ignores the pledges given to the Governor of Fiji, in his capacity of High Commissioner for the South Pacific. Representations are about to be made to the British Government to bring effective pressure to bear upon the king and his chief advisers.

WESTWARD HO!

200 Trained Lads (the First Party this year) will (D.V.) leave our various "Homes" for Canada on March 23. Of this number about 50 will be bound for our New Industrial Farm, Manitoba, the remainder for Ontario.

If only the needful Funds are forthcoming, at least 600 carefully trained youngsters will (D.V.) be placed out in the Dominion this year.

But the question of want of Funds is more serious this year than formerly, for we are very much poorer now, and dare not arrange for the departure of one boy or girl unless the whole sum needed is received or promised beforehand.

£8 10s. will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Boy to Ontario.

£51 will do the same for Six Boys; £102 for Twelve boys; £170 for Twenty Boys.

To send Youths (of 16 to 21 years of age) to Manitoba is more expensive, a railway journey of 2,000 miles further West having to be paid for; but the greater advantages of placing the big fellows from our Labour House there, rather than in Ontario, are well worth paying the higher rate to secure.

£11 will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Youth to Manitoba.

£66 will do the same for six Lads; £132 for twelve Lads; or £220 for twenty Lads.

Probably it lies in the power of many who will read this page to help me to divert the current of these young lives into healthful channels, and at the same time to relieve our overcrowded English Cities, by sending gifts in aid of our Emigration Fund.

Readers of The Christian do not now need to be assured that this is really God's work, or that the whole is being carried on, on strictly Christian lines; but I am sure they will rejoice to know that many of the dear fellows now on our list of Candidates for Emigration have been brought to a knowledge of the Truth, while under my care, and appear to be sincere followers of Christ. They will doubtless carry the Gospel with them to the New Country of their adoption, as very many of their predecessors have done.

Who then, by promising one or other of the above amounts, will strengthen my hands yet more to do God's work, and at the same time help to give a real start in life to some of these young fellows who have been rescued from utter destitution and evil surroundings, and carefully tested and trained for years or months past in our "Homes?"

Contributions to our Emigration Fund will be gratefully received and acknowledged by

Your faithful Fellow-labourer among the Waifs and Strays of the Streets,

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E. THOS. J. BARNARDO.

THE LATE

REV. ABRAHAM LAMB,

Evangelist and Pastor.

THE career of Rev. Abraham Lamb, who recently "fell on sleep" at Melton Mowbray, Leicestershire, was one of conspicuous success as an evangelist. A humble servant of Christ, "Father Abraham"—for so Mr. Lamb was fondly called by many who knew of his anxious solicitude for the highest good of others—led a distinctly unselfish life, and his loving work for his God and Saviour was greatly blessed.

Born at Colchester, Essex, in the year 1840, Abraham Lamb repaired to London at the age of nineteen, and was converted under the preaching of Richard Weaver in Mr. Spurgeon's old chapel in New Park-street. He submitted to baptism at the hands of Rev. Charles Stovell, and at once exerted himself in a quiet way for the enlightenment of those with whom he was brought into daily contact. At that time he was occupying a position of trust and responsibility in a business house, and his Christian bearing and straightforward conduct secured for him not only the esteem but the full confidence of his employer. The poor and friendless, the outcast and fallen, were greatly pitied by young Mr. Lamb, and the pity was such as impelled him, shortly after his conversion, to pursue diligent and loving labour in some of the lowest districts of the Metropolis. This work was steadily carried on for some time, until at length Mr. Lamb's sense of duty led him to turn his back on promising worldly prospects, in order to devote himself, heart, mind, and strength, to the work of a Christian evangelist.

Leaving London, Mr. Lamb first laboured among the soldiers and sailors of Portsmouth. His exertions in behalf of the souls in his care knew no limits: his sympathies went forth unrestrained, and, in return for love, he secured profound respect at the hands of all. This respect was often demonstrated, and once in a very peculiar manner. A transport vessel laden with men ordered to war was about to leave the harbour, when the entire body of troops saluted the evangelist! Mr. Lamb had been a blessing to the men, and in saying good-bye the men invoked blessings on his head.

Hammersmith was Mr. Lamb's next sphere of activity, and for a year he engaged in work of an arduous character there. Going thence to Stockton-on-Tees, Mr. Lamb found himself among colliers and ironworkers. He was not long in realising that, if his new field was one calling for heavy labour, it was also one affording full promise of fruit. Every Sunday evening the Star Theatre was filled to overflowing with men and women who were strangers to ordinary religious worship. Mr. Lamb was indeed a herald of mercy to the town: hundreds of men and women were raised from the miserable gutter of inebriety to the pleasant places of sober life; hundreds, moreover, were pointed to the Great Salvation, and, by the grace of God, lifted from the mire of sin, and set upon the Rock of Ages. On some occasions Mr. Lamb addressed thousands of people at one time at Stockton, and when he left the place for Leicester, where God had more work and blessing in store for him, it was to the unconcealed grief of multitudes. On the day of his departure the railway station and its approaches were so densely crowded by the classes to whom the evangelist had become endeared that the station-master was unable to despatch the trains. Mr. Lamb was, in the circumstances, prevailed upon to leave the station for a road beyond, and, as his friends followed him, the station premises were cleared, and traffic allowed to proceed. As, however, the best of friends must part, so he must perforce leave his people. At a given signal he was admitted to the railway station by a private door, and hurried into a carriage; and he was on his way south before those whom he loved and by whom he was loved had come to realise what had happened.

At Leicester Mr. Lamb's work had similar features, and its results were of a like kind. There was incessant toil for Christ, but it was owned of God and much blessed. Then there was loving compassion for men, and this was recognised and returned by respectful affection. But in Leicester the work was spread over a period of ten years, and was, if possible, in every other sense "more abundant" than previously. The first eight months were spent in connection with the Christian Mission, but when that organisation changed its character and became the Salvation Army, Mr. Lamb left it, as he disapproved of the newer methods. He was, however, induced to remain in the town as superintendent of the Evangelistic Mission. The Sunday evening services were held in the Temperance Hall. At first the meetings were very small, but as time went on they were so large that standing-room could not always be made for the people who sought admission; and, on the night of the religious census a few years ago, Mr. Lamb's congregation outnumbered by about three hundred any other in the town. The week evening services were held successively in the Friends' Old Meeting House (Talbot-lane), York-street Mission Room, and the old wooden Workman's Hall (Halford-street), until at last a substantial building, also known as the Workman's Hall, was erected in Bread-street.

Mr. Lamb's visits to the homes of the Leicester poor, his distribution of soup—which he made twice a week during the winter months—his persistent following of individual men and women who had fallen under the curse of strong drink, until he had reclaimed them, his holding fifteen services almost every week for years, and his constant labours in the surrounding villages, won for him the confidence and help of all classes. Such constant work would have shortened the life of many a stronger man, and it is not surprising that in this case a grand and noble life has been, humanly speaking, cut short by excessive application to anxious labour.

In the Master's service Mr. Lamb knew no fear. As the crowds of giddy pleasure-seekers made their way to the Leicester racecourse, he would stand and display a board bearing words of rebuke and warning against sin and its consequences. At other times when timidity would deter ordinary men, he would "cry aloud, and spare not." Amid the din of a fair he would preach the Gospel, and although sometimes his words of love and peace commingled strangely with the savage shouts of competing showmen, he often learned afterwards that his testimony for God on such occasions was blessed to some who heard his voice. One of his friends wrote just after his decease:—

> During the winter he was always foremost in making soup for the poor, and under such difficulties that we have heard him say he was roasted in front while the water dripped and formed icicles on his coat-tails. Our fallen sisters were objects of his deepest pity and sympathy. Several midnight meetings and suppers were held, where some, we trust, were rescued for happier days. He started a Drunkard's Rescue Society, from which a band of devoted men would go out on a Saturday evening to watch for those under the influence of drink. They would take them home, and, after visiting them for some time, persuade them to sign the pledge, and induce them to attend the services. He started the tramps' Christmas breakfast, and had preached in every court in Leicester.

About three years ago Mr. Lamb lost his only son; this, combined with the wear and tear of a life of constant work, greatly impaired his health. Everything was tried, change of scene and perfect rest, and all that human skill could do to alleviate his malady was done. At length the doctors said he must leave the heavy work of Leicester, and seek a smaller charge. After a very severe mental struggle, Mr. Lamb severed his connection with Leicester, and though he had many invitations to accept pastorates in other and larger towns, he selected Melton as his future place of residence. When Mr. Lamb left Leicester the farewell service was a most imposing and touching one. The Workman's Hall was crowded with rescued men and women and Christian workers, and he and his family were loaded with tokens of love and esteem.

Though during the year which elapsed from his acceptance of the pastorate of the Melton Baptist Chapel until his death, Mr. Lamb was in poor health, he worked hard, and won the sincere regard of the church and congregation. Moreover, his labours were not confined to the members of his own fold; indeed, he went into houses which some religious workers would never think of entering. Having suffered much from a painful malady during the last few weeks of his pilgrimage, he breathed his last with smiling countenance on January 18 last, in the 48th year of his age, looking with confidence unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith. His last words were, "The grave has no terror for me. All is peace, perfect peace."

Of Mr. Lamb and his work in Melton, a Leicester newspaper said just after his death:—

> His heart beat with a warm and earnest love for the poor, the fallen, the outcast everywhere. No house was too wretched for him to enter, no human being was so far fallen, or so sinful, that he could not take by the hand and endeavour to uplift to a higher and nobler life. There were corners and crannies, in out-of-the-way places, even in Melton, known to few save the relieving officer. or the nuisance inspector, but with which Mr. Lamb had become well acquainted; and in these dreary, godless homes, his loving voice has uttered words of hope, of salvation, and of prayer, where hitherto the name of God was never reverently used, and the Gospel of Christ had never been heard.

The same paper further said:—

> During the whole of Mr. Lamb's career he has never received a large stipend. He has had a numerous family, most of whom have passed away. He was generous to a fault, and we are informed that his widow, his mother, ninety-three years of age, whom Mr. Lamb regarded with great affection and whom he maintained for many years, and his daughter, are left comparatively destitute: but it is satisfactory to know that steps are being taken to make provision for the bereaved.

Devout men in many towns have mourned the loss of Abraham Lamb as a real friend. The mourning was obvious on the Saturday following his death, for then it was that his remains were interred in Leicester Cemetery. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. F. Brotherton Meyer, now of Regent's Park Chapel, who, in speaking of the mournful character of the proceedings, remarked that he little thought that one of his last public services in Leicester would be such a service as that. He had the pleasure of being the first minister to welcome the deceased when he entered the town, and it was nearly his last act in Leicester to see him to the grave.

The story of the life of Abraham Lamb is, in brief, a record of whole-hearted work for Christ. As "the memory of the just is blessed," so may his faithfulness, as exhibited in this sketch, be sanctified to the praise of the name of the Lord whom he so lovingly served.

PRAYER ANSWERED IN FRANCE.

The following is an extract from a letter of the late Mr. Duncan Matheson, dated St. Servan, France, May 27, 1867:—

"I am alone in this strange land, unknown to anyone, and knowing no one. Poor, poor France! You can have no idea of the perfect despotism that reigns. No happy smile seems to light up the people's countenances. There is a restlessness and a yearning after something—they know not what they want. Alas, alas! no Gospel is preached, no salvation made known, and, as far as can be seen, no souls saved. I often almost weep, as I see the masses here, rushing on to eternity, not knowing that 'God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son.'

"God will not forget the prayers of many a martyred Huguenot. The soil of France was drenched with their blood. The cry, 'How long, Lord, how long?' has gone up from those 'beneath the altar.' Many a time on entering the churches here, and seeing the mummery on every side, have I prayed, 'Lord, send forth Thy light and Thy truth,' and often have I blessed God that Scotland had a Knox, a Cameron, a Cargill."

It was impossible that this earnest prayer of faith should not come down in blessing. Note how it has pleased God to use Scotch Christians as his instruments in bringing about the answer. Twelve years later an old Scotch nurse suggested to her Scotch mistress to invite Rev. A. N. Somerville, D.D., of Glasgow (who was then preaching in Paris), to come to St. Servan. The matter was mentioned to the English chaplain and the Wesleyan minister and at their invitation Dr. Somerville came.

For over a fortnight he preached the Gospel by interpretation to the poor French, who crowded to the meetings. The mission thus planted has taken root and grown—flourished would be too much to say, for the soil is hard, the opposition and persecution great. A day-school, as well as Sunday-school, was established, and a plot of ground bought (memorable as the landing-place of Louis XIV. when on his way to sign the Edict of Nantes), on which an iron hall was erected, where the Gospel is preached, and other evangelistic work carried on. Many thousands of tracts, Gospels, New Testaments and Bibles have been distributed, not only in the town, but carried by the market people to all the villages around. Thus the seed has been widely sown—has sprung up, too, and borne fruit to the glory of his name who gives the increase. Some have been gathered in, witnessing a good confession on their death-bed, and some have been forced to leave the place to seek their living elsewhere: so thinning the visible results here—their names known and registered above. If the interest of any Scotch or other Christians should be awakened in this work, further information will be gladly given by the writer,

(Mrs.) A. D. Fraser.

La Corbinière, St. Servan, France.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.—The Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain in its last report gives interesting particulars of the spread of light and liberty in some of the provinces of the Spanish Peninsula. The report contains the following paragraph:—"It is cause for deep thankfulness to our heavenly Father that, during the twenty years through which this little Association has been working for souls in Spain, we have never been allowed to want money. During a considerable part of the time subscriptions have not even been applied for, but have come in unsolicited. In this we have been greatly aided by our principal agents, Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong, who have not only supported themselves, but have also assisted others. The last three years have shown a change in this respect. At the end of 1884 there was a balance due to the Liverpool treasurer, and 1887 leaves both treasurers considerably behind." The names and addresses of the treasurers are, Mr. J. B. Hunter (of J. Rew & Co.), Brown's-buildings, Liverpool; Mr. William Harvey, Headingley, Leeds.

THE DOWN-GRADE ENGINE.

Pæans are being sung over the decease of Calvinism. And well enough it is that some ideas which have passed under that name should be no more remembered. But the foundation truth of Calvinism, the Sovereignty of God, cannot be forgotten without deadliest ruin to the souls of men.

It is true that false and dishonouring conceptions were formed in tyrannous times, and the Sovereignty of God was represented as a tyranny; like that of the despots of the earth. But, in spite of men's misconceptions, the truth abides, and though God is a Despot, his rule is the despotism of love and wisdom as the directors of his power. The souls under the altar cry, "How long, O Despot, holy and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" The bitter experience of human rule has knit the ideas of selfishness and cruelty to absolute power, and justified the words of Sheridan concerning "that which always did and always must corrupt and degrade the human heart, despotic power." But the despotism of God is the despotism of everlasting love, which sacrifices itself for the object of its love. And as human tyranny has reddened the meaning of the word "despotism," to the colour of blood, so did it, especially in earlier days, render the word "sovereignty" a synonym for arbitrary rule.

But now human sovereignty is at a discount. The royal prerogative has been so selfishly, wilfully, and tyrannously used, that God who gave it has permitted it to decline from gold to silver, brass, iron, clay, so that in these days of popular government the respect for sovereignty has become extinct, and the old ideas concerning it are as impossible now, as the modern gospel of the universal Fatherhood was impossible in the days of the Divine right of kings to do their own self-will. The consequence has been that this generation has substituted benevolence for righteousness, and the Fatherhood of God for the Sovereignty of God.

But though men, and men's ideas, change, God and his Gospel change not. We must go back to the Scriptures of truth for an answer to our inquiry, Is Sovereignty or Fatherhood the relation of God to fallen and rebellious men? The question is no sooner asked than answered. When God's voice had been silent for four hundred years, John the Baptist, says Matthew, came preaching, "Repent ye: for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand" (iii. 2). And after John was put in prison, Mark records that "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God," in other words, the good tidings of the Sovereignty of God (i. 14). Luke carries on the testimony, saying that Jesus "called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. And He sent them to preach the Kingdom of God." And afterward appointed other seventy also, and bade them heal the sick, and say, "The Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you" (ix. 1, 2; x. 1, 9). And, leaving the synoptic Gospels, we learn from John that the first word of Jesus to the ruler of the Jews who came to Him by night was, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God" (iii. 3).

The first chapter of the Acts tells us that the last question of the disciples to the ascending Christ was, "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" and the book abruptly closes with Paul, in the metropolis of the world-kingdom, "preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him" (i. 6, xxviii. 31).

The Kingdom of God, whether latent or expressed, is a fundamental element in all the Epistles, and in the Revelation it shines out like the sun in the firmament.

Sin, judgment, righteousness, law, grace, propitiation, expiation, forgiveness, justification, are all governmental rather than parental terms. They do not belong to Fatherhood, but to Sovereignty; and they prove, if further proof were needed, that the Gospel of God is first the Gospel of the Kingdom, and after that, of Fatherhood; that we must be willing subjects before we can be acknowledged sons; that only to those who receive the Word of God is given authority to become the sons of God; that we must obey God as our Sovereign before we can enjoy Him as our Father; and that the sonship, to which the Spirit of truth bears witness with our spirit, is in union with the risen Christ, who suffered on account of our sins, and rose again on account of our justification.

The substitution of the so-called Gospel of Fatherhood for the Gospel of the Kingdom is the special fundamental error of the present time. Even in the parable which is insisted on as the basis of this modern gospel which is not the Gospel, the prodigal, when he has come to himself, acknowledges his sin against heaven, as well as against his father, and confesses that he has forfeited his right to sonship. This parable is one of five illustrations in one discourse, beginning with grace to publicans and sinners, and closing with the exposure of unrighteous stewards and judgment on luxurious Pharisees. A discourse in perfect consistency with the Gospel of the Kingdom, but not with the so-called Gospel of Fatherhood.

This spurious gospel is the engine which moves the train of doctrine along the down-grade. For it is righteousness and sovereignty, not benevolence and fatherhood, that require expiation of sin; and so the doctrine of the Atonement is explained away. The Fatherhood of God implies that all men, as his children, are partakers of the Divine nature, and as the depravity of human nature is inconsistent with this, that doctrine must be given up; and such statements as "The carnal mind is enmity against God," and "Ye must be born again," if not denied, are not affirmed, except as figures of speech, not as essential and foundation truths.

And if all men are his children, how should the all-loving Father send them away into everlasting punishment? How shall He not in his mercy save them all? Or, if sin have indeed brought death into the world, and there is only life in Christ, then, though it be so terrible, the Father will rather annihilate them than let them suffer.

And if it be difficult to reconcile all this with express statements of the Scriptures, then the theory of partial inspiration comes to our aid, and the Bible (it is said) contains, indeed, the Word of God, but is not itself, from first to last, given by inspiration of God, through holy men as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

And as words are taken away from the Book, so other things are added, and "the larger hope," and "probation after death," are opiates for those who have been awakened by its stern testimonies of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, and by the Spirit's conviction of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment.

Thus this idea of the Universal Fatherhood of God, as it is conceived and taught by men who claim to be evangelical, draws after it, one by one, a whole train of consequences which are not the truth of God.

We do not wish to speak disrespectfully or harshly of those who have committed themselves to these views. Let it be candidly conceded that as "the thoughts of men are widened by the process of the suns," so the minds of Christians are influenced by the spirit of the age; and that in this democratic period the tendency to discredit sovereignty is very strong, and they have yielded to it. God grant that they may retrace their steps. For let us never forget that only through righteousness can grace reign unto eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord. "Wherefore we receiving a Kingdom which cannot be moved, let us hold fast grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire." M.

WORK AMONG SAILORS.

Perhaps there is no port in the world where the highest needs of seamen are more assiduously looked after than at Glasgow. As far back as 1822 the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society was instituted, and during last year its various agencies were worked to better purpose than ever before. The record of the sixty-fifth year's work of the Society says:—

> Our first and foremost aim in all the work is to try to lead the sailors to Jesus as their own Saviour, for we feel that unless they know Him, whom to know is life eternal, there can be no lasting blessing. The eight agents employed by the Society have been fully occupied from day to day, in the various duties devolving upon them, such as conveying the sad news of the death of a sailor to his widow or family; again pointing an anxious soul to the Saviour; pleading with a drunken sailor to give up his evil ways and companions and do what is right; visiting sick ones in the hospital; writing for sailors who cannot do so themselves to their friends; conducting the usual services; endeavouring to find a ship for some who are needing help; clothing others who are in distress; and in a hundred other ways trying to befriend the sailor while he is in port. In addition, the families of seamen are visited when the husband or father is at sea, and the widows and orphans are looked after. Such work, along with the visitation of ships and boarding-houses, absorbs a great deal of time, and there is much we would like to see accomplished, but it cannot be overtaken with the present staff. We are much indebted to a large band of voluntary workers, who give great assistance both at the Institute and Chapel and Bethel in conducting the various services, and also in the house-to-house visitation of seamen's families, as without their aid the work accomplished would be very much less.

The Society's work is on a large scale, and all the auxiliary adjuncts seem to be in hearty operation. Last year was one of very great blessing, no fewer than 822 persons having professed to give themselves to the Saviour at the various meetings. Labour among the foreign sailors has also been fruitful of good results, many of the men having been converted, and returned to their own countries with tidings of salvation. The new Seamen's Institute, erected at a cost of £7700, has been paid for, with the exception of £796, without any special solicitation, and at the annual meeting, held a few days ago, three gentlemen promised £100 each, on condition that the remaining £496, to clear the building of debt, was contributed at once. Mr. Richard H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow, is the hon. secretary and treasurer of the Society.

THE SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY, an undenominational organisation formed in aid of the unemployed or underpaid in Great Britain, has issued its report for 1887. The objects of the Society are:—(1) To afford reliable information regarding the different colonies; (2) to make grants to suitable and needy applicants; and (3) to procure employment for emigrants sent out under its auspices. Centres of correspondence have been established from Quebec to Vancouver, and work has been found for every emigrant of full age sent out by the Society. The office of the Society is at 50, Fleet-lane, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

By Rev. F. BROTHERTON MEYER, B.A.

Minister of Regent's Park Chapel.

VIII.—OUR WORK FOR CHRIST.

The Christian life is sure to manifest itself in holy activity; as certainly as the life of a vegetable or plant manifests itself in flower and fruit. It is perfectly true to speak of such activities as work; "to every man his work." But to describe them as fruit, brings out another shade of meaning, and indicates our entire dependence for all successful work, on our living connection with our glorious Lord.

The Lord Jesus is Himself the great Worker. He came to finish the work which his Father gave Him to do. St. Mark fitly describes Him during his earthly career, as the swift and incessant worker, whose days were crowded with incident from early dawn far on into the night. "I must work the works of Him that sent Me, while it is day." And it is a great mistake to suppose that his work has ceased. The Gospels tell us only of what He began to do and teach. But the Book of the Acts of the Apostles, which might be better called the Book of the Acts of the living and ascended Lord, takes up the wondrous story, and tells us of what He continued to do and teach, after He had passed through the heavens to the right hand of God. He is still the great Worker throughout all the ages, both in the universe, and in the Church. And the sacred record, already mentioned, closes abruptly with great fitness, because the wondrous story of the Acts of the Lord did not finish when Paul had reached his hired house. It runs on throughout the centuries, and is still being written by angel fingers in the chronicles of eternity.

But is it not true that the ascended Lord requires organs and instruments for the expression and working out of his mighty thoughts and purposes? He is the Head of the body, the Church: and He needs members, as the medium through which He may convey his purposes of grace and power towards the world. As of old He passed the blessings that throbbed in his heart through the hands, and lips, and presence of his mortal body; so now He must employ his own beloved ones, to be his hands, his lips, his feet, his body, by which men may receive healing virtue. St. Paul was therefore consistent with the deepest truth, when "he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles, by his ministry." And we shall work effectively when we understand that we are not required to originate or execute work for Christ, so much as to work out his schemes, in his own strength.

Who, amongst the readers of these lines, does not long to be as useful as possible in this brief life, to fulfil all the possibilities of usefulness, and to apprehend that for which Christ has apprehended him? But this can never be until all the powers of the nature, which Christ has redeemed, are placed absolutely at his disposal, with this prayer, "Do with me, in me, to me, by me, as Thou wilt; only make as much of me as can be made, on this side of the gates of pearl. Work out thine own ideal. Fulfil in me all the good pleasure of thy will. Perfect that which concerneth me."

The maker of the organ can best develop the sweet and mighty tones which sleep within its compass. The inventor of the ingenious machine can best unfold its varied appliances. And surely it stands to reason that He who knows what is in us can best call forth our faculties, and use them, and manipulate them for his glory, and to our joy. Oh, what could not the Lord Jesus do by us, if only we were wholly yielded to Him!

Let us note a few hints which may be of assistance to Christian workers.

(1) Work from Pure Motives.—Legends tell that when the Emperor Justinian had built the Byzantine Church with a view to his own aggrandisement and glory, on the day of dedication, he looked in vain for his own name on the memorial stone. Angel hands had obliterated it, and substituted for it that of the widow, Euphrasia, whose only merit was, that out of pure devotion she had strown a little straw in front of the beasts that drew the heavily laden trucks of marble from the quarry to the sacred pile. His motive was so ignoble that heaven ignored his gift. Hers was so pure and lovely that she received credit for the whole.

Alas! how much of our work vanishes, without note in heaven, because it springs from no motive that can pass muster there. Earth rings with its fame, and therein we find our only and sufficient recompense; but the tidings never travel further. Whilst other deeds, which arrest no notice here, stir all heaven with interest and wonder, because of the mighty motives that gave them birth.

With what shame do many of us review the ignoble and worthless motives by which we have been prompted. To gain a livelihood; to win a name; to excite applause; to outvie some neighbour; to win a victory; to accomplish a difficult and almost impossible task; these have inspired us in many deeds of Christian service, which have received the commendation of those who judge by appearance, and not by heart. How could our God be pleased with us, or accept our service! Our most splendid deeds have been irreparably spoilt by the meanness of the motives that prompted them.

Our motives must be pure. The root will affect all the fruit. The stream cannot rise higher than its source. We must get rid of the constant thought of self. We must become oblivious to the praise or blame of man. We must let the sun of Divine love burn out the fires of selfish ambition and personal aims. We must bring our weak and weary hearts to the Heart-physician, asking Him to cleanse them by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit, disentwining the clinging evil of self, and filling us with his own sweet, disingenuous, and perfect love. May our hearts burn with the pure flame of devotion that trembles in the hearts of seraphs! This our cry, in life and death: "Glory to God in the Highest!"

(2) Work on God's Plan.—One of the most suggestive texts in the Bible, far-reaching in its many applications, is that in which God says to Moses, "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee on the Mount." Not a stake, or a curtain, or an atom of fragrant spice was left to the genius of the artificer, or the fancy of the lawgiver. All was unfolded to Moses in elaborate detail; and all he had to do was to produce that plan in careful and exact obedience, until at last it stood complete before the wondering host of Israel. And God provided the material in abundance, out of which that plan was to be elaborated. If we will execute his plans, we need have no anxiety about the stuff; for that He will make Himself responsible.

Does not this touch the secret of much of our failure? We reason thus: this seems a feasible thing; it promises well; other men are doing it; success seems within grasp, and would be very sweet; I shall certainly go in for it. We do not stay to ask whether it is one of those good works which God has before prepared for us to walk in. We do not seek to know, by prayer and waiting, whether it is in God's plan for us. We do not humbly wait to be taught if God wants our help in this especial direction. And it is only when we have plunged deeply into our course, and have met with all manner of discouragement, that we begin to question whether we should have adopted it at all. Then we run to ask God to extricate us, to help us out, and to forgive us for having built, and launched, and chartered our ships, without asking Him if we were acting in accordance with his will.

The fact is, we start an enterprise, and presently ask God to help us, instead of first asking what He was doing, and whether we could help Him.

Do not think that this mode of life will lead to listless dreaming. None are so energetic, so swift, so mighty in their holy activities as those who know that they are on God's lines; doing their little bit in the mighty scheme of tesselated pavement; sure that his accomplished plan will amply justify them, and casting all responsibilities on his perfect wisdom.

Do not run hither and thither, asking for work. How can anyone tell you what the Master wants you to do? We can but guess at the best. Go straight to the Lord Jesus for yourselves. Tell Him you cannot bear to be shut out of his glorious fellowship. Entreat Him to indicate your place. And never rest content until, like Peter, you turn from the vision to the task, and, in the knock of the far-travelled messengers, you are summoned to the work which needs you.

(3) Work as those Freshly Cleansed.—The priests must wash in the laver before they did the service of the Sanctuary. They must be clean who bear the vessels of the Lord. A man must purge himself from iniquity, if he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared for every good work (2 Tim. ii. 21).

If, in haste, we would give a draught of refreshing water to a traveller, we take from our shelf the first vessel which is clean. We will pass over the elegant and richly chased cup for the earthenware mug, if the latter has a cleanliness, which the former lacks. And our Lord Jesus will gladly use us for his service, though we be of but common ware, if only we are clean and ready for use.

In our hospitals, the instruments used in operations are constantly kept in carbolic acid, that they may not carry the slightest contagion to the open wound, and we cannot touch the open and festering wounds which sin has caused without injury to ourselves and others, unless we are ever in the flow of the blood and water of which St. John speaks.

(4) Work in God's Strength.—No man is sent to the warfare on his own charges, and yet many Christians argue as if that were one of heaven's standing orders. None, however, are ever called to a work which God does not know is within the limits of the strength which He has given, or which He is ready to give, to the opened, upturned heart. He does not want our strength, it is often a hindrance to Him, because we are so apt to rely on it, to the exclusion of Himself. He wants our weakness, our infirmities, our nothingness, "that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." So far from your consciousness of powerlessness being a barrier to your efficient work, it will be one of the strongest elements in your success, if only you are driven to lay hold on his strength, and be at peace. "My grace is sufficient for thee, my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly, therefore, will I glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

When asking Christians to undertake certain branches of Christian work, one is so often met with the excuse, "I cannot do it. I am not fitted for it. I have no power to speak." Such have much need to get back to the desert and learn the significant lesson of the rod which Moses held in his hand. He was questioning his sufficiency to take up the work which was being thrust on him; but he learnt that, if only a rod is cast down before God, it becomes endowed with new powers; it can do and be what would be impossible by nature; and through the power of God it may become invested with such might as to carve a way through the waves, roll back the hosts of Amalek, and bring water from the flinty rock. Why should not we be as that rod in the hands of Christ? Without Him we cannot be other than broken reeds; but in and with Him we become pillars in the temple, from which we shall go no more out. "I can do all things in Him which strengtheneth me." And there is no way so good of getting God's strength as being diligent students of his precious Word. This is the medium of conveying strength to our inmost souls, as the grain conveys the strength of the earth to the nutriment of our natural life. Read your Bibles, Christian workers, if you would be strong. And it also stands to reason that the Holy Ghost is much more likely to use marvellously the man whose mind is steeped and saturated with the thoughts and phraseology of Scripture, which has been indited by Him as the medium of eternal truth to human hearts.

(5) WORK IS BELIEVING EXPECTANCY.—How often and how truly it has been said that God never uses a discouraged man. No great measure of success will ever come to him who does not believe in it, and expect it. In this, as in all other spiritual work, we are governed by one unchanging law: According to your faith be it done unto you.

And why should we not go forth with the elastic tread of those who know that they shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing with them their sheaves? We go on God's errands; we are provided with his seed; we are directed by his unerring wisdom to our plot in the field; we are sure of his co-operation in giving sun and shower, dew and rain. We may have to wait, as all true husbandmen must; but there can be no doubt as to the ultimate issue.

Oh, what a glorious work is ours! To give effect to the yearnings of Divine love. To be the organs and instruments of the redemptive purpose of God. To be associated with Christ in the salvation of the lost. To pluck men as brands from the burning, and to hold them aloft as torches for the progress of the King. To hasten the glad day of his second coming. To be his heralds and ambassadors. These were enough to lure an archangel from his seat. Well is it to have been summoned to do it; and a thousand times better to know that it is to be the employment of eternal ages, of which it is written, "His servants shall serve Him."

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

THE Sheltering Homes of Liverpool, for orphan, fatherless, and destitute children, continue to do a good and useful work. Children are thereby trained in industrial pursuits, and provided with an elementary education; and then homes are found for them in Canada. The Home doors are open every day, and without delay, committees, or voting papers, any boy or girl of the ages specified (girls from four to fourteen, boys from ten to fourteen) may be admitted. The poor child's needy condition is the one plea upon which it gets at once taken into a Sheltering Home.

At the annual meeting, held recently, it was stated that during the fourteen years the Homes had been open, each year two, and sometimes three, bands of destitute, neglected children had been trained, outfitted, and taken to Canada, where they had received a warm welcome. The boys had been hired as "helps" on the farms, and the elder girls had been engaged for domestic service. The little ones of both sexes had been adopted, brought up, and educated by the good people of the Dominion. Two hundred boys and girls were admitted yearly for training and teaching previous to emigration, and during last year 136 were placed in homes in Canada. Mr. Stephen Williamson, M.P., is chairman of the Homes, which are situate in Sugnall-street and Byrom-street, Liverpool.

THE SEAMEN'S REST, MARSEILLES, is an institution which has highly commended itself to prominent Christian workers. It exists for sailors of all nations, and has a wide sphere of usefulness. Last year the donations showed a fall in amount, and by alterations to the Home the debt with which the year began was increased.

THE SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.—On Tuesday next, the 21st inst., this organisation enters upon the fiftieth year of its national existance. In the January issue of The Shipwrecked Mariner (6d. quarterly) there is a sketch of the rise and progress of the Society. This interesting periodical is published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, 26, Paternoster-square, E.C.

REVIVAL INCIDENTS.—3.

LITTLE JIM was the child of a professedly godly family. From babyhood he had been taken to chapel and Sunday-school, and taught to say his prayers and read the Bible. As the youngest child he was, unfortunately, very early in life allowed to have his own way, more or less, and to follow the bent of his inclinations. Being of a fierce, passionate nature, the natural consequences followed—constant trouble and disgrace.

> We are not worst at once; the course of evil
> Begins so slowly, and from such slight source.

His parents were not much alarmed. "Boys will be boys," they said, and fervently did they hope that with the coming years he would improve. By bitter experience they learned that unregenerate children do not get better, but worse; resembling the apparently sound apple with its rotten core, that only requires keeping long enough to become wholly corrupt.

The troublesome boy became the reckless youth. Although started in life with a good business, he spent his evenings in the company of gamblers and men of doubtful character. Sin seemed very pleasant to him in those days, for he was among that unhappy crowd whom the god of this world hath blinded, and he did not and would not believe that following close upon the track of a so-called gay life was poison of the deadliest kind and death eternal. He was still a mere youth, when ruin dogged his footsteps. A precious mother pleaded, a stern father rebuked, a loving sister held out an inviting hand to lead him in a more virtuous path; but no—

> He flew to drink, for he was desperate.

That was his refuge—refuge of despair.

His business soon went into the publican's till, and he felt it were better for him that he had never been born. But darker days were yet in store, for they that have "sown the wind" shall "reap the whirlwind." He committed a crime, was dragged to the police-station, and next day taken before the magistrates. A solicitor whom his friends had engaged defended him, but the case was proved, and all the skill of the attorney could not avert the sentence of a short term of imprisonment. Jim's mother was taken out of the court more dead than alive, while he was thrust inside of a prison cell, to learn by bitter experience that "the way of the transgressor is hard."

How many vows did he make while sighing and sick for liberty and home! But they were all made in his own strength, and consequently broken. I remember, as though it were but yesterday, the morning on which he was liberated; the indescribable scene, as he was again locked in a loving mother's embrace, the kiss of forgiveness, the offer to place him with an uncle in a large way of business in the country, where he would be unknown, would not be surrounded by so many temptations, and, above all, would be free from his old companions. He went, but in a few weeks he was back again, and became far worse than ever he had been before.

At last the day came when, for the sake of his family, he had to leave home, and he left it a poor shattered wreck. With the exception of his mother, everyone said, "The sooner he was dead the better." He came to London, and for fourteen weeks lived a life of wild dissipation. His mother sent him money to purchase the daily necessaries of life. He received it on Saturday mornings, but it was all spent in drink before the day closed. Not satisfied with this, he parted with all his available chattels, so that Christmas, 1879, found him without sufficient clothes to keep his shivering limbs warm. In describing those terrible days I have heard him say, "No one would look at me, or if they did it was with contempt and disgust."

What agony of soul he was in during those days! The devil said, "Drown yourself," and he made the attempt; but as he looked into the Paddington Canal he thought he could see his mother's care-worn face, and could hear her say with trembling voice, "O Lord, take care of Jim!" There he stood, halting between two opinions, envying the very carcases of dogs as they floated by, and wishing he had died years ago. Battling with the powers of darkness, he at last started off, hardly knowing where to fly. The church bells were ringing a merry peal for Christmas. To him it seemed like God laughing at his calamity. While hurrying along he was attracted by a bill announcing a "love-feast" that night. Glad to get shelter from the cold, he went in. The building, like the service, was exceedingly simple and plain. The meeting opened with the singing of

> I heard the voice of Jesus say,
> "Come unto Me and rest."

Then several working men prayed, and there followed another hymn, which had a most startling effect on poor Jim:—

> In evil long I took delight,
> Unawed by shame or fear,
> Till a new object met my sight,
> And stopped my wild career.
> I saw One hanging on a tree
> In agonies and blood,
> Who fixed his dying eyes on me,
> As near the cross I stood.
>
> Sure never till my latest breath
> Can I forget that look:
> It seemed to charge me with his death,
> Though not a word He spoke.
>
> My conscience felt and owned my guilt,
> And plunged me in despair,
> I saw my sins his blood had spilt,
> And helped to nail Him there.
>
> A second look He gave, which said,
> "I freely all forgive;
> My blood is for thy ransom paid,
> I die that thou may'st live."

Though he tried hard he could not restrain his tears. All the dark and damning sins of the past came up before him like so many unholy ghosts. Some half-dozen working men now spoke as to what religion had done for them. But the address that affected him most was that of a young man who said he had lately taken the hand of his dying mother, and promised to meet her in heaven. He also told how she used to pray with him, and how just before her feet touched the cold river of death, she said, "God's promise is true; I feel Him so precious. Oh, Johnnie, my lad, be faithful, and meet your mother in heaven." Jim felt that if ever he was to be saved it must be that night; but he seemed to himself too bad, and although he tried, he could not pray. During the prayer-meeting William Stevens, who has now gone to his rest, came and put his kindly hand on Jim's shoulder, and tenderly said, "My lad, Jesus died for you." Jim had heard that from childhood, but never as he heard it that night. After a long struggle he was enabled to say—

> I lay my sins on Jesus,
> The spotless Lamb of God,
> Who bore them all, and frees us
> From the accursed load.
